"We were returning from the country, when, near the Brighton House, our carriage was stopped, and we were politely asked if we were journeying to the city, and, if so, whether we would take a poor heart-broken stranger to town? We consented; and, amid choking sobs and tearful eyes, the unfortunate being from the banks of her loved Rhine, told us the following touching story: She lived in the city, she said, and that morning had been called to the country to soothe and smooth the bed of her dying father, who was struck down with the cholera. She reached the fatal house just in time to receive his blessing. A few weeks before this unhappy event, she had followed her fond mother to her narrow home; and now that her parental protector was thus suddenly called hence, she was left alone—her brothers and sisters all having died—to struggle in this unfriendly world. She was an object of the deepest interest to us, as she tearfully related the simple but truthful story of her misfortunes."

A CENTENARIAN JOKER.

In a letter from Cape Cod, Mr. N. P. Willis gives the following account of an old gentleman, whose practical philosophy would outweigh all the fine spun speculations of the Stoics and the Epicureans:—

I was sorry to hear, after we left Yarmouth, that I had missed seeing a centenarian of that place, who is certainly a curiosity. He is now a hundred and nine years of age, and, in his whole life, was never known to be out of temper. He married young, and his wife died about twenty years ago, having been, all her life, a singularly irritable woman! He did good service in the revolution, and has been pressed, at various times, to apply for the pension to which he is entitled. He refuses always on the ground, that, as he served the time he agreed to, and received the pay they agreed to give him, the Government owes him nothing. His children, living in the town, are well off, and wish him to end his days with them; but he prefers his lodging in the Poor House, declaring that he "can't bear to think of being a trouble to anybody," and fairly earns his board by "doing chores" about the ground and kitchen. He is still of a most playful turn of mind. A fellow pensioner of the Poor House, who is eighty years old, was sitting with him, but a few days since, upon a wooden bench in the yard—the skirts of his broad-skirted coat lying loose upon the seat, and the large empty pockets temptingly open.

The old humorist very quietly glided behind, during their talk, and, from a heap of loose stones near by, filled the open pockets without disturbing the owner. He then patted him kindly on the shoulder, and expressing some fear that he might take cold, asked him to walk in the house. At the vain efforts of his pinned down friend, to rise with the weight in his coat tails, he laughed as heartily as a boy of sixteen. He is said to have a fair physiognomy, and to have been an active man and a good citizen, without displaying any particular talent.

Personating Father Mathew.—We learn from the Worcester Spy, that at the commencement of the Catholic College in that city, on Friday, Counsellor Gill, well known as the facetious reporter of the Boston Post, had a place assigned him by the faculty, on the plat form. It so happened that it was the most conspicuous position in the room, elevated, and directly facing the audience. There was as usual desire, among all who came, to see Father Mathew, and he was of course the first object of inquiry. Either through accident or design, it was whispered about the hall that the short fat gentleman on the platform was the veritable Apostle of Temperance, himself, and no other. The room being quite full, and very much crowded about the door, the people, after a fair sight of the supposed "Father Mathew," were glad to retire and make room for new comers who were constantly pressing in. In this way hundreds went away in the conviction that they had seen the Irish lion.

Converting Salt Water into Fresh.—The Boston Journal speaks very favorably of a condensing apparatus for converting salt water into fresh, recently invented by Capt. R. B. Forbes and Mr. Erisson, which the editor recently saw in successful operation in that city. The Journal says:—The whole apparatus, including boiler, furnace, condenser, &c., may be furnished at an expense not exceeding $200, and it occupies so small a place as to be but little in the way on the deck of a large ship. With fifty pounds of anthracite coal, it may be kept in operation some twelve hours, furnishing drinkable fresh water at the rate of 7 gallons an hour. It is unnecessary to endeavor to point out the advantages which must result from this apparatus, especially on long voyages with a numerous ship's company. It will also prevent the necessity of making a harbor to procure water, which is often done on a voyage to places beyond the Cape of Good Hope or Cape Horn, and which is ever attended with vexatious delay and considerable expense.

O! that Theatre.—"Some time ago," says the Rev. T. Fisk, in his sermon in the British Pulpit, "I called to see a mother; she was in distress. She not merely wept, but wept aloud."

"What is the matter?"

"O my child!" and she wept again. "O my child is just committed to prison, and I fear he will never return to his father's house;" and she wept again; and with all my firmness I could not help weeping too. I was afraid to ask her the cause; but I did not need to, for she immediately, in great anguish, exclaimed:

"O that Theatre! he was a virtuous, kind youth, till the Theatre proved his ruin."

The Slave Population.—The whole slave population of the United States, in 1840, says the Traveler, was 2,487,355—now rising three millions, probably. The Southern estimation, generally, of the value of slaves, is four hundred dollars on the average. Mr. Clay, in his famous speech in the United States Senate, some ten years ago, stated the average value at 350, we believe. The Mississippian, published at Jackson, Miss., taking the average value at 400 dollars, estimates the aggregate value of the slaves now to be nearly a billion of dollars—1,000,000,000.

Gradations of Drunkenness.—There is a Rabinical tradition related by Fabricus, that when Noah planted the vine, Satan attended and sacrificed a sheep, a lion, an ape and a sow. These animals were to symbolize the gradations of inebriety. When a man begins to drink he is meek and ignorant as a lamb; then he becomes bold as a lion; his courage is soon transformed into the foolishness of an ape; and last, he wallows in the mire like a sow.

A Few Things to Avoid.—A bottle of wine at a public dinner. A short cut when you are in a hurry. Walking between two unbrellas on a rainy day. "Just another glass before you go." Going to church without a shilling. Being the mediator of a quarrel between a man and his wife. Bowing to a lady from the top of a cab. And, lastly, taking a new hat to an evening ride.

The word luncheon is a corruption of nuncheon, i. e., noonshun, the refreshment taken at noon, when laborers desist from work to shun the heat.

VARIETY.

There is much truth in the assertion, often spoken and written by radicals, that "wealth is no guaranty for patriotism." The late French Revolution was a case in point. In that movement the wealthy allowed their fears to overmaster them to a most ridiculous extent. They scampered away from Paris with all the disgrace and disorder of a panic—adding one more testimony to the fact, that the best supporters of society are not those who have what is called a "stake in the country," but those who are attached by necessity to the soil.

At a hotel, a short time since, a girl inquired of a gentleman at the table if his cup was out, "No," said he, "but my coffee is." The poor girl was considerably confused, but determined to pay him in his own coin. While at dinner, the stage drove up, and several coming in, the gentleman asked, "Does the stage dine here?" "No sir," answered the girl, in a sarcastic tone, "but the passengers do."

The U. S. ship of war Warren lost twenty-five men at Monterey, who deserted to the mines. Five sailors and three marines stole a boat, and all escaped in her but one, who, on the alarm being given, was shot in the leg. The others started for the mines, and on their way the sailors murdered a whole family of Mexicans, after having been hospitably entertained by them. The people at the mines hearing of it, pursued and found the sailors, and tied them up and shot them on the spot.

The Boston Shipping List of the 5th ult., contained a list of 154 ships, 145 barques, 87 brigs, and 60 schooners, now on their way to California from different ports in the United States, making the whole number 446 sail of vessels now engaged in the California trade. The whole number of vessels now on the way thither or already there would not fall short of 500 sail.

At Berthoud, Switzerland, Jacob Moser, widower, forty-five years of age, murdered his four children, aged from 7 to 17 years. The children were all idiots, and three of them dumb; and the wretched man, who had previously borne a good character, is supposed to have been excited to the dreadful deed by poverty. He consummated the tragedy by blowing out his own brains,

Abram S. Haynes drowned himself in Epsom, N. H. because he had been overreached in trade. He was 25 years old, industrious and enterprising, and left a note running thus:—"I want all my folks to be good to my wife and son, for they have always treated me affectionately. So farewell, dear wife, may Heaven protect you."

The will of the late Cyrus Butler, of Providence, was proved on Wednesday. The estate is estimated at four millions of dollars, nearly all of which goes to Mr. Duncan, formerly of Canandaigua, who married the testator's niece. To the eldest son of Mr. Duncan, a young gentleman of twenty, $250,000 is bequeathed.

There are thirteen planing machines in Cincinnati, which turn out yearly six million of feet of tongued and grooved boards for flooring. At a fair calculation, it would require the labor of at least one hundred diligent and skillful carpenters to produce the same result in the same period of time, allowing the boards to average in breadth six inches.

There are three thousand six hundred and sixty-four known languages now used in the world. Of these, nine hundred and thirty-seven are Asiatic; five hundred and eighty-seven European; two hundred and seventy-six African; and one thousand six hundred and twenty-four American languages and dialects.

There are over a thousand princes in Germany, great and small, who receive annually from the people over two hundred million of dollars; while a laborer works eighteen hours out of twenty-four for seventy-two cents per week.

The completest pun on the records of literature is produced in the following words which were inscribed on a tea chest:—Tu doces, which is the second person singular of the verb doceo, to teach; and when literally translated, becomes Thou Tea-chest.

A Signor Altafulla, of Havana, lately left his house in perfect health, and after a lapse of a few hours, was brought home a corpse. His widow was inconsolable for his loss—refused all nourishment, and soon joined in death the husband she so fondly loved in life.

Mr. Hume recently showed that the taxation and expenditure of Great Britain had increased $48,000,000 in fifteen years. The revenue was, in 1834, $236,000,000; in 1848 is was $287,000,000. There has been no reduction of taxes. They have only been raised differently.

The real object of education is to give children, resources that will endure as long as life endures; habits that time will ameliorate, not destroy; occupations that will render sickness tolerable, solitude pleasant, age venerable, life more dignified and useful, and death less terrible.

In the Leeds Intelligencer, of the 9th of October, 1764, the following notice appears: "Lately died at Liverpool, Mrs. Mayee, wife of Mr. Mayee, who was her nineteenth husband."

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at death. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value. Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
Richard H. Bull, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION.

The following letter from Brother Carpenter to the Executive Board of the Missionary Society, came by overland mail in company with those published last week and week before last.

SHANGHAI, May, 1849.

Dear Brethren,—We have the pleasure of informing you, that we are all in good health, and far from being disheartened in our work. Of course you cannot expect to hear of much done. Our time has been mainly spent in getting ready to do, and so it must be for some time to come. I see in a number of the Sabbath Recorder an extract from a letter of one of the newly-arrived missionaries, in which the opinion is expressed, that to obtain a knowledge of the colloquial dialect would require one year! That remark must have been made at random, as every missionary who has been here more than one year could testify. But as we have been requested to give details, and as it may serve to illustrate the character of the people among whom we dwell, and the prospects before us, I will extract somewhat minutely from my journal since our last report.

March 17—Sabbath.—A good number at chapel, and good attention. Towards evening stepped into an idol temple about a mile and a half from our place, and was politely received. Soon a Mandarin who was present began to speak to me of Shangte as being the same as the foreigner's God. After listening a while, I replied, that Shangte and the true God, whose name is Jehovah, are not identical, and offered this as a proof, viz. that whereas Shangte allowed of the worship of other gods, the true God does not. They could not deny the validity of this proof. The conversation then turned upon the character of Christ, whom they were disposed to put upon a level with Confucius. By referring to some of his miracles, I endeavored to show them that a greater than Confucius is the Saviour whom we preach. They listened without any attempt at controversy, and when I left it was from the midst of a shower of compliments.

8th. A man was introduced to me who wished to engage as a teacher. He listened very patiently to my remarks upon death and the judgment.

24th. Sabbath.—Good attendance at chapel. A blind man found his way to the place of worship. After the regular services were over, I conversed with him about Jesus, who not only opened the eyes of the blind, but forgave their sins also, and saved their souls. His mind was very dark, but he seemed to feel some gratitude for the notice taken of him.

29th. Held a brief conversation with two on the city wall, upon the character of the true God as distinguished from idols. Afterwards went into an idol temple close by us, the Medical Exchange, where plays were to be performed in presence of the god of medicine. Large of numbers people were collected; the plays not yet begun, I took occasion to make inquiries as to the usefulness of such performances, and learning that they were all connected with idolatry, I endeavored to reason with those who crowded around to hear and see the foreigner. There was a large open court between the stage and the temple, in which the god of medicine resides. When this was nearly filled with spectators, aged men with grey beards introduced the plays by a prostration of their bodies toward the idol. I then withdrew.

April 4th. Conversed with a gang of ship-carpenters as they were coming from a ship-yard two miles up the river. They treated me in a friendly manner.

5th. Fell in company with a man, carrying a quantity of paper money out into the country. This was to be burnt at the tomb of some friend. I endeavored to show him the folly of such performances. He attempted no justification of the practice, but acknowledged that after the material was burnt up it was of no use. There are many who, if closely questioned, will confess the same. I endeavored to point him to the Lamb of God. Towards night, fell in company with a young Chinese, who was a thorough Papist. He discarded the second commandment, disbelieved in priest's marrying, said the fourth commandment enjoined le-pai-nye, professed to adore Jesus, the Virgin Mary, and the cross, and manifested a thorough dislike to Protestants. In contending for celibacy, he referred me, triumphantly, to Jesus, and asked if he had a wife. I replied, that Jesus had not a wife, but that Peter had. This he peremptorily denied. I put an end to the controversy by reference to the recorded fact of the miraculous cure of St. Peter's wife's mother.

6th. Visited the Pagoda, four miles up the river. Here we were thronged by multitudes, to whom we endeavored to speak the word of life, as Mrs. C. has mentioned.

8th. In company with Mrs. C., visited the family of our late teacher. They voluntarily brought forward a tract previously left with them, which furnished a theme of conversation. They had many questions to ask concerning the doctrine, prompted, probably, by mere curiosity. I siezed upon the opportunity to communicate to them the glorious tidings of the gospel. May the Lord open their eyes.

10th. Found an opportunity to speak the word to an afflicted family, about a mile west of the city. When we returned home, one of our neighbors, who had never called on us before, came in, to whom I spake the word about fifteen minutes. He came in simply to see the house, but departed without accomplishing this object of his visit.

13th. Walking out, I passed along near a tomb where several men had just burnt a quantity of paper money. They spoke to me, and I approached the place, and upon inquiry found that they were only following a custom. They had no confidence in the usefulness of the money after it was burned up. I endeavored to preach Christ and the resurrection to them, to which they listened very patiently.

14th. Sabbath.—At evening service, about forty persons present. At the morning, about thirty. After meeting, walked out, entered a house about a mile south of the city, and spake the word to fifteen or twenty souls.

16th. Too-Quay expresses a desire to become a disciple; says he prays to God, wishes to repent of his sins, and trust in Christ. He appears to be sincere.

18th. In company with Mrs. C., visited the family of our late teacher, and after some conversation gave them a copy of Luke's Gospel. They returned my first discourse, which I had lent them, and said they understood it.

20th. Called at a house south of the city, where I had called months before, and being invited to go in and sit down, I did so, and endeavored to expound unto the inmates the way of the Lord.

21st. Sabbath eve, about fifty persons at meeting. Read and expounded the 37th Psalm. At the morning service, about twenty-five present. About the time of the going down of the sun, walked out in company with Br. W., as usual; met with a young Chinese who proposed to walk with us, to whom we expounded the doctrine. He appeared interested.

22d. In company with Mrs. C., visited the family of our late teacher. Luke's Gospel was voluntarily brought forward, and we read and expounded the greater part of one chapter.

25th. Visited an old temple dedicated to Shangte, and rebuked their idolatry.

26th. Overtook a man with an enormous tumor upon the right side of his neck. It was at least twice the size of his head. I spake to him of the resurrection, when believers in Christ would be possessed of glorious bodies. He appeared grateful for a little sympathy.

29th. Received another remittance. Thanked God and took courage.

May 4th. For several days it has rained. The rain, however, this spring, compared with what fell last spring, is trifling thus far. To-day went on board an American ship of war, the Preble, just from Japan, whither she had been to rescue some ship-wrecked whalemen, as they supposed, but on arrival found that they were deserters from an American whale-ship, with the exception of one, who was from another ship, and who obtained permission to land, and was fitted out by his Captain with boat, &c. This adventurous spirit is from Oregon, is half Indian, and an intelligent fellow. We conversed with him for some time. His object in going ashore, as he says, was to learn the language. He thought it would not be long before the Japanese would sustain commercial relations with other nations besides the Dutch, and he meant to be on hand as an interpreter. But immediately upon his arrival he was imprisoned, and so were the deserters. The officers of the Preble represent the Japanese as superior to the Chinese, but very cautious. They furnished an interpreter of their own nation, who could speak English well. The officers of the Preble treated us in a very friendly manner. As their account will probably be published, I will forbear saying more.

5th. Sabbath.—The number at meeting less than usual, probably owing to a thunder storm approaching. During the services, whenever it thundered loud, the people would rise on their feet. I took occasion to tell them that the thunder was the voice of the Almighty God, and that idols were powerless. Soon after the exercises were closed, the thunder and lightning were much increased, and the rain came down in torrents. At the morning services, we had about twenty-five present. After meeting had a long conversation with Too-Quay. He seemed to have a tolerably clear view of the great doctrines of revealed religion, and still possessed a desire to be a disciple. He expressed a willingness to engage in prayer with us at our evening family devotions, and accordingly has done so, using the form which the Saviour gave to his disciples. I see nothing to contradict the supposition that he is sincere.

7th. The monthly concert of all the missionaries was held at our house; a full attendance.

12th. Sabbath.—An unusual number at chapel, at both services, and good attention.

The American ship of war Plymouth being in port—(she arrived the day after the Preble left)—Commodore Geisings, through Bishop Boone, sent an invitation to all the American ladies in Shanghai, to visit his ship at eleven o'clock to-day. At about half-past eleven, the invitation reached us. We declined, of course, and making no mention of the lateness of the notice, sent the compliments of the ladies to the Commodore, stating that they would be happy to comply with his invitation but for the simple reason that they could not, conscientiously, do so on this particular day of the week. Perhaps they will go on some week day.

Too-Quay expresses a hope that his sins have been forgiven, and says he feels happy The truth has appeared to win its way upon his affections as it has gradually been made known to him. He is a person of an even temper, and has always maintained a moral deportment. Ever since the opening of our chapel I have noticed his apparent thoughtfulness during time of service. He says he is in the habit of maintaining secret prayer. Upon a person of his cast of mind we could not expect so marked a change in the outward life as in one of a different stamp. There is in almost all the Chinese who are in the employment of foreigners, a remarkable tendency to say or do almost anything to please their employers and retain their places. On the whole, we are disposed to believe that the heart of this man has been renewed by the spirit of God, through the operation of divine truth. But we hope with trembling. I have not urged him to baptism, but have explained the subject, in regard to its mode, subjects, and designs. He takes a part in our evening exercises of reading and prayer, and does it cheerfully. I have asked him if he wanted to send any word to my brethren in America. He has replied in the affirmative, and wishes me to say to my companions, that his mind is not wavering but fixed; that he wished to be a believer in Jesus, and that he hopes his wife and children may also become believers; that when he becomes familiar with the whole of the gospel of Luke, which he is now reading, he wishes to go and read it to his family and neighbors, that they may understand the doctrine; and that he thanks you all for the kind interest you have taken in the Chinese.

14th. The following extracts are taken from an Episcopalian Catechism which is widely circulated among the Chinese in these parts:—

Q. How many days from the ceremony worship day did Christ rise from the dead?

A. It was on the ceremony worship day; therefore it is called the Lord's day.

Q. If we wish always to keep in remembrance the resurrection of Christ, the church must keep what day?

Q. The resurrection day.

In a following part of the book, explaining the fourth commandment, occurs the following:—

Q. This precept commands us to remember what day?

A. The seventh day.

Q. Why must we remember this day?

A. Because it is a holy day.

Q. Who has commanded this day to be regarded as a holy day?

A. God.

Q. Why did God set apart this day?

A. Because in six days he made heaven and earth, and rested on the seventh day.

Q. God's setting apart this day, confers on us what obligation?

A. God set apart this day to be regarded as a holy day, a rest day, and a worship day.

Q. At the present time, the disciples of Jesus keep what day as holy?

A. The first day.

Q. Why do they keep the first day instead of the seventh?

A. Because the first day is Jesus' resurrection day.

Q. Who changed the day?

A. Jesus gave power to his disciples to do it.

Q. In Revelations the first day is called what day?

A. It is called the Lord's day.

This book contains one way-mark which I am glad to see. From this the Chinese would learn that le-pai-nye is not the identical day enjoined in the Decalogue. They may, therefore, possibly, be saved from utter confusion upon this subject. The edition from which the above extracts are taken, has been published within the last year. It was got up, I suppose, by Bishop Boone, an American. Mr. McClatchie, an English Episcopalian, takes different ground, both in his preaching and his publications. The following is an extract from one of his tracts: "Heaven's true God in six days created the heavens and the earth, and all things, and rested the seventh day. Hence the true God established this day as a holy day, and called it the rest day. This rest day is the ceremony worship day." Inasmuch as the Chinese have been taught that the day on which the foreigners usually rest is the ceremony worship day, here is an attempt to make them believe that the seventh day is the first. Can it be wondered at that our presence should create a little uneasiness.

We would now present a question for your consideration—perhaps you may have anticipated it. It is this: Ought we to avail ourselves of the aid of tracts in our work? Any thing in the form of tracts, conveying a knowledge of the will of God, would materially aid in our work. It would enable us, by the divine blessing, to accomplish more in a given time than we otherwise could, and thus prove a matter of real economy. In the first place, we need these helps to accelerate the progress of those who attend upon the stated ministration of the word. These aids are needed perhaps nowhere more than in China. This is owing to the peculiarity of the language. In the second place, with the aid of books of some kind it would be less difficult to collect individuals together into bible classes, for instruction, and more easy to benefit them when collected. In the third place, when we make the acquaintance of individuals or famalies, these aids would be invaluable. In the fourth place, it would enable us much more successfully to rescue certain truths from the odium which otherwise appears inevitable. For instance, Romanists and Protestants are agreed in propagating the Sunday error, to the subversion of the fourth commandment. Numbers, wealth, talents, and zeal, are not wanting to give this error a wide spread. And already much has been done. We have come into the field at a late hour. But we woud now lift up the standard of the Lord, and display our colors. How shall we do it? While we are speaking to one, a thousand are reading the books of others. Why may not we also speak to a thousand at once?

But it may be asked, How is it that we, who have been in the country so short a time, should feel ourselves competent to the business of preparing tracts? But this question may be relieved of a part of its difficulty, at least, by the consideration that we have valuable aids. 1. The aid of our teachers. 2. The works of those who have gone before us.

As to the character of the works, we would submit our views to your consideration, and ask for counsel. We are of the opinion that the first book we publish should be a catechism. Probably so much instruction of a general character could not be communicated in the same space in any other form. Let the first part be prepared with a view to elucidate the character and attributes of the true God; the second, the law of God, in which particular care should be taken to present the fourth commandment in its true light; the third, salvation by Jesus Christ; and the fourth, the well ordering of the house of God. If the work could be prepared in English, and sent to us, it would save our time. A thousand copies of a work as large as the Episcopalian catechism which is circulated here, can be procured of the native printers for fifty dollars, and we should own the blocks. The blocks can be cut for twelve dollars, and then for printing and binding they would charge about fifty cash (three cents and a half) per copy; the price per copy would be fixed, no matter how many copies were struck off. If we could get off an edition of this sort of about one thousand, and also an edition of Matthew's Gospel, five hundred, we should be gratified. An edition of Matthew's Gospel would cost less, I think, than double the cost of the same number of copies of the catechism. The Board will please direct us in these things.

Our Tract Society, we learn, is doing more than formerly to extend a knowledge of the truth in America. In this we greatly rejoice, and invoke the blessing of God upon its efforts there. It has doubtless ere this solved the problem put forth in holy scripture: "There is that giveth and yet increaseth," and is ready to extend its operations to other lands. If China should possess sufficient inducements to enlist the Society in its behalf, our judgment is, that its labors would not be in vain in the Lord. A few years ago, and who among all our brethren ever imagined that Providence would so soon open the way for them to circulate the written word of the living God in the land where the tea grows? But now every child that can part with his ten-cent piece, may put into the hands of a Chinese lad a copy of the gospel of Jesus.

Some get up very cheap tracts, and scatter them broad-cast. But, situated as we are, we think it is better to get up something of more value, and then circulate them with discrimination. A copy of the gospel, or a well-written catechism, put into the hands of one with whom we are partially acquainted, and with whom we might converse from time to time, and explain and enforce the doctrine, would, in our opinion, afford more promise than ten times the value scattered broad-cast.

There is one item of business, which we would be glad to whisper in the ear of some worthy brother to whom God has given an abundance of worldly goods. It is this: Our mission, if prospered, will soon need another chapel. The site should be sufficiently large to afford room for a dwelling house in the rear of the chapel. Such a site, in a good location, would cost at least one thousand dollars. A suitable chapel and dwelling house could probably be built for four [illegible] dollars, making in all five thou[illegible]. Such property would be exce[illegible]ngly valuable to t[illegible] mission.

With much solicitude [illegible] shall aw[illegible] arrival of more missionaries from the Board.

Pray for us and for the poor h[illegible]en.

Yours truly, S. CARPENTER.

PATIENT AND STRONG.

When thicken the shadows,
And darkness is spread
Where the soft golden sunshine
So richly was shed—
O, look to the future
In a sweet grateful song—
For the sky is all mercy—
Be patient and strong.

The cares that distract you
Lay resolute by,
And lift with devotion
The heart and the eye—
And for the rich blessing
You will not wait long,
I fyou be fervent and faithful,
And patient and strong.

MEETING OF THE AMERICAN BOARD.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions held its fortieth annual meeting at Pittsfield, Mass., commencing on the 11th inst. The attendance was very large. Dr. Beecher preached the Annual Sermon. Mr. Frelinghuysen presided over the meeting.

From the Treasurer's Report, it appears that the receipts of the year have been $291,705 27, and the expenditures $263,418 47, being $28,286 80 less than the receipts—reducing the debt that amount, and leaving $31,603 98, the present indebtedness of the Board.

Dr. Anderson read the abstract of the Annual Report; from which it appears that it has been found necessary to relinquish the Oregon mission, with the exception of one station, in consequence of the state of feeling among the Indians.

A letter from the Choctaw Mission was read by Rev. Mr. Worcester—reviewing the course of the Mission from beginning to end in relation to slavery, explaining the great difficulty of obtaining free help, and expressing the deepest abhorrence of Slavery. In regard to the encouragement given to Slavery by hiring slaves, where they cannot secure other help, they think it no greater than that afforded by those in free countries who purchase the products of Slavery. They think Slavery is to be abolished by the general influenee of the Gospel. The missionaries are not regarded as approving or sustaining Slavery, but as being Abolitionists. But the missionaries are anxious to avoid even the appearance of evil; and they will not employ slave labor when they can get that which is free.

Rev. Dr. Pomeroy read a paper from the Prudential Committee, on the subject of the want of Missionaries. The Committee say that 38 ordained Missionaries are necessary to sustain the present operations of the Board, without extending them. At present there are only seven young men under appointment, and two or three of them may be permanently detained in this country. But few of the young men in preparation for the Ministry have the foreign field in view. The small number of foreign Missionaries furnished by the last graduating classes, is matter of serious consideration. The present aspect of the Theological Seminaries does not afford encouragement that the want will be supplied by them; nor does there appear to be any other source from which they can be secured. The serious attention of the churches, teachers of Sunday Schools, parents, and especially of the young men, is earnestly called to the subject, and fervent prayer requested that God would raise up laborers for the harvest. Dr. Pomeroy said that the call for the 38 Missionaries is as low as it could be made, to meet the progress of the missions; and bears no comparison whatever to the calls that come to the Committee from all parts of the world, especially from the Nestorians, Armenians, Syria, India, China, Africa, &c. At the Sandwich Islands, there was a prospect that the churches would assume an independent position, and begin to take care of themselves. But there were several Missionaries wanted, of considerable preaching talent, to preach to the English and other foreign residents.

Rev. Mr. Van Lennep made some statements respecting the want of missionaries among the Armenians. He could point to almost innumerable instances where missionaries might profitably be sent if they could be had.

Rev. Mr. Talmadge, from Amoy, China, also made some statements respecting the want of missionaries in China. An immense population is accessible from Amoy, but there are but three missionaries now there, and one chapel has been given up in consequence of the deaths and loss of health. Always, when the chapel is opened, it is filled. On the Sabbath they have regular congregations. When he left they came around him and begged him to remain. When the found that he could not, they requested him to bear a message to the young men of this country, beseeching them to come and teach them the way of life. There is a great desire to hear preaching, but we know not what to do, because our hands are full. The native Christians say: "The harvest is wounded in vain, and there are no gatherers." The province where he was laboring contained 15,000,000 inhabitants.

The afternoon of Thursday was devoted to the celebration of the Lord's Supper. As the church could not hold all who wished to unite in it—though the church would contain at a careful estimate which we made of the audience, the evening before, 1,400—there were several similar services at the Hall. Among those who distributed the sacramental emblems, were Judge Darling of Penn., Chancellor Walworth of N. B., and Chief Jusiice Williams of Conn.

The Board adjourned on Friday morning after a season of prayer and devotion. Thus has closed, probably as pleasant a meeting of this body, as was ever held. The next meeting is to be held at Oswego, N. Y.

THE TREE THAT NEVER FADES.

"Mary," said George, "next summer I will not have a garden. Our pretty tree is dying, and I won't love another as long as I live. I will have a bird next summer, and that will stay all winter."

"George, don't you remember my beautiful canary bird, and it died in the middle of summer, and we planted bright flowers in the ground where we buried it? My bird did not live so long as the tree."

"Well, I don't see a[illegible] can love anything. Little brothe[illegible]efore the bird, and I loved him better th[illegible]any bird, or tree, or flower. Oh, I wish we could have something to love that wouldn't die."

"George, let us go into the house. I don't want to look at our tree any longer."

The day passed. During the school hours, George and Mary had almost forgotten that their tree was dying; but at evening, as they drew their chairs to the table where their mother was sitting, and began to arrange the seeds they had been from day to day gathering, the remembrance of their tree came upon them.

"Mother," said Mary, "you may give these seeds to cousin John; I never want another garden."

"Yes," added George, pushing the papers in which he had carefully folded them towards his mother, "you may give them all away. If I could find some seeds of a tree that would never fade, I should love to have a garden. I wonder if there ever was such a garden, mother?"

"Yes, George, I have read of a garden where the trees never die."

"A real garden, mother?"

"Yes, my son. In the middle of the garden, I have been told, there runs a pure river of water, clear as crystal, and on each side of the river is the tree of life,—a tree that never fades. That garden is heaven. There you may love, and love forever. There will be no death—no fading there. Let your treasure be the tree of life, and you will have something to which your young hearts can cling, without fear, without disappointment. Love the Saviour here, and he will prepare you to dwell in those green pastures, and beside those still waters."

THE ORIGIN OF WRITTEN SERMONS.

Cotton Mather, in the short account he gives of the life of Rev. John Warham, one of the first ministers of Windsor, Conn., gives the following account of the occasion on which the custom of preaching written sermons originated:—

"When the time of reformation was come on, one of the more effectual things done toward that reformation in England, was to send about the kingdom certain itinerant preachers with a license to preach the fundamentals of religion instead of the stuff with which the souls of the people had formerly been famished. Upon this occasion the famous Dr. Burnet remarks: 'Many complaints were made of those that were licensed to preach; and that they might be able to justify themselves, they began generally to write and read their sermons, and thus did this custom begin; in which what is wanting in the heat and force of the delivery is much made up by the strength and solidity of the matter: and it has produced many volumes of as excellent sermons as have been preached in any age.'

"The custom of preaching with notes, thus introduced," continues Mather, "has been decried by many good men, besides fanatics, in the present age (1698), and many poor and weak prejudices against it have been pretended. But hear the words of the most accomplished (Richard) Baxter, unto some gainsayers: 'It is not our want of abilities that makes us use notes, but it is a regard unto our work and the good of our hearers. I use notes as much as any man when I take pains, and as little as any man when I am lazy or busy and have not leisure to prepare. It is easier unto us to preach three sermons without notes, than one with them. He is a simple preacher that is not able to preach a day without preparation, if his strength would serve.' Indeed," continues Mather, "I would have distinction made between the reading of notes and the using of notes. It is a pity that a minister should so read his notes as to take away the vivacity and efficacy of his delivery; but if he so use his notes as a lawyer does the minutes whereupon he is to plead, and carry a full quiver into the pulpit with him, from whence he may with one cast of his eye, after the lively shooting of one arrow, fetch out the next, it might be a thousand ways advantageous.

"I suppose that the first minister that ever thus preached with notes in our New England was the Rev. Warham: who, though he were sometimes faulted for it by some judicious men who had never heard him, yet when once they came to hear him they could not but admire the notable energy of his ministry. He was a more vigorous preacher than the most of them who have been applauded for never looking into a book in their lives."

THE MONTHLY CONCERT.

We wish to urge once more the importance of observing the monthly concert of prayer. We consider it to be, under God, the main source of life to the missionary cause. Indeed, it is our deliberate opinion, that unless it can be brought into general observance, what little zeal has been kindled among us in behalf of missions will die out entirely. This may sound like strange doctrine, especially as the institution is one of mere human appointment. But it is evident, that if missions are sustained by us, funds must be raised; and whether they are likely to be raised with that systematic promptness which is necessary to keep the cause from sinking, let the following reflections determine.

Those churches which make an effort once a year to raise funds, will do so because it is about as often as the subject of missions is brought before them. Now, under what circumstances is a person most likely to offer a large contribution to a benevolent object? Is it when the object is first presented to him, or is it when he has in his treasury what he has been laying aside for the purpose every month for a year past? We know very well, that one being called on suddenly to contribute, will feel it quite a sacrifice to give five or ten dollars, and then will make such a poor mouth about it, that you are almost ready to give it back to him; while, if he has been in the habit of sequestering fifty cent[illegible]nthly, he will at the end of the year give [illegible] entire amount without feeling himself a[illegible] the poorer for it. It is just so with the churches. Let them observe the monthly concert; let that always be an occasion of taking a collection for missionary purposes; and at the end of the year double or three times the amount will have been raised that could have been by a single effort once a year. That a collection will be raised every month for missions by a church that does not observe the monthly concert at all, is not very likely. Besides, where the monthly concert is observed, the subject of missions is kept continually before the people, and thus the missionary spirit is nourished and kept alive. Hence, if it should be necessary at the end of the year to make an extra effort in the cause, those people who have observed the monthly concert are the very ones who are ready to make it; while those who raise their collections but once a year have hard dragging to furnish an ordinary contribution. Emergencies would be poorly provided for by such people.

Again, if our people are not taught to pray for missions, they will not be very likely to give of their substance. Nothing awakens a man's conscience to the duty of liberality, like prayer. If one say to his needy brother, be you warmed and filled, and at the same time refuses to give those things which are needful for the body, what doth it profit? James 2: 15, 16. So, if one prays for the heathen, notwithstanding he withholds what is necessary to send them the gospel, what doth it profit? How dwelleth the love of God in him? The truth is, he who prays for the heathen must either give according to his ability to send them the word of life, or else he must quit praying; and one or the other he will very soon do.

And again, Christ says, "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Matt. 19: 19, 20. What will all the gold and silver contributed avail to the conversion of the heathen; what will all the labors of missionaries avail—their toils, their privations, their preaching, and every thing else that they do—unless God accompany them with the influences and power of the Holy Spirit? Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase. 1 Cor. 3: 6. Surely, then, prayer—"effectual fervent prayer"—is of the very last importance; not merely the prayer of the Christian in his closet, but the united supplication of two or three gathered together in the name of Jesus.

GROG-SELLING ON SUNDAYS.

In Baltimore, the "friends of temperance" (so called) are raising a great hue-and-cry about what they denominate the Sunday License Law—a law which compels all public houses to close their bars on Sunday. A meeting was held one evening last week, at which resolutions were passed to question candidates for the Legislature, of all parties, as to whether they are in favor of or opposed to this law, and to vote only for such as give an explicit answer that they are in favor of it.

No doubt these people think that by such a course they are proving themselves "friends of temperance." We must be permitted to think otherwise. A law which sanctions and sanctifies grog-selling on six days of the week, does vastly more to uphold the business, and render it honorable, than all the efforts of temperance men to sustain the Sunday provision will do to destroy the business, and render it disreputable. The true friends of temperance oppose rum-selling on all days. Those who wish to make the temperance cause a stepping-stone to the compulsory observance of Sunday, oppose rum-selling on one day out of the seven.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

For the sake of information, I wish to propose through your columns the following query:—

"Can the Institution commonly called The Lord's Supper, or Communion, be administered, according to Gospel order, except by an ordained minister?

An answer to the above, through the Recorder, would be thankfully received by an INQUIRER.

Reply.

The New Testament does not require that the administrator should be an ordained minister. The act of celebrating the Lord's Supper is, however, a church act, and the administration and serving of the elements should, therefore, be performed by such officers as the church may appoint for the purpose. It is not an uncommon thing for churches destitute of pastors to go for months, and sometimes for years, without "showing forth the Lord's death." We think this is wrong. Let the church come together as usual; and then, the elements being made ready, let them by an orderly vote request some brother to take a seat at the table, [illegible] he may, after an invocation of [illegible] break the loaf and give to the di[illegible]ciple[illegible] [illegible] same way the wine. Nor is it necessary that deacons should be concerned in the distrib[illegible] of the elements. Custom has assigned them this office, and many people seem to think it scriptural. But if deacons are not present to perform the part custom has assigned them, there is no necessity that the celebration of the ordinance should fall though. Let the church appoint one or more persons—as many as may be thought necessary—to serve on that particular occasion.

MISSION TO HAYTI—CIRCULAR.

The Corresponding Secretary feels that he need not wait for a regular meeting of the Board to authorize him to send out an appeal to the denomination in behalf of the proposed Hayti Mission. The Parent Society has determined that the mission shall be undertaken as soon as practicable, and has instructed the Board to take measures accordingly. The Secretary, therefore, loses no time in saying to the churches, that the Board is ready to consider any application that may be made, and hopes that there may be found at least one ministering brother willing to consecrate himself to the work of carrying the gospel to Hayti. As yet no applicant has presented himself, nor have we our eye upon any one in particular; but it may be that there is some one amongst us, whom, when he shall see the door thus opened for usefulness, the Spirit of God will stir up and incline to the work. If so, it is hoped that he will lose no time in communicating with the Board.

Upon the churches we urge, that they make this matter a subject of special prayer, especially at the monthly concert. We shall not find the right man, until we ask him of God. It may be that in some of our churches is the brother, every way qualified by natural gifts and pious feeling, but not yet brought out as one whom God has called, and will endow, for an enterprise like this. He is "hid among the stuff." Earnest prayer to the Lord of the harvest will bring him forth. Or, it may be that God will send us a man from some other denomination, first removing his blindness in regard to the Sabbath. Ways are not wanting to accomplish the purpose with Him who is infinite in power. If He but see us earnestly resolved upon serving Him in this enterprise, He will place at our disposal every facility for the accomplishment of it.

Upon our brethren throughout the denomination we urge, that they begin, without delay, to sequester their contributions for this mission, in the full confidence that they will soon be called for. A little set apart every week from your earnings will soon raise enough to begin the enterprise. Say not that we are doing more already than we are able to do. Our denomination numbers about six thousand communicants. Five cents a week—less than a penny a day—from each member, would be $300; which, in the course of a year would amount to $15,600. Who will say that we ought not to raise so large a sum for benevolent purposes? Yet the contributions to the Missionary Association last year, for both foreign and domestic operations, did not reach the sum of two thousand dollars. And if to this be added what was expended by the other Associations for missions within their own bounds, it is probable that the sum would very little exceed 2000 dollars, if any. The amount expended for the operations of the Tract Society was only about four hundred dollars. All that our denomination has raised for benevolent purposes, during the last year, would not exceed 2,500 dollars. Is this doing what we are able to do? Will any man in his senses say that we are not able to undertake a mission to Hayti? By the blessing of God, we are abundantly able.

In a communication from Bro. Jones, it is suggested, that "if you should not be able to find a suitable missionary preacher for Hayti, perhaps you may find a missionary school-teacher, some married brother, who would qualify himself to teach French before coming out." The Corresponding Secretary has no authority from the Board to say that a school-teacher will be accepted, and sent out in that capacity alone; but he considers that he shall not transcend his authority by saying that if there is in the denomination a brother who feels that he could be useful in that capacity, and is willing to spend his life in training the youth of Hayti in the knowledge, not only of that which is useful in this life, but of that which is connected with the life to come, and will communicate his wishes to the Board, the subject will be taken into consideration. Bro. Jones remarks, that "a day-school is a very necessary aid to every missionary in this country. The great mass of the people are ignorant of books. We want to make them a reading people." Bro. J. himself, "besides preaching three and four times per week, givessome daily attention to his school, and teaches English one hour every day for five days in the week." What the Board most desires, however, is a preacher of the gospel. The great business of the church is to proclaim the gospel to a dying world.

I do not permit myself to doubt that the communication of Bro. Jones, entitled "Send the Gospel to Hayti," and published in the Recorder three weeks ago, has been read, before this, by every member of our denomination; and not only read, but carefully read, and the subject of it seriously pondered. That, together with what was previously known by the most of our people, must have done something towards preparing their minds, so that this appeal does not come to them unexpectedly. It is hoped, also, that the editorial articles of our paper, on the same subject, have not been passed without attention. On behalf of the Board,

THOMAS B. BROWN, Cor. Sec.

THE ODD-FELLOWS.

The National Grand Lodge of Odd-Fellows met at Baltimore last week. The aggregate of returns made by twenty-eight Grand Lodges, is given below. The reader will notice a difference of about five hundred thousand dollars between the "Revenue" and the "Total Telief." Does it require such a sum—more than half the money received—to pay the expenses of lodge-rooms, parades, and gewgaws? If so, we should much prefer to invest our funds for personal relief in sickness, and for the relief of a poor family after death, in a Life and Health Insurance Company, where the expenses do not swallow up such a proportion of the investment. Here is the summary:—

Subordinate Lodges	1,712
Initiations, for the year	23,350
Suspensions	6,726
Expulsions	818
Past Grands	13,514
P. G. Masters	188
Revenue	$880,389 32
Contributing Members	133,401
Number of Brothers relieved	19,035
Number of widowed families relieved	1,687
Number of Brothers buried,	1,162
Amount paid for relief of Brothers	$272,174 50
Paid for relief of families	$33,392 33
Paid for education of orphans	$6,732 25
Burying the dead	$51,636 65
Total Relief	$363,943 95

Vermont failed to make her returns, but her membership is full two thousand, which, with both parties in New York, will make about one hundred and sixty thousand members under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of the United States.

Lodges have been instituted in California and Minnesota.

THE TEN-HOUR SYSTEM IN NEW JERSEY.

A recent meeting of the Working-Men in Trenton, N. J., adopted a petition to the Legislature for a law fixing ten hours for a full day's toil, and providing that children shall not be employed in factories under twelve years of age. Whatever difference of opinion there may be concerning the expediency of direct legislation on the subject, there should be none in relation to the propriety of the limitations suggested. Ten hours of honest toil ought to be considered a good day's work, and entitle the laborer to a good living. Men can hardly do more than that, habitually, without disparagement to both mind and body. A man who is doomed to incessant, unremitting labor of any sort, without time for recreation and the cultivation of his mind and affections, must soon be reduced to the condition of a machine. He is in fact a slave already to his mere animal necessities. There is, or should be, a time for study and play, as well as a time for work, and the former is just as necessary to our well-being as the latter. The working-men who framed the following petition to the Legislature of New Jersey, evidently understand this:—

"The undersigned, citizens of this State, respectfully represent to your honorable body, that much evil results to a large class of our citizens, in consequence of being compelled to devote more time to manual labor than is consistent with their physical health or intellectual culture. We hold the old doctrine, that the masses were created to toil, and the few to think, in utter abhorrence. All have minds to think, as well as physical powers to labor, and all should have time for the cultivation and enjoyment of the one, as well as the exercise of the other. By lessening the hours of labor, we give time [illegible]tellectual and moral culture, and to improve the physical energies of the system; and by this means raise the working masses to that position in society which their Creator intended they should occupy.

"The young and innocent child, born to the inheritance of poverty, is especially entitled to our sympathies and protection. We should not, under any circumstances, allow the cold-hearted miser to fatten by oppressing them. If it be criminal for a man to speculate upon property accumulated, how much more criminal must it be to speculate on the health and energies of the young and helpless, and to destroy the only means of obtaining either halth, prosperity, or happiness. He that takes away from an inyvidual his health, and the means of enjoeing life, might as well take away life at onco The true mission of a good government is to give full protection to life, liberty, and property. The protection of life demands that children should not be put to work too young, and that the occupation, when labor is commenced, should not be rendered unhealthy. If we allow the constitution of our children to be impaired by an undue amount of labor, our government fails to perform its legitimate duty. In view of these and many other weighty considerations, we respectfully, but earnestly, petition your honorable body to pass a law, fixing the period of ten hours as a full day's toil, and that no children shall be employed in factories under twelve years of age, nor for a longer time than ten hours per diem."

FAITH AND WORKS—AGAIN.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Permit me through your paper to return my thanks to brother Griswold for his attempt to give us his meaning in language that we can understand. Whether he has actually done so or not, we thank him for the pains he has taken to gratify us in that respect, especially since, in doing so, he has amply refuted his former position. The position I allude to is this, viz: He gave it as his opinion, in his report on the State of Religion in the Rhode Island churches, that the doctrine of justification by faith alone ought to be more prominent in the teaching among those churches. But now, if I understand him, he has clearly shown that there can be no such thing as justification by faith alone; that is, by a faith not accompanied by corresponding obedience, or good works. And that is exactly what I attempted to show. In this particular, then, it seems that he and I are now agreed. How he came to change his mind so soon, he does not say. I am extremely glad of it, however, for I verily thought it would have been a bad affair to have had the doctrine of dead faith promulged among these churches. Besides, I conclude that he has now given up the other idea, that there is danger, in these days of 'do this and thou shalt live;' for he now says, that if our belief is not accompanied with a corresponding obedience—that is to say, if it is not accompanied with 'do this'—it is not faith, it is unbelief; and unbelief, he says, ruins us. It is possible, however, that he may not mean exactly what his language signifies. If he does, I see not but that we are agreed in this also; and who knows but that we may get quite together after a while?

There is one thing, however, about which I could wish to gain some farther light. He speaks of faith as if he thought it were an intelligent, active agent, by which man, as a mere inert machine, is propelled to action, somewhat, it would seem, as a man propels his wheel-barrow, driving it before him. For he says, "Faith sets the machinery of the mind in motion, and propels human nature onward." He says also, that "faith examines the evidence of the authenticity of the Bible," which surely it could not do unless it possessed intelligence. Whereas, I should think that it was the man himself, and not his faith, that examines the evidence; and that it was the exercise of his own will and volition that puts him in motion to do either good or evil. I suppose the man always acts just as his own will and inclination dictate and decide, whether it be in accordance with what he believes to be right or not. I also suppose that a man's religious faith is what he believes to be true in regard to religion, and that whatever he believes is the act of his own mind, and not what puts his mind in motion. The mind acts when it believes, and needs not a previous belief to make it believe, or to make it act. It is an action when it believes, so far as believing is an act. But I never thought, as brother Griswold says, that when a man believes the truth, his belief will act upon him with a power almost equal to omnipotence, in causing him to obey the truth; and it seems to me, that although he believes the truth never so firmly, yet he never obeys it until his will consents to do so. The will of man is a stout fellow; and although faith is a strong incentive, yet this will is much stronger. "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life," said the Saviour. "How often would I have gathered your children together, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not." Now if brother Griswold, or any other one, can give us any light on this momentous subject, I should be extremely glad to obtain it.

NEGRO SUFFRAGE IN NEW-JERSEY.—A Convention of Colored People was held at the Mount Zion Church, Trenton, on the 21st ult., for the purpose of obtaining from the Legislature the right of suffrage. Seventeen Delegates were present from Essex, Burlington, Salem, Mercer, Monmouth, Gloucester, and Camden Counties. The proceedings, which occupied two days, resulted in the adoption of an address to the people generally, reminding them that "we are men like unto yourselves," &c., and appealing to them in view of their "honesty and love of liberty," to use their influence in obtaining for them the requisites of liberty in the exercise of the right of suffrage, &c., &c. The following is the form of their petition, intended for rhe next Legislature:—

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Assembly of the State of New-Jersey, at Trenton assembled:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the State of New-Jersey, hereby respectfully petition your Honorable body to take the lawful measures to so amend the Constitution as to leave out the word "white" in Article 2d., Right of Suffrage, Section 1st of the Constitution of the State of New-Jersey, so as to grant the right of franchise to all citizens thereof, irrespective of color.

FREE RELIGIOUS READING ROOM.—We understand that some active members of the Seventh-day Baptist Church are about to place a large and expensive collection of books and manuscripts, relative to the observance of the Christian Sabbath, in a free reading room for the use of the public. We feel assured that the movement will be gratifying in a high degree to Christians of all denominations, who may desire to examine the reasoning of the early reformers upon this much mooted subject. [N. Y. Ex.

☞ We hope that those brethren who have it in their hearts to do so much good, will not fail in some measure to answer the public expectation, now that their design has leaked out, and the Christian public has the project so favorably reccommended. Let what has been suggested in a small way, fulfill the expectations thus raised. Perhaps other books than those of the Sabbath Tract Society's Library, upon other and kindred subjects, might properly be added to the list.

MORE LIGHT.

REACTION AT ROME.—A correspondent of the London News, writing from Rome under date of August 18th, represents things there as in a very unsettled condition. Commercial stagnation, suspension of employment, uncertainty in respect to the currency, and the high price of all the necessaries of life, combine to render ill-humor general. The authorities are doing nothing to improve the state of things, but rather the contrary. The following paragraph will give an idea of what he expects in future:—

"A religious as well as political revolution appears to be unavoidable. The celebrated Padre Gavazzi is reported to have turned Protestant, and Padre Ventura, a man whose reputation as a theologian and a philosopher gives him great influence in this country, is said to be in a fair way of following the example. In fact, those who have hitherto supported the papal cause now abandon it, declaring that the priests by their intemperate conduct are paving the way for the return of the liberals, in the same manner that the zeal of the republicans defeated their own end."

REVIVAL OF THE INQUISITION.—Our readers remember the exposure of the secrets of the Inquisition during the ascendancy of the Roman Republic. The terrors of the "Holy Office" are now to be revived against those who favored the revolution, and all who have in any way rendered themselves obnoxious to the priests. One of the first victims of ecclesiastical malice was Rev. Dr. Achilli, who has been for several years an avowed Protestant, residing at Malta, where he was engaged in translating the Scriptures and in teaching theology. Though he has not been active in political affairs, he was arrested at Rome on the night of the 30th July, and cast into one of the cells of the Inquisition.

THE PARISIANS AND THE POPE.—The Paris correspondent of the Christian Advocate and Journal says that on the morning of Sunday, August 12, the following inscription was placed on one of the walls of Notre Dame, in that city: "The good Shepherd giveth his life for the Sheep: Pius IX. destroys his with grape shot!" It excited so much attention that the police interfered to disperse the crowd. The inscription was effaced, but it was renewed during the night, and it is said that all the churches had a similar inscription on their walls.

THE DISPENSATION ENDED.—The Roman Catholic Bishop of New York gives notice, that the Dispensation suspending the precept of abstinence from flesh meat, during the prevalence of the Cholera, has ceased in the Diocese of New York, in consequence of the almost entire disappearance of the epidemic. "During its progress it has bequeathed to us who survive destitution, among orphan children especially, in endeavoring to provide for whom the faithful will have ample opportunities to testify their gratitude to Almighty God for having exempted them and their families from the scourge that has fallen so heavily upon others."

SUB-MARINE MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.—A line of telegraphic wires across the English Channel is proposed. The President of the French Republic is about to give permission to a Mr. Jacob Brett, an Englishman, to establish such a line, which will connect the French coast, somewhere between Calais and Boulogne, with the English coast at Dover. The wires, after having received three successive preparations in order to prevent their oxygenizing, are to be covered with caoutchouc, and laid in the bottom of the sea. The work is to be completed by the first of September, 1850.

JUDAISM IN THE UNITED STATES.—Dr. Lilienthal, the Chief Rabbi in the United States, speaks in encouraging terms of the prospects of Judaism in this country, and hopes for a firmer footing here than in Europe. There are many synagogues in the chief cities of the Union. When ten Jews are gathered in any place, they organize a congregation with all their peculiar ceremonies. The number of Jews in North America is estimated at 50,000 and 7,000 more in the West Indies.

PRESTON CHURCH.—Notice is hereby given, that all members of the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Preston, who have removed from the vicinity of the church, will be considered dismissed therefrom, unless they correspond with the church within six months from the date of this notice.

By order of the Church,
CLARK T. ROGERS, Clerk.
Preston, Sept. 2, 1849.

THE FRENCH MINISTER DISMISSED.—The French Minister at Washington has been officially notified by Government, that his passport is ready; the meaning of which is, that he will no longer be received in his official capacity. It seems that M. Paussin had occasion to correspond with Mr. Clayton, the Secretary of State, in relation to the claim of a French citizen for indemnity in some transaction connected with our naval operations near Vera Cruz, about the time of the bombardment of that city. The matter had already been investigated by a court marshal, and the claim declared to be unjust. When it was presented to the Secretary, he stated to the Minister the grounds of that decision; whereupon M. Poussin took the liberty of addressing him a note couched in language which was regarded as insulting to our Government. His communication was immediately sent to Paris, with an intimation that his recall would be expected. No notice having been taken of the matter by the French Government, after due delay, the course above indicated has been pursued by our Government. Some people talk as though they expected a war to grow out of it; but there is no occasion for any such fears.

FAIR OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE.—The 22d Annual Fair of the American Institute will open at Castle Garden, in New York, on the 2d of October. The second Convention of the fruit-growers of the United States will meet on the first day of the Fair in the Saloon of Castle Garden. The Plowing and Spading Matches will take place at Flushing, L. I., on the 4th of October, in connection with the Queens County Agricultural Society. The Cattle Show is to be held in the rear of Madison Cottage, in 23d street, opening on the morning of the 10th, and continuing two days. The Gardens are open for stock from all parts of the Union, and no entrance-money is required. Animals offered for premium will be under the special direction of a Committee of the Agricultural Board of the Institute. The Anniversary Address will be delivered by Hon. Levi Woodbury, at the Tabernacle, on the evening of the 11th. Other incidental matters of interest are to be thrown in from time to time. Altogether, this Fair promises to equal any of its predecessors.

FRENCH CATHOLICISM.—A new Catholic Review has been started in France, conducted by Lacotdaire and the Abbe Maret, aided also by eminent contributors. It is called the Revue des Refórmes et du Progress, and indicates a growing freedom of opinion in the Romish Church. It advocates earnestly the necessity of reform in the bosom of the Church, and seeks to ally it with the progressive civil movements of the age. Its conductors would elevate the authority of councils and bishops to an equality with the papacy, and would deprive the Pope of his temporal authority, and invest him only with spiritual power. They plead eloquently for perfect freedom of conscience and the press, and are ardent Republicans in their political creed.

HEALTH OF "FANNY FORRESTER" AND FAMILY.—A letter from Mrs. J., dated April 10, addressed to her old pastor, at Utica, says:—"Mr. J. and the children are quite well, the former able to preach most of the time twice on the Sabbath, and attend two or three meetings in the week in addition to his other duties. For myself, under the blessing of God, I have again rallied a little, and we hope I am slowly improving; though I suppose the danger (if it be not an incongruity for a Christian to talk of danger in connection with death) is not yet all past. Life, especially in my position, seems to me a desirable thing; but my Heavenly Father knows what is good for both of us, and for His cause; and I rejoice to be at His disposal."

NEWSPAPER PATRONAGE.—The Boston Investigator—"an infidel paper, devoted to the promotion of universal mental liberty"—publishes the following extract from a letter of one of its patrons:—

"Push ahead, Mr. Editor, and lay on fearlessly, for under such reiterated blows, dagon must fall to the earth. Please forward me now and then an extra paper to send among individuals in this vicinity, some of whom will undoubtedly patronize you before a great while. You may depend on my patronage so long as I live and you publish. Should money be any object in the carrying on of your business, just tip the wink to your humble servant, to whom a five, or something of that sort, is no particular object, and oblige. Yours, in sincerity, F. P."

To which the Editor appends the following matter-of-fact suggestions, showing how easy it is for the patrons of a paper to be its executioners:—

"The above looks very well—on paper! But the misfortune is, that promising patrons are altogether too abundant. Who would think, after such a flourish by 'F. P.,' that his subscription of nearly two years remains unpaid? Yet it is even so, notwithstanding he has been reminded of his delinquency time and again! Very likely he is pleased to see our paper kept going, and wants to help it—perhaps thinks he is helping it; but we are fearful such kind of help—of which we have a great deal—will eventually, if much longer continued, be the means of killing it beyond the possibility of redemption. The only way to support a paper permanently is for subscribers to pay for it punctually; and this rule is more applicable to our paper than probably any other, for its unpopularity is such, that it has nothing else to rely upon for support but the prompt payment of its subscribers."

Rev. Sylvester Woodrige, Missionary of the Presbyterian Boad of Missions, has organized the first Presbyterian Church in the golden country, California.

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamer Cambria, arrived at New York on the 23d, we have seven days later intelligence, of no great importance, from Europe.

The cholera was increasing in England. The deaths for the week ending 8th inst., in London, were 2,796, of which 1,663 were of cholera. In Liverpool the deaths of cholera were said to be greater than in any other part of England. In Dublin it was on the increase. Several distinguished persons have died of cholera at Paris, and in other parts of France. Vienna and Berlin are suffering more than Paris. At Berlin the deaths are more than 40 a day.

The Liverpool Journal of the 8th says:—The harvest has been nearly safely housed, and is pronounced abundant, as the potato is redundant, and is so far exempt from rot.

From Hungary come assurances that the fortresses of Comorn and Peterwardien still hold out; the former commanded by Klapka, the latter by Kird. A letter from Vienna, of the 31st ult., states that several of the Maygar chiefs had been executed. Among these are the Ex-Minister of Interior, Vukovich, and Gen. Damianich, who had been hanged, and Gen. Aufferman who had been shot. Gen. Jowich, who gave up the fortress Esseg to the Maygars, had been taken to Vienna in chains. The mother and children of Kossuth, and the wives of several Maygar Generals, had arrived as prisoners at Presburg. The Emperor of Austria has pardoned Gorgey, and the latter has departed for Syria, where he intends, for the present, to reside. The greater part of the Russian army had received orders to march towards Gallacia.

From Italy, there is nothing encouraging. Venice was taken possession of by the Imperialists on the 27th. On the 21st ult. Gen. Oudinot officially announced his departure from Rome. M. Savelli, the Pope's Minister of the Interior, has arrived and installed himself as head of the police, but entirely under the control of the French authorities. His first decree was regarding the paper money, and he says that the State guarantees notes for their declared value, and imposes a fine and imprisonment on all who refuse to take them when tendered for payment. A Military Commission has been established for re-organizing the Roman troops. All promotion since the 16th of November is annulled until the Commission shall have reported upon the conduct of each man, which, if found satisfactory, will enable him to regain his rank. The Triumvirate of cardinals has instituted a Commission for the purpose of prosecuting the authors and accomplices of the outrages committed during the Revolutionary period against religion, its ministers, the majesty of the sovereign, and public security.

LIVING IN CALIFORNIA.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of San Francisco, Aug. 1, gives the following account of the expenses of living and and the character of the people in that place:—

You can have no idea of the state of things in this part of the country. One dollar here will go about as far as a dime in New York. And a person keeping house, with but one servant as cook, cannot expend less than $10,000 per annum. In the first place, for any decent habitation he must pay from $4,000 to $5,000 rent. I am paying for a very inferior house of the smallest kind, without any yard or out-house of any kind, $300 per month. My cook receives a compensation of $150 per month, which, added to other expenses, you will perceive cannot but increase the sum total to an amount exceeding that expended by any but the most extravagant livers in New-York, and the table of the poorest there, will often present a repast superior to mine. Hundreds of disappointed young men are arriving here daily, who go to the mining districts, and return in disgust, without means to defray the enormous expense of living.

We have the most abandoned population around us existing in any portion of the globe, and the conduct of some of our countrymen is such as to make the honest citizen blush with shame that he too is an American. Two Sundays ago we were annoyed by a party of about thirty persons, marching about the town, insulting nearly all they met; at night they attacked the camp of a party of innocent Chilians, murdered five or six of the number, and pillaged their tents of the most valuable property.

THE NEW YORK CENTRAL COLLEGE.

The New-York Central College Association held its Annual Meeting in the Hall of the College, at Mt. Grawville, Sept. 4, 1849. In addition to the other business, two addresses were delivered to the audience; one by Eld. F. Glanville of Ithaca, on the advantages of Wisdom and Knowledge; the other by Prof. C. L. Reason, formerly of the City of New-York, on the Harmony of the Principles of the College with Man's True Destiny and the Tendencies of the Present Age. The President then introduced to the congregation Eld. S. R. Ward, who gave an excellent off-hand address. In describing the happy transition which was going on in the public mind, he referred to the time when his respected friend, Mr. Reason, who had so deeply interested the audience by his address, traveled to Canaan, N. H., to enjoy the advantages of intellectual culture, but, to his great disappointment, the school-house was destroyed by the citizens of the place, being moved thereto by their strong prejudices against color. At the close of the exercise the Association adjourned to 10 o'clock the next morning.

A congregation of more than two thousand assembled on the 5th to witness the induction of the Faculty. The choir of the village added, by their excellent music, to the interest of the occasion. Eld. W. Tillinghast introduced to the audience the members of the Faculty respectively, including the ladies, and also the Steward and Stewardess. The President, Eld. Cyrus P. Grosvenor, delivered an Inaugural Address: Subject—"Education, physical, mental, and moral." After which Eld. A. L. Post of Montrose, Penn., addressed the Faculty: Subject—"Manliness and Common Sense the True End of Collegiate Education."

The above exercises were all opened and closed with prayer. A very favorable impression was made on the audience. About thirty students already have arrived, many more are making arrangements to attend, and much good is anticipated from the establishment of this Institution. [Tribune

HAYTI AN EMPIRE.

By the brig Hayti, Capt. Cutts, which arrived last week from Port-au-Prince, whence she sailed on the 3d inst., we learn that Hayti has ceased to be a Republic, and that Soulouque, the President, has been proclaimed Emperor under the name of Faustin I. This transformation is thus narrated by the Feuille du Commerce of Sept. 2:—

The Empire! Such is the event which occupies all minds. Last Sunday, Aug. 26, at the moment that we were distributing our Journal, the cannons resounding from every quarter, saluted the nomination of the President, Faustin Soulouque to the title and dignity of Emperor.

Since the 23rd of August, there had been circulated in the Capital, an address to the members of the Chamber of Representatives and the Senate, demanding in the name of the people, the title and dignity of Emperor for the President of Hayti. This address was covered with signatures. In the afternoon of the 24th it was sent to the Chamber of Representatives, and the next day two declarations to the same purport signed by the general officers, colonels, and subordinate officers, who were at the capital, was also sent to the Legislative body by Gen. Vil Luben, commander of the place. On the same day the Chamber, after examining the petition, brought in a bill conferring the title and dignity of Emperor on the President of Hayti; the day after, the 26th, in the morning, the Senate adopted it.

Immediately thereafter that body went to the palace, where the representatives and civil and military functionaries were already assembled. The Emperor and Empress did not delay in making their appearance. The President of the Senate then placed the imperial crown on the head of the Chief of the State, and placed a cross of gold at his button hole. Next he placed around the neck of the Empress a chain of great value, after which the shouts of Vive l' Empereur! reechoed in the hall. Mr. Larochel delivered an address to the Emperor, to which he briefly replied.

The public functionaries then accompanied their majesties to the Parish church, where a Te Deum was chanted. For several evenings subsequent, the city was illuminated.

GRATIFYING RESULT OF AN OPERATION.—The New Albany (Ind.) Bulletin, has an interesting account of an operation performed by Dr. Sloan, of New Albany, upon the eyes of Rev. N. Hoskings, of Crawford county, Ind., who had been blind from birth. The Bulletin says:—

Mr. Hoskings was taken home to Crawford County before the bandages were removed, and when this was done, we are informed by a gentleman residing in that neighborhood, the operation was found to have been eminently successful. He describes the emotions of the patient when suddenly possessed of a scene so novel to him, to be of the most enthusiastic description. Things which he had long been acquainted with through the medium of the other senses, became possessed of a new and surpassing beauty, and roads which he had been used to travel fearlessly when blind, had to be again learned. His wife and children, whom he had never seen, his friends, his parishioners, his home, every thing endeared to him became an unending source of delight and new-born gratification. He had the same confused notions of distance which we see the smallest children manifest, and took the liveliest pleasure in beholding the great variety of colors. In short, he was compelled to learn to see, in precisely the same manner that the smallest child does, and to him it was an occupation of the most gratifying nature.

CULTIVATION OF THE CRANBERRY.—Mr. Sullivan Bates, of Bellingham, Massachusetts, who is engaged in cultivating the Cranberry on uplands, gives the following directions and encouragements:

Prepare your soil the same as for sowing grain, by ploughing, harrowing and making it even, then mark it out in drills, 18 or 20 inches apart, hoe them slightly, at first, till the roots become clinched, and afterwards no cultivation is needed. The plants may be expected to run together and cover the whole soil in two or three years. The cranberry grown by cultivation usually yields from 150 to 400 bushels per acre; its fruit is two or three times as large as the wild fruit, and of a beautiful flavor; it readily keeps sound from the harvest time of it to the time of the harvest again.

Mr. Bates thinks almost any soil that will grow the potato is adapted to the cranberry. He furnishes the plants for seven dollars a thousand, and the cultivated fruit for $2 a box, 14 inches square by 7 deep.

The proper time for fall transplanting is October and November; for spring, from the opening of the same till about the 10th of May. [Chronotype.

TRADE BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.—We have a letter from a Newburyport ship-master, dated on the 12th of July, at San Francisco. He writes that he has obtained a freight of lumber from Oregon to San Francisco at $125 per thousand feet. He had twenty passengers from San Francisco to Oregon at $125 each. The total proceeds of the trip from Oregon will be about $14,000; estimated expenses $5,000; net profit of the trip down of about 25 days, $9,000. The Captain writes that he has been obliged to increase the wages of a boy who shipped here for six dollars to $125 per month. He says that if he wishes to be put ashore at San Francisco, he is obliged to pay six dollars, and no grumbling at that.

RUNNING AWAY FROM THE BLESSINGS OF SLAVERY.—Eight slaves attempted to cross the Ohio River below Maysville, on the night of the 10th instant, in order to get into Ohio and secure their freedom. There were too many of them for the skiff, which upset, and four were drowned. The other four clung to the bottom of the boat and cried for help, which came to them in the shape of a gentleman who had them all put in jail for their masters. Another slave, who was helping them across, was flogged to the extent of the law—39 lashes.

LONDON MILK.—Mr. Rugg has published an excellent pamphlet, in London, upon Adulterated Milk, milk from cows kept in close and perpetual imprisonment, and milk from cows diseased from other causes. The wonder with us is not that so many people die of cholera, fevers, &c. but that so many live. We have only room for the following extract:—

"If it has the effect thus represented by Dr. Garvin, of which there cannot be a shadow of doubt, how much more poisonous must it be to the poor animals confined within the narrow limits of their unhealthy sheds, where two large cows are only allowed six feet in width and scarcely a corresponding space either in depth or hight! What is the result but disease of the lungs, consumption, tuberculous deposits which run rapidly into suppuration; abscesses full of matter are formed, a portion of this matter is taken up by the blood and conveyed to the milk; and there is scarcely a drop of London milk, when placed under the field of a powerful microscope, but what traces of this matter is revealed floating therein, mixed with a bloody-like corruption. Considerable attention has been paid to this subject in Paris, where the milk has been found to contain a large quantity of pus or matter; this matter, as before stated, comes from the diseased cows that still give milk, thongh small in quantity; yet this milk is mixed with that which is somewhat more healthy, and the poisonous liquid is thus consumed by an unthinking and unreflecting public."

COLORED CONVENTION.—A convention of the colored people of Connecticut was held in New Haven last week. We learn from the Journal that it was very largely attended. Among the business transacted was the passage of the following resolutions unanimously:—

Resolved, That we regard the right of the elective franchise as one of the most invaluable and sacred rights of man, and at once the glory and the shield of civil government.

Resolved, That to deprive any class of men of this invaluable and inalienable right, and for a pretense release their property from a State tax, when at the same time they must bear their part of the expenses of the General Government, is not to be considered a favor, but is rather a measure calculated to fix upon them more deeply the invidious mark of political degradation.

LIBERTY PARTY STATE NOMINATIONS.—The Liberty Party State Convention which met at Cortland Village on Fourth day, the 12th, nominated the following ticket:—

For Judge Court of Appeals,	WILLIAM GOODELL.
" Secretary of State,	S. R. WARD.
" Controller,	LEWIS TAPPAN.
" State Treasurer,	CHAS D. MICLER.
" Attorney General,	JOHN THOMAS.
" State Eng. and Surveyor,	A. S. MARINAS.
" Canal Commissioner,	J. S. HARRINGTON.
" Inspector of Prisons,	FRANCIS LESLIE.

SUMMARY.

Louis Rol, a young German, was murdered in Philadelphia, by a German woman named Charlotte Levering. It seems that Rol made a remark to the woman which enraged her to such a degree that she seized a carving knife, and threatened to stab him if he repeated it. Rol bared his bosom and invited the blow, and the woman immediately plunged the knife in his body, killing him almost instantly.

The Erie Road extension to Elmira will be completed by the 1st October as originally intended. This will add 36 miles to the road. The extension to Corning will take place some time in November. The Chemung Road, connecting the Erie with Seneca Lake, will be ready by the 15th October, when a continuous route from New York to Buffalo will be formed, some six or eight hours shorter than via Albany, and a cheaper rate.

The Florida War is likely to become a serious charge upon the Treasury. The few remaining Seminoles are resolutely determined not to be driven from their hunting grounds. They are enthusiastically attached to their swamps, and will leave in them their bones. The portion of the Peninsula assigned them is remarkably well suited for Indian occupation, but utterly useless for whites.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says that the per centage of deaths from cholera in 1832 was 1 in 63,38 inhabitants; in 1834, 1 in 201,85; in 1849, 1 in 86,12, subject to an increase of per centage this year for the number of deaths which may hereafter occur from the disease.

Jesse Weatherford was killed by a slave, near Edgefield Court House, South Carolina, on Sunday, 2d inst. It seems that Weatherford attempted to prevent the negro from visiting his sweetheart, on a neighboring plantation, when the latter shot him.

It is said that one undertaker in Cincinnati has sold over twelve thousand dollars worth of coffins since the breaking out of the cholera. During the two months when the epidemic was at the greatest height, his labor in that field of operation amounted to more than eight thousand dollars.

There are upwards of four hundred letters addressed to individuals in California and the Sandwich Islands, lying in the San Francisco Post Office. They are all from the United States. They will remain where they are, until the transit postage of one rial is paid on each.

Three members from Ohio, of the last Congress, have died since the adjournment of that body on the 4th of March last, viz. Rudolphus Dickinson, of the VIth, or Sandusky District; Daniel Duncan of the Xth, or Licking District; and John C. Cummins, of the XVIth, or Tuscarawas District.

There were 390 licenses for taverns and coffee-houses granted in Cincinnati during the year ending the 1st inst. The greatest number were granted in the height of the cholera season; 141 having been granted during three days in June and July.

In 1848 there were 19,919 deaths in New York, and of this number only 4,863 were removed from the city for interment, the vast balance of 21,056 being deposited or interred in New York.

The Astor Place riot is likely to make a pretty heavy bill of expenses for New York. At a recent meeting of the Board of Aldermen, a Mr. McKinley petitioned for $500 remuneration, on account of the loss of his brother, who was killed on the 10th of May, but who was proved not to be a rioter. Dr. Kennedy claims $58 for medical services to Henry Myers, one of the wounded men on that occasion; and Dr. Blackman $20 for consulting fee in the same case! At a subsequent meeting of the Board, a doctor's bill for $700 was brought in.

The Syracuse Journal of the 15th says, that the whole number of tickets sold at the business office of the Society during the last two days of the N. Y. State Agricultural Fair, was 60,000 single, and 5,000 family. Consequently, the number that entered must have been over 100,000! This is the largest sale of tickets the Society has made since its organization.

In New York, the other day, we noticed a crowd collected around a dog merchant, who exhibited his wares at the corner of Fulton street and Broadway. He sold three white terriers, small, but of beautiful breed, for one hundred dollars. He asked $50 for two others, $30 for one, and $20 for another. Here the old saying was verified: "A fool and his money are soon parted.

The Buffalo Commercial of the 17th says that a telegraph communication has been received from Mr. Clay, by Mr. Hodges, of the American, stating that on arriving at Sandusky, his servant, Levi, was no where to be found. It is supposed that he was either accidentally left behind here, or has voluntarily escaped—the latter most probably.

The Boston Traveler of Sept. 17, says:—"We had the painful duty, a few days since, of noticing the death of Rev. Henry Colman; and to-day, we find the announcement in the Salem Register of the death of Mrs. Pickering Dodge, a beloved daughter of Mr. Colman, and also a brother of Mr. Colman, in Brookfield, N. H."

The Boston Traveler says that a letter has been received in that city from California, stating that the ship Leonora's Company had been offered $100,000 for the little iron steamboat which they took out with them, but they declined accepting it. They are confident that when she is in operation, she will make for them $1,000 per day.

Advices from the Upper Missouri state that the Pawnee Indians had on the 3d of August killed three of the Omaha Tribe, while the latter were engaged in hunting. A battle ensued the next day, which resulted in the defeat of the Pawnees, who lost much property, 42 horses, and 20 warriors, including some chiefs. The Omahas lost but 4 killed and 9 wounded.

Some time ago a Convention of delegates, representing towns, cities, and States, interested in the improvement of the Rapids in Mississippi River, was called at Davenport, Iowa. The day fixed upon was the 4th of July, but owing to the prevalence of the Cholera, the time of the meeting was postponed until the 10th of October next when it will be held.

The New Bedford Mercury says: We learn that letters have been received here, by the arrival of the Empire City at New-York, stating that serious difficulties have occurred among the Whaling Fleet on the Coast of Peru, growing out of the California fever and the consequent insubordination and desertion of seamen. We do not learn any particulars.

The steamboat owners on Lake Erie have formed a combination again. Gen. Reed of Erie is president. It is said that the compact gives the combination entire control of all the steam craft on the Lakes, that each boat is appraised, and scrip to the amount of her value issued to the owners, the association then placing her upon whatever route they see fit. The amount of capital thus combined is between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

By a recent regulation of the British Post-Office Department, any letter having the witer's name and residence engraved on the seal, or written on the outside, and not finding the party to whom the same is addressed, will be returned to the writer immediately through the Post-Office, and not through the Dead-Letter Office; by which regulation considerable anxiety and loss of time will be prevented.

The Trenton (N. J.) State Gazette of the 18th says: Our townsman, Andrew Thompson, machinist, of South-Trenton, has received a letter from his wife's mother in England, informing him that she is about coming into possession of two thirds of an immense estate in England, amounting to no less than £3,000,000. The property, it appears, was accumulated by a brother of the old lady's grandfather.

It is said that Dr. Gesner has discovered the remains of a Mammoth, in Cape Breton, N. B., a tooth of which was found some time ago. The skeleton is one of finest and most perfect specimens yet discovered, being upward of 14 feet high. It is valued at £1,000.

The ship Edward Everett, from Boston for San Francisco, with a large California Company, has been sold in the Pacific for $11,000, and the Company broken up.

There is a rose-bush flourishing near Bristol, Pa., known to be more than a hundred years old.

The friends of Father Mathew have started a new idea. It is that of raising a fund to release this good man from his obligations to the British Government. The amount named is thirty thousand dollars. This sum will free him at once from all pecuniary connection or dependence, and rid him of the personal liabilities which he has contracted, in advancing the cause of temperance in Ireland, and enable him to return to his beloved country, untrammeled and independent.

At Boston on Tuesday morning an Irish woman named Mary Faloy attempted to drown herself and child, a little girl about six years of age. She had been picked up drunk in the street the night previous and furnished with lodgings in the watch-house. She stated that she committed the act under the impression that she was commanded so to do by the Virgin Mary.

On the 27th ultimo, west of Egmont Bay, a large steam vessel, the Mary Kingsman, chartered by Government to carry to Tampa Bay 110 mules and 20 horses, having on board about 33 persons, teamsters and hands, exploded one of her boilers, by which 19 men were killed and 8 wounded—the latter brought to N. O., of whom two have died. All the horses and mules were so badly scalded or injured that they were thrown overboard.

Hon. Abram Lincoln, of Ill., has been appointed Governor of Oregon. Mr. Lincoln was conspicuous in the last Congress—especially during the last session, when he attempted to frame and put through a bill for the gradual Abolition of Slavery in the District of Columbia. He is a strong but judicious enemy to Slavery.

The Ohio Female College was dedicated at Cincinnati, with appropriate ceremonies, on the 4th inst. A large concourse was present on the interesting occasion, the ladies alone filling nearly the whole of the handsome and spacious chapel, which was beautifully decorated with wreaths of flowers and evergreens.

London papers announce the death, on the 30th of July, of the celebrated Jacob Perkins, formerly of Newburyport, and afterwards of Boston; but, for many years past, a resident of London. He was the inventor of engraving on steel, and the author of other improvements in the art of engraving. Mr. Perkins was in the 84th year of his age.

FLOWERS FOR THE BEE.

Come, honey-bee, with thy busy hum,
To the fragrant tufts of the wild thyme come,
And sip the sweet dew from the cowslip's head,
From the lily's bell and the violet's bed.
Come, honey-bee,
There is spread for thee
A rich repast in wood and field,
And a thousand flowers
Within our bowers
To thee their nectared essence yield.

Come, honey-bee, to our woodlands come,
There's a lesson for us in thy busy hum;
Thou hast treasure in store in the hawthorn's wreath,
In the golden broom and the purple heath;
And flowers less fair
That scent the air,
Like pleasant friends drop balm for thee,
And thou winnest spoil
By thy daily toil,
Thou patient, and thrifty, and diligent bee.

We may learn from the bee the wise man's lore,
"The hand of the diligent gathereth store."
He plies in his calling from morn till night,
Nor tires in his labor nor flags in his flight;
From numberless blossoms of every hue,
He gathers the nectar and sips the dew.
Then homeward he speeds
O'er the fragrant meads,
And he hums as he goes his thankful lay.
Let our thanks too arise
For our daily supplies,
As homeward and heavenward we haste on our way.

STORY OF A RUNAWAY SLAVE.

The narrative of Henry Box Brown, written by Charles Stearns, has been published at Boston. From a notice of the book, by the Editor of the Chronotype, the following is taken :—

Brown is an earnest religious man, bearing the index of stability and fidelity in his countenance. In spite of slavery, the ideas of Christian purity and benevolence had taken hold of him. He had fastened his heart to a wife, and the attachment had been cemented by three promising children. But one day the auctioneer's hammer came down upon all four, and they were gone. "Never fret about it," said his master, "marry another wife, and get some more children." The iron of that speech entered his soul. He began, with every fibre of the manhood in him, to plot his escape. No fool of a task is that, where every eye of every white man has nothing to do but to watch you, and every dog and every newspaper will bark on your track, and where, if you fail, tortures like the Inquisition's await you.

Henry had got possession of $166, and no financier in State-street could have husbanded it better, though the first investment did not turn out so good as might have been. He bought a friend with half of it. With him he consulted about the means of escape, anxiously, but to no purpose. At last, in answer to earnest prayer, as Henry says, it occurred to him to box himself up. He did it, enclosing with himself only a bladder of water, as a medicine, for the journey.

The box was properly addressed to a friend in Philadelphia, marked with the always ludicrously unheeded words, "this side up with care." The "friend" was put under a solemn pledge to accompany the box to its destination, and see to it. But he took it in his friendly head, as a purchased friend naturally would, merely to tumble the box into the express office at Richmond, and telegraph the consignee in Philadelphia of the fact. There was obviously no remedy for Brown. He seems to have been destined to undergo the fate of mere merchandize, for "an ensample" to the American people. As such, he was put through in the modern fashion, with despatch and without care. After waiting some time on his head at the express office, he was carted to the depot, and happened to fall right side up in the freight car. But on the Potamac steamer he rode nearly two hours on his head, till his eyes protruded, and he was on the point of suffocating, when he prayed earnestly, and, as it is in older cases on record, the Lord heard him, and sent two passengers, one of whom said, "Well, we have come twenty miles in two hours, now let's sit down and rest ourselves," and the two turned over his box and sat on it.

These angels of God's mercy speculated on the contents of the box, as they sat on it, and concluded it must contain the mail. At Washington he fell again on his head, and came near being left, but prayer again brought an angel in the shape of a gentleman, who said, "that box came with the mail, and must go on with it." In it was thrown, Brown's head downwards again, a mistake, however, which was rectified on righting the baggage at the next stopping place.

Twenty-seven hours from Richmond brought the box to the depot in the Quaker city, where it waited from 3 A. M. to 6 A. M., when the consignee, or receiving angel, with a mild voice, and a straight coat, of course, called and wished to know if a box, marked so and so, was there. "Yes." The freight was settled, and the box trucked to a wagon, and soon set down in the friend's parlor, where a circle of friends were waiting to witness—a resurrection. What a moment! There is the silent box. Is there a listening, knowing, strong-souled man in it, or a carcass fit for the dissecting room ? To Brown, too, it was a crisis. Was he among friends? Was he north of the slavery line ? Had his perils been for nothing, or was he at last to draw free breath through more than three gimblet holes ? He had the advantage of his outsiders. The voices of those Quaker women could have left no doubt in his mind that the hour of his delivery was approaching. There the box stood, and no Quaker meal ever had the blessing of so silent a Quaker grace. At last some good soul mustered the courage, with throbbing heart, to rap on the lid and ask, "Is all right ?" "All right," from within. "Here, —hammers, axes, chisels, pincers,—tear off the cover." Tears streamed with the work. The tough nails gave way on all sides, the pine cracked, the grave opened, and up rose the live man, but sunk back again in a swoon. "Air, water, let him breathe"—he was alive again. Up rose a humble, but strong prophet, whose voice is now touching thousands of breasts as with live coals from God's altar—to kindle them against slavery.

CHEAP PUBLISHING.—Sir Charles Lyell, in his "Second Visit to the United States," says :—

"A letter dated April 15, 1849, was lately shown me from the Harpers, with permission to make known its contents, in which they mentioned, that having been authorized by Mr. Macaulay to publish in America his 'History of England,' they had printed six editions at various prices varying from $4 to 50 cents—16s 6d to 2s. At the expiration of the first three months, they had sold 40,000 copies, and other booksellers who had issued independent editions had sold about 20,000 ; so that 60,000 copies had been purchased in the United States at a time when about 13,000 had been disposed of by Longman & Co. in London, at the price of £1 12s. each. As the cheap American editions were only just brought into the market at the date of this letter, the principal sale of the book was but commencing."

ALLIGATORS BOARDED AND LODGED.

We made an excursion lately to what is called here the "Muggar Tank," a lake of alligators, which lies in a small but beautifully situated grove of trees, surrounded by a range of low hills, about nine miles from Kurrachee. After having breakfasted, we proceeded to the spot where these hideous monsters are congregated. They are held sacred by the natives of the country, and are regularly fed by the contributions of devotees. The tank is more like an overflown meadow than a lake, having deep channels intersecting each other, and is literally alive with these huge "muggars," some lying basking on the knolls and ridges, others floating on the surface of the deep water. They are of all sizes, from a foot or two, to twenty or twenty-five feet in length, and bulky in proportion. Having purchased a kid, and cut it up on the banks, there was a universal opening of their capacious jaws, which kept distended in expectation of having a piece of flesh pitched into them ; they are too lazy, and too well fed, to make any further demonstration ; the native keeper, who feeds them, then began calling to them, when they came one by one lazily along, and waddling on to the shore, each took what was given to him. The rapidity with which the poor kid vanished, head and heels, was truly surprising. They knew the keeper quite well, and if one should take up what is not thrown to him, the keeper makes him drop it by striking him on the snout with his stick. Their jaws are certainly dreadful clap-traps, and the crash they make when brought together is horrible, crushing the bones even of the head of their prey like so much crust. It is probable, setting aside motives of superstition, that the inhabitants now find it necessary to feed those voracious monsters, for, were the "supplies to be stopped," they would become dangerous neighbors. In fact, they do at times pick up and devour a stray child left on the banks by accident or design. There are here three hot springs, one of which supplies the tank, and is of temperature as high as 180 degrees. The water issues from a rock as pure as crystal, and in great abundance. The females of the country repair to these springs after their confinement, to perform their ablutions, and to present their sacrifices to the "muggars." [Anglo-Indian paper.

A BROKEN HEART.

We sometimes hear it said that such a one died of a broken heart ; but we believe it is not generally known that this remark is often applicable in the most literal sense ; that the heart not only swells and bursts with anger, but is fretted away, more or less, by all the depressing passions which belong to fallen humanity. Yet such is the undoubted fact. George II. is not the only person who has worn out his heart in this way ; nor the celebrated John Hunter the only man who has dropped down dead in a fit of anger.

King George II. died as suddenly as if he had been shot through the heart, without any previous illness, at the age of 77. On examining the body, the left ventricle was found ruptured. The hole in it admitted with some difficulty the end of the finger.

George II. was a healthy man, and temperate in his habits of living, but very passionate ; sometimes his irascibility went farther than words. His countrymen the Germans, are perhaps the most passionate people on earth, and the rupture of the ventricles of the heart probable arises from violent passion impeded in the expression of it. The Irish are very passionate, and they never hesitate to express it in words or deeds ; whereas the Germans are a remarkably ceremonious race, and the upper ranks especially, bound down by the rules of decorum. There are more instances of sudden, violent fevers, and sudden deaths from gusts of passion to be found in the German writers, than in the medical books of other people.

Very few kings were more perplexed, crossed and aggravated, than the monarch in question. He was even compelled, after being without a ministry ten weeks, to accept for a prime minister the great man whom he always hated. And it is highly probable that his efforts, from time to time, to suppress his feelings, operated on the left ventricle principally, injuring and weakening a particular spot in the prime organ of life, which being weaker from great age than formerly, at last giving way, the brave old king died, literally of a broken heart.

May it not be well to inquire whether those on whom a rupture of the heart is found post mortem, had not been constitutionally and habitually liable to violent gusts of passion ?

A gentleman of our own country, now no more, was remarkably passionate, and never failed having a violent paroxysm, whenever his new clothes were brought home from the tailor's. As some articles were expected on "thanksgiving" morning, his wife begged and entreated of him not to get into a passion as usual ; and before they came obtained a promise that he would curb his feelings, let his clothes be what they might. They were brought, and by no means suited. His face was flushed, his eyes fiery, his breathing short, the veins of his neck and temples swelled, and he seemed ready to burst, when he fell on the floor senseless. By speedy and copious bleeding he recovered, but his family never afterward attempted to arrest the free expression of his choleric feelings. Was this apoplexy, or a heart ready to burst ? [Moral Reformer.

ADVENTURES OF CALIFORNIA EMIGRANTS.—An overland emigrant gives the following account of the fun they have on the trail to California :—

"Hunting buffaloes is the greatest amusement out. We can run them down in a three or four mile heat, and sometimes in one or two miles. We kill them that sometimes weigh twelve or fifteen hundred. It is just dangerous enough to make it right amusing. I have been thrown off my horse twice by their making at the horse. Once I came within an inch of being killed by one making a pitch at me, after being unhorsed, but I shot him by chance, so that I got off safe. I was riding my mule at the time. I have stopped the buffalo game with him ; it is too hard work. I caught an Indian horse, that was running loose, that can't be beat for buffaloes. We have some great times with the Indians. We expected to have a fight with them for the last few days, but I think the danger is over with them now. We fight more among ourselves than we do with the Indians. There have been four killed fighting, one with a buffalo, and sixteen died of sickness. That is doing very well for a company of eighty-one young men. I have never spent so happy a time in all my life.

If any of our chaps are coming out next Spring, tell them to bring a good horse—one that can go at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, and keep it up fifteen hours. My Indian can do it. If you were here, after one of these buffaloes, you would throw yourself right straight ; it beats chasing foxes all out. If any snipes are starting for California, tell them to stay at home, they can't come it. I have met 300 persons coming back and going home."

A LEAP FOR LIFE.

As the supervisor of inland revenue at Aberystwith, Mr. J. Miller, his nephew, and two professional gentlemen, geologists, were last week examining some strata of rocks in the cliffs between Aberystwith and Llanrhystid, they proceeded along a narrow ledge of projecting stone on the face of the cliff, about 120 feet above the level of the sea, which providentially happened to be at full flow. In passing round a projecting angle, "which for ages has frowned upon all below," the professors and the revenue officer had rounded the point, and the young man was in the act of doing so, when the rock suddenly breaking from under his feet, he was whirled round with his face toward the sea, and as he descended he seized with one hand the ledge beneath his uncle's feet, whilst he extended the other hand to him, and it was firmly clasped by the revenue officer, who held him supended for full five minutes, during which time he with great difficulty maintained his position, there not being more than six inches to stand upon. At length a breathless pause ensued, whilst Mr. Miller gazed on a rugged projection of rock about 90 feet below them, and on which he concluded the unfortunate youth was inevitably doomed to be dashed. But the uncle (who calls him "an awful coward") at length said, with all the calmness imaginable, "Tom, there is but one way for it ; I'll save you, or we will both perish together," and, with a firm voice, he commanded the young man to loose his hold of the rock, which was mechanically obeyed, with a faint reply, "Yes, uncle." At this awful moment Mr. Miller sprang horizontally into the air, carrying the young man with him ; and such was the force with which he leaped, that the check caused them to perform several somersets over each other as they descended linked together. With the rapidity of a flash of lightning they disappeared beneath the foaming billows, having cleared the craggy ledge, which projected more than six feet from the perpendicular of the point over which the youth was suspended. To the delight of their companions, who were momentarily horror-struck, they rose about 20 yards apart, buffeting the heavy swells of the flowing and returning waves ; at length they struck out for a rock that lay about 70 yards in the sea, on which they were seated, and from which they gave three hearty cheers. Their companions attempted to procure their rescue by obtaining a boat, but owing to a breach in the ledge, found it impossible, and had to proceed onward for more than three hours before they were able to extricate themselves. To their delight, the geologists then found that their brave and dauntless companions had once more committed themselves to the deep, and had swum to an accessible part of the cliff, and returned to Llanrhystid, where, with the exception of the loss of hats, the officer's boots (which he had taken off on first starting on the ledge,) and a few slight cuts and bruises, they appeared not a whit the worse for their perilous adventure. THE SIOUX INDIANS.

M. N. Adams, writing from Lac-que-parie, Minnesota, on the 4th ult., gives the Central Watchman the following facts relative to the Dakots or Sioux indians :

The Sioux nation is estimated at about 25 or 30,000 souls. The territory now occupied by these heathens is vast, and much of it very fertile. It lies chiefly within 43 and 46 degrees north latitude, and stretches from the St. Peters on the East, to the Missouri on the West. The great mass of this nation are as yet in a savage state. Their main dependence for a livelihood, as yet, is hunting. There are some bands on the Mississippi and down near the mouth of the Saint Peter's, that receive annuties ; and for whom the United States Government provides farmers. These fare comparatively well ; but the great mass are obliged to depend upon game for subsistence. To hunt, is part of their religion, and they have a god who presides over the hunting department. The native women, plant small fields of corn. They sometimes dig up their fields with their hoes, plant the corn, hoe it, gather it and store it away, without the least assistance on the part of the men. As in all heathen countries, the female sex is shamefully degraded. The women cut and carry the wood, water, and all heavy burdens—build the houses, make moccasins, plant and gather, and when traveling, they walk, carrying tent and baggage, while the men, mounted on horseback, canter on ahead, and at their leisure dismount and smoke until the rear comes up—the tent is pitched, and food ready; then they eat, either to lie down and sleep, or to rise up and play. Buying wives is common among this people. When a woman is thus bought, she is at the mercy of the purchaser, and although she is well pleased to live with him, she is liable at any time to be thrown away, or put aside, that her husband may suit himself better in the choice of another. Hence you see the marriage institution as it exists here, is but little else than a mere custom of convenience for those who control it. The power by which it is regulated is confined to the one party alone, while the other is forced to confess herself a widow, or her children orphans, although their father yet lives. Such a thing as parental authority is scarcely known here. There seems to be no restraint upon the children and youth. They are left to grow up rude, wild and uncultivated, as the game they pursue.

CHARACTER AND PROSPECTS OF OREGON.—The Peoria Register contains a letter from Hon. William Bryant, Chief Justice of Oregon, to his brother in Peoria, under date of "Oregon City, April 18," which says :

"I am far better pleased with this country than I expected to be. It is decidedly a good and very desirable country. It produces as well as the States all the smaller grains and vegetables which we are accustomed to in the Western States. The country is, beyond all doubt, as healthy as any country can be. This city contains from 1,500 to 2,000 inhabitants, and is a very flourishing place. It is situated 35 miles above where the Willamette empties into the Columbia River, and from there it is about 125 miles down the Columbia to the ocean. The Falls at this place furnish, I have no doubt, the best water-power in the world, and can be applied to machinery, with less expense or capital than any place I ever saw. The whole country is covered with a very thick growth of timber, principally fir, cedar and pine, wherever there are streams of water. Up this valley, and at many other places, there are very rich and fertile prairies. A great many explorations will take place from here this Summer, and I have no doubt that gold will be found in abundance in this Territory. It is ruining the country. A good house-joiner, carpenter or miller—either for grist or saw mills—receives $10 per day in gold paid him every day. This is the most beautiful country that man ever enjoyed life in. The society is as good as it is anywhere in the West, and you would like it just as well ; like all new countries, the people are free and candid, and enjoy life."

ASTOR LIBRARY.—The work of demolition has commenced among the shrubbery and stately trees of Vauxhall Garden in Lafayette Place, near the Italian Opera House, New-York, preparatory to laying the foundation walls of the Astor Library building. It will be built in the Byzantine style, or rather, in the style of the Royal Palaces of Florence, and consequently will present a strongly imposing appearance, both in its external and internal structure. Its dimensions will be 120 feet in length, by 65 wide, and from the level of the side-walk to the upper line of the parapet, its hight will be 67 feet—built of brown cut stone. The amount authorized to be expended in the erection of this building is $75,000—of course exclusive of furniture and shelving. The latter will cost, probably, $8,000. Two years, it is expected, will be required to complete it. The architect is Mr. Alex. Saelizer, from Berlin, a pupil of the celebrated Schinkel. The entire appropriation for the library and building is $400,00, of which about one-half is to be funded for the benefit of the library —thus insuring to it a perpetuity such as similar institutions but seldom possess. By the efforts of Mr. J. G. Cogswell, in England and on the continent, about 20,000 volumes have been collected and are now in his keeping.

STEAMBOAT STOLEN IN PORTLAND.—The small steamer Experiment was stolen on Sixth-day night from the Ferry Wharf in Portland. On Sunday Mr. Chandler, one of the owners, began to look round for his property—and taking a sloop started to hunt her up. Getting down to Trundy's Reef, he discovered the Experiment about six miles to the eastward. Having come up with her, he found only a young man aboard, by the name of Wm. Place of Augusta. The water was entirely exhausted from the boiler, and the engine had stopped, anchor over, and thirty fathoms hawser out. It is a great wonder that she did not blow up, as they evidenly had had a large fire going, and knew nothing of the management of an engine. Two men were seen to escape from her in a small boat to Cape Elizabeth. They intended, Place said, to carry her to Portsmouth, paint her over, and run her for a ferry boat. When they took her they cut a hole in her stern and sculled her out of the harbor to avoid making a noise with her steam.

REWARDS FOR ARTISTS.—The Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts has issued a circular, in which that Institution offers three prizes, one of $750, one of $500, and one of $250, to be awarded to the artists who shall produce the first, second and third best pictures on a historical, scriptural or dramatic subject ; the painting to be not less than 40 by 50 inches in size, and to be delivered at the Academy on or before the 10th of April, 1850. The Academy also offers two other prizes, one of $300 and one of $200, for landscape or marine views, to be 54 by 40 inches.

REMEDY FOR THE APPLE WORM.—The apple worm is very destructive generally, and in a year of scarcity, like the present, they injure nearly all the fruit. As a remedy, let small animals run in the orchard and eat all the fruit as it falls ; or pick up the fruit, every day, and cook it, for swine, or in some way destroy the worms contained in it. If old clothes be hung around the crotches of trees, the worms will take shelter therein, and may be destroyed. By carefully scraping off the loose bark of apple-trees in the spring, many chrysalids will be destroyed.

TO MEASURE HAY IN THE STACK.—More than twenty years since, says a practical farmer, I copied the following method of measuring hay from some publication, and having verified its general accuracy, I have both bought and sold by it, and believe it may be useful to many farmers where the means of weighing are not at hand. "Multiply the length, breadth and height into each other, and if the hay is somewhat settled, ten solid yards will make a ton. Clover will take from ten to twelve yards per ton."

VINEGAR FROM BEETS.—It is stated that the juice of one bushel of sugar beets will make from five to six gallons of vinegar, by washing, grating, expressing, and exposing two weeks to the air in the barrel, with a gauze-covered bung-hole.

THE NOBLE-HEARTED SAILOR BOY.

A little boy twelve years of age, poor and ragged, came into the cars between Boston and Fall River. There was a slight shrinking from him, manifested by some of the well-dressed passengers. He took his seat quietly near me ; and a sea-captain who entered at the same time told me his touching story.

I learned that he was a poor orphan, and three days before he had been wrecked near Montauk Point ; the schooner upon which he was, being struck by a white squall and instantly sunk. While the lad was floating upon some wood, a vessel near, which had seen the accident, sent forth its boat to save from a watery grave any who might be rescued. They spied the little boy floating amid the waste of waters, and approached him ; but he, with a generosity, alas ! too rare, cried out, "Never mind me ; save the captain ; he has a wife and six children." Poor fellow ! he knew that the captain had those who loved him, and would need his support.

The captain, in telling me the story, was much affected, and said, with a generosity characteristic of the mariner, "The boy has only the clothes you see, sir, or he would not be so ragged. I care not for myself, though I too lost all, but the poor lad will have a hard time of it."

Several persons, on hearing this story, gave small sums to the poor orphan, and advised him to make a statement to other passengers, who would doubtless give something.

"I am not a beggar," was the only answer ; "I don't wish to beg their money."

At this moment a fine, benevolent individual arose in a seat near me, and offered to plead for him who would not prefer his own claim. Most successful was the warm-hearted appeal which he made to the passengers, and ten dollars was collected.

VARIETY.

Valuable works in ivory, that have become soiled or greatly discolored by time, may be restored to their original and pristine whiteness, by exposing them for a time to the sun's rays, under glasses. This protection should, by no means, be neglected, as, deprived of it, the action of the calorific rays induces a tendency in the ivery to crack, which gives it a more displeasing appearance than before. Ivory may be effectually bleached by heating it moderately over a fire of charcoal, into which there is thrown, occasionally, a small quantity of flour of sulphur.

One of the most effective and deadly weapons in the hands of the Hungarians, is that peculiar to the horseherds or chykosz, who are an important portion of the army. This weapon is a whip, with a handle two feet in length, a thong 20 feet long ; at the end of this thong is a leaden ball, and at intervals smaller ones, like shot on a fishing line. It is thrown with great precision and fatal effect. The Austrians could not at first make out what sort of wounds those were which destroyed so many men. These horse herds muster several thousands, and act with the light hussars.

The Paris correspondent of the Literary Gazette remarks of queer titles : "There are now published in French newspapers romances called 'The Red Spirits,' 'The Bloody Marchioness,' 'The Bloody Shoes,' and there have lately been published, 'Digging into the Earth with one's Nails,' 'How are You ?' 'The Midnight Bludgeon,' and so on."

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific ; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00 ; Writing, including Stationery, 50c. ; Tuition on Piano, $8 00 ; Use of Instrument, $2 00 ; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
RICHARD H. BULL, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE PEACE CONGRESS IN PARIS.

We have already given a sketch of the proceedings of the Peace Congress during the first two days of its session. Below we give the three most interesting speeches made on those days—that of M. Victor Hugo on the design of the Congress, that of Mr. Vincent on Arbitration, and that of Mr. Cobden on Disarmament. Then follows an account of the proceedings of the third and last day, as given by the Non conformist.

Speech of M. Victor Hugo.

M. Victor Hugo, representative of the people, came forward and took the chair. The honorable gentleman was received with loud applause. On his left was M. Coquerel, representative of the people and Protestant clergyman, and on the right M. Deguerry, cure of the Madeline. After a moment's pause, he rose and delivered the following address:—

"Gentlemen,—Many of you have come from the most remote quarters of the globe, your hearts full of religious and holy thoughts. You number in your ranks public men, philosophers, ministers of religion, eminent writers, and many of those public men who are the lights of their nation. You have wished to date from Paris the declarations of this Assembly of convinced and serious men, who desire not only the welfare of one people, but also that of all nations. You have come to add to the principles which at the present time influence statesmen, governors, and legislators, a superier principle. You have come to turn over in some sort the last and most august prayer of the gospel, that which enjoins peace on the children of God; and in this city, which has hitherto only cheered the fraternity of citizens, you have come to proclaim the fraternity of men.

Gentlemen, we bid you hearty welcome. Gentlemen, is this religious thought; the universal peace of all nations, bound to one another by a social bond, not of the gospel? Is this idea capable of realization? Many political men reply, no! As for myself, I reply with you, without hesitation, yes! (loud applause.) And I shall try to prove the truth of my statement immediately. But I go farther. I not only say, that it is an object capable of being realized, but that it is inevitable; all that can be done is to hasten or retard its consummation. The law of the world is not and cannot be distinct from the law of God. But the law of God is not war but peace. Men begin with struggles, just as creation commenced with chaos. Whence do they come? Evidently from war. Whither are they going? To peace. When you affirm these lofty truths, it is quite plain that your affirmation meets with negation, that your faith meets with incredulity, that in this hour of our troubles and of our commotions the idea of universal peace surprises and alarms every one as being the apparition of something impossible and ideal.

It is quite possible that our views will be called Utopian; and, as far as concerns myself, an humble and obscure laborer in the great work of the nineteenth century, I accept this appellation without being either astonished or discouraged by it. Is it possible for you to prevent people turning aside their heads, and closing their dazzled eyes, when, in the darkness which still surrounds us, you suddenly open the radiant gate of the Future? If any one, gentlemen, four centuries ago, during the time when commune waged war against commune, town against town, and province against province; if any one had said to Lorraine, to Picardy, to Normandy, to Bretagne, to Auverne, to Provence, to Dauphiny, to Burgundy, A day will come when you will no longer make war—when men will no longer bear arms one against the other—when it will no longer be said, 'the Normans have attacked Picardy,' or, 'The men of Lorraine have beaten the Burgundians;' you will still have many difficulties to arrange, many interests to discuss, many disputes to settle; but do you know what you will put in the place of armed men? of infantry and cavalry? of cannon and falconets? of lances, pikes, and swords? You will put in the place of all these a little wooden box, which you will call the ballot-box, and from that box will proceed an assembly, an assembly in which you will feel that you all live, which will act as a soul to all of you—a sovereign and popular council—which will decide, will judge, will settle all questions—which will make the sword fall from the hands of all, and justice rise in every heart—which will say to each man, 'Here ends thy right, there begins thy duty! lay down your arms! live in peace!' and on that day you will feel that you have one common thought, common interest, a common destiny; you will embrace one another, you will recognize one another as children of the same blood and of the same race. On that day you will cease to be hostile tribes; you will no longer be Burgundy, Provence, Normandy, Brittany—you will be France. Appeals will no longer be made to war, but to civilization, (loud applause.) If at the period I allude to, such words had been uttered, all men of serious character, and all great politicians of that day would have exclaimed—What a dream! what ignorance of the human heart! what folly! Time, however, has gone on, and this dream, this folly! has been realized. Well, you say at the present day, and I join with you in saying it, all of us here present speak to France, to England, to Prussia, to Austria, to Spain, to Italy, to Russia, and say, 'A day will come when arms shall fall from your hands also, when war will appear as absurd, and will be as impossible between Paris and London, between Vienna and Turin, or between St. Petersburgh and Berlin, as it would now appear absurd between Rouen and Ameins, or between Boston and Philadelphia.' A day will come, when France, Russia, Italy, England, Germany, all the nations of the Continent, without losing your distinguishing characteristics, and your glorious identity, will be merged into a superior unity, and shall form an European fraternity, just as Normandy, Brittany, Burgundy, Lorraine, Alsace, have been blended into France. The day will come when the only battle-field shall be the market open to commerce and to the new ideas of the mind. A day will come when bullets and shells will be replaced by votes, by universal suffrage, and by the arbitration of a great sovereign senate, which shall be to Europe what the Parliament is to England, or the Diet to Germany, or the Legislative Assembly to France. (Loud applause.) The time will come when a cannon will be exhibited as an old instrument of torture, and wonder will be expressed how such a thing could have been used. A day, I say, will come when the United States of America, and the United States of Europe, will be seen extending to each other the hand of fellowship across the ocean, and when we shall have the happiness of seeing everywhere arising the majestic radiation of universal concord. Subject worthy of meditation.

It is our precautions against war which have brought about revolutions. All has been done, all expended against an imaginary danger. Misery—the real danger—has thus been aggravated. Nevertheless, gentlemen, let us not despair; on the contrary, let us hope more than ever; let us only regard our epoch in its proper light. After all, it is a prodigious and admirable epoch, and the nineteenth century will constitute the most important page of history. One kind of progress brings on another; the fall of national animosities, the obliteration of fronteirs from the map, and of prejudices from the heart; a tendency to unity and the level of education, the predominance of the most literary languages all move at the same time, and converge to the same end—the creation of well-being and good-will—the extinction of misery at home and of war abroad (immense applause.) Yes, the era of revolutions is drawing to a close, and that of improvements beginning. The improvement of nations leaves its violent form and takes a peaceable one. The time is come when Providence will substitute, for the disorderly action of agitators, the religious and calm action of peace-makers (loud applause.)

Henceforward this will be the object of true politics; the recognition of all nationalities—the restoration of the historical unity of the people, the connection of this country with civilization by means of peace—the incessant enlargement of the civilized world—the giving of a good example to nations that are still barbarous—the substitution of arbitration for battles, and, to crown the whole, the utterance by justice of the last word which this ancient world uttered by force. Gentlemen, I say in conclusion, and let this thought encourage us, is it not to-day that the human race is traversing this providential road? In our old Europe, England has taken the first step, and has said to the people: You are free. France has taken the second step, and said to the people: You are sovereign. Now let us take the third step, and let France, England, Belgium, Germany, Italy, Europe, and America, all unite in saying to the people: You are brethren!"

[Immense applause followed this address. The cheers were repeated over and over again; and at last three hurras were given in the English fashion.]

Speech of Mr. Vincent.]

Henry Vincent, Esq. rose, and was greeted with loud cheering. He said:—

I am so overwhelmed at the sight of this magnificent meeting, that nothing but a strong desire to call upon you to adhere closely to the resolution under discussion could have induced me to address you at this time. I cannot, however, omit the opportunity of expressing the delight I feel in witnessing the triumphant advance of our righteous cause (cheers.) We are in the civilized and polite city of Paris—and it is fitting that we should be here—we, who are a portion of the old Saxon race—and we love our French brethren, (great cheering) and wish to bring about that union between the two nations that shall promote the interests of peace and civilization throughout the globe (loud cheering.) We come to give a practical direction to the floating sentiments in favor of peace, and to adopt a policy that shall command the respect and support of all the friends of human improvement (loud cheers.)

There are many here—and I am one—who regard war to be a great curse, and an open resistance to all the morality and spirit of the Christian religion (repeated cheers.) There are others, whom we highly esteem, who oppose war from commercial and financial motives, and from impulses of a philanthropic and humane nature; and this Congress seeks to combine these great elements of social power, and to guide them into the channel of practical usefulness (cheers.) The arbitration question is the first upon which we wish to fix your attention (hear, hear.) We wish the quarrels of governments to be settled without an appeal to arms, and we think there is nothing Utopian in this wish (cheers.)

Now, I caution you against discussing probabilities and difficulties that may or may not occur in the present state of public opinion. It is because difficulties exist that we are assembled in this Congress. Our design is to convince the governments and people that 'arbitration' is more Christian, more humane, and more economical than war (cheers.) This sentiment once created and diffused will soon devise the most effective method for accomplishing its object. I differ from my American friend, who thinks we must necessarily discuss the details of our system here. That is the business of a smaller meeting (hear, hear.) Our duty is simply to demonstrate the value of our principles; and whenever governments are disposed to adopt them, other difficulties will immediately vanish (cheers.) And may we not appeal to some extent to the practice of nations, civilized and savage? Arbitration always exists in one form or another; but it is seldom used in time (hear, hear.) I ask the illustrious orators and senators around me, whether war ever settled a single dispute? (loud cries of 'Hear, hear.') War complicates a quarrel, extinguishes a sense of justice, inflames old national animosities, creates new antipathies, enkindles unholy passions, wastes the resources of nations (loud cheering.) But arbitration must commence before peace can be restored (cheers.)

We say, therefore, that arbitration should precede a war, but not follow it (loud cheers.) We say, that if a small proportion of the effort expended in war were expended upon the policy of arbitration our victory would be complete. Our progress, too, is so encouraging that that we have the strongest faith in our future success. Already in the National Assembly of France—and in the Parisian press—are voices raised in response to our own (hear, hear.) In the English Parliament our distinguished countryman, Richard Cobden, (loud cheering,) raised this question amid general sympathy. In spite of sneers from a few, he succeeded in fixing the idea in the mind of the Parliament, and in securing for it the most respectful attention at the hands of the existing ministry (loud cheers); and I, who know something of the spread of public opinion, know of no cause that has lately made more way in England than this (loud cheers.)

Encouraged by what we have done, let us advance. Let this great Congress influence our zeal. Let those who believe in the essential sinfulness of all war, rejoice with me in the rapid diffusion of our principles, and in the fact that the great moral, unsectarian truths of the gospel are at the basis of this movement (loud cheers,) and see how all the intellectual and material influences of the age are working with us. Education aids in the work of civilization, and makes inroads upon the dominion of brute force. Science, in ministering to the wants and comforts of man, aids us in our great endeavor. The freetrade policy, that everywhere grows in public esteem, calls the commercial and industrious spirit to our side. That steam that wafted us in one day from London to Paris is our friend (cheers)—it breaks down the barriers of distance and time—it runs nation into nation, annihilating and scattering national hatreds around it (loud cheering.) Be cheerful, then: all modern influences are with us; and this Congress will aid in blending the moral power of France and England together, until these great nations are united in the holy resolve to give, by the force of their example and teaching, civilization and peace to the world (loud cheering.) We shall surmount all difficulties and conquer all prejudices, and enter even the true Utopia, by basing all our aspirations upon the laws of God, and upon the progressive characteristics of our noble race." (Mr. Vincent resumed his seat amid loud and continued cheering.)

Speech of Mr. Cobden.

R. Cobden, Esq., was received with loud cheers and waving of hats, and spoke in French as follows:—

M. le President—I join with all my heart in the wish expressed by one of the speakers, that we could have one universal language. Nevertheless, I am a little afraid that there might be a dispute, even amongst the friends of peace, as to which of the thousand dialects of the world ought to prevail, and that oceans of ink, at least, would be shed before it was decided (laughter and cheers.) In the meantime let every country enjoy in peace its own dictionary and grammer; and it is on this principle, recollecting that I am in the metropolis of France, that I prefer to throw myself upon the well-known politeness of a French audience, whilst I address to them a few words in broken French, rather than be guilty of an act of foreign intervention (loud cheers), even in the matter of language.

So much has been said, and so well said, by the eloquent speakers who have preceded me, that I do not feel it necessary to add a word to the general argument; but I should wish to draw your attention for a moment to the manner in which the governments of your country and mine have augmented their standing armaments in mutual rivalry and defiance of each other. I speak only of our navies and coast defenses, for we do not pretend to enter into a competition with you in respect to your army. Do not be alarmed, Mr. President, I am not going to infringe upon the wise regulations of the Congress, which forbid our alluding to the politics of the day. Unfortunately, my grievance extends back for many years, and implicates several ministers in both countries; although your present government must certainly be exempted from all responsibility in the matter. Now, during the last thirteen years you and we have been constantly increasing our navies, adding to our coast defenses, enlarging our arsenals, building new basins for steam vessels, and constructing fresh harbors of refuge. No sooner is the keel of another line-of-battle-ship laid down in your dock-yards, than forthwith fresh hammers begin to resound to Portsmouth (laughter and cheers.) A new forge is hardly begun to work at Cherbourg, when immediately the sparks are seen to fly from fresh anvils at Partsmouth, and vice versa. The consequence has been that the cost of our navies has been increased fifty per cent. in a time of peace.

My first objection is to the extreme folly of this system (loud applause), for as both countries increase their naval strength in equal proportion, neither party has gained anything by the change, the only result being a pure waste to the amount of the augmentation (cheers.)

My next objection is to the extreme hypocrisy (laughter) of this system; for, at the very time that all this increase of armament has been going on, our respective governments have been exchanging assurances of mutual feelings of friendship (loud laughter and cheering) and goodwill. If these professions were made in sincerity and truth, where was the necessity for more ships of war and more coast defenses? An individual does not cover himself with armor in the presence of his friends, unless indeed he happens to be mad (laughter.)

But my greatest objection to these vast armaments is, that they tend to excite dangerous animosities between the two nations (cheers,) and to perpetuate fear, hatred and suspicion—passions which find their gratification instinctively in war. And here is the great reason why this Congress desires, in the terms of the motion before it, to bring the nations into a system of disarmament. Now, how shall this be accomplished? Why, by teaching our respective governments this little arithmetical problem, of which, in times past, they seem to have been ignorant—namely, that if two nations are both armed, in a time of peace, up to a certain point, say 6, they are not relatively stronger than if their armaments stood both at 3, and that they would be equally strong relatively if they disarmed altogether (loud cheers.) But you, the tax-payers of France, will see that there is an immense difference to your pockets (laughter.)

Do not, however, let us deceive ourselves with the idea that we shall easily succeed in teaching this little arithmetical lesson to our governments. I speak from long experience when I say that no men are so difficult to teach as professional statesmen (laughter and loud cheers). They are so devoted to routine, and so fortified in self-sufficiency, that they do not easily believe that any wisdom exists in world the except that which radiates from their bureaux (laughter and cheers). Do you suppose, then, that they will listen readily to the advice of this Congress? On the contrary, they are at this moment laughing at us as Utopists, theorists and dreamers (laughter). And yet I think the result of their system, in a financial point of view, ought to make them more modest (cheers).

Ask the governments of Europe, Can you continue your present financial system for ten years longer? With scarcely one exception they must answer, "No." Is it then Utopian on the part of the Congress to arouse their attention to the subject, to point out the great gulf which yawns before them, to show that the danger of financial ruin which they lose sight of is far more imminent than the risk of foreign attack, which they so constantly dread and so diligently provide against (applause). Even in this, the lowest point of view, as a question merely of finance, you stand justified before the world for holding this Congress of nations. It is time that the people interfered, and the governments of the world ought to tender you their thanks for having, by this fraternal shaking of hands across the Atlantic and the channel (loud cheers), facilitated that process of disarmament which is called for alike upon every principle of humanity and sound policy (loud and repeated cheering).

Third and Last Day.

Friday was the last day of the Congress. By the judicious arrangements of the committee, the proceedings were brought to a close one day sooner than had been originally intended. The interest and enthusiasm of the audience, which was more numerous than on either of the preceding days, and filled every portion of the building, were sustained to the last, and it was a source of regret to many that the Congress should so soon be brought to a close. Towards the end of the proceedings, crowds gathered about the building unable to obtain admission, and in the adjacent street large numbers were congregated discussing the object of the meeting.

Extreme difficulty was found in reconciling the conflicting claims of the speakers and the auditors. There was, in fact, a redundance of orators. On the previous day there were no less than 24 names down on the list to speak on the disarmament question, and on this day the supply far exceeded the demand. It may be imagined that the position of the committee was one of no little difficulty.

The greater portion of the sitting was occupied in speaking of the third resolution, which proposed a Congress of Nations. The earnestness and eloquence of the speakers and the enthusiasm of the audience seemed to increase as the time for separation approached. First came the Abbe Duguerry, habited in the priest's garb, and possessed of a noble and benevolent countenance. The rev. gentleman, who is cure of the Madeline, and one of the most respected and popular clergymen in Paris, addressed the meeting with much eloquence, and was frequently interrupted with the most rapturous applause. He treated the question chiefly in a religious point of view. M. Duguerry is all the more qualified to speak on such a subject, as he was, in his earlier days, an officer of cavalry. He was one of the most intimate and beloved friends of Chateaubriand, and it was in his arms that the illustrious author of Atala and the Genia du Christianisme breathed his last.

Two French gentlemen startled the meeting by advocating the necessity of war; one of them, M. Billecocq, Consul-General, endeavored to demonstrate that war was inevitable; and the other, M. Feline, wished to make an exception in favor of what he called "a defensive war," as distinguished from a war of aggression. Both, however, were prevented from proceeding. The first was replied to by M. Girardin, who observed, that only one speech had been made in favor of war, and that furnished the best argument in favor of peace. Then followed Mr. Hindly, M. P., who spoke in both languages, and was heartly applauded, and Mr. Miall, who came forward in obedience to a general call, and delivered a brief but pithy address, "the reasoning of which," says the Times, "was most logical and to the purpose."

Variety was given to the proceedings by the appearance of two colored gentlemen among the speakers. The first of these was Mr. J. Brown, an escaped slave from the United Staaes of America, who addressed the meeting in a speech well delivered, and which brought down great and general applause, except in those parts where, by a slight transgression of the rules, he alluded to the revolution of July and the glorious hopes it had engendered. The principle point of his address was the necessity of destroying the great element of war in the American States, namely, the slave trade. He himself had worn the chains of slavery. he said, for twenty years, and had he spoken in the capital of Republicanism the words he uttered in Paris, he should have been strung up by the neck.

The Rev. Mr. Penninton also, with great pathos and effect, dwelt upon the same topic, and seemed almost overcome by his emotions. Both gentleman were cordially congratulated by the Chairman and Vice-Presidents.

We have not space to refer more particularly to the other speakers of the day, but cannot avoid saying a word relative to some of the silent members. Neither Mr. Burritt, nor Mr. Sturge, nor Mr. Richard, made set speeches—probably because there were so many members of Congress whose claims they may have thought superior, or perhaps that they had been almost exhausted by their incessant exertions in preparing for its session. On each day Mr. Burritt sat in a retired part of the platform, apparently absorbed in deep attention, and scarcely able to realize the fact, that the great idea upon which he had expended years of toil and anxiety was near being realized. A most interesting paper prepared by him was, however, read in French, which was received with much applause. We will not attempt to describe it, as no doubt every one will peruse it for himself, and learn from it how far the great question has progressed since his philanthropic mind gave it birth.

The proceedings were brought to a close at a quarter past six o'clock. The farewell address of the President was most eloquent and touching. It happened that it was the anniversary of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and the coincidence, of which the eloquent Chairman was only reminded a short time before he spoke, was made use of by him in a masterly manner. He reminded his auditory that in the same place where streams of blood once flowed, and the tocsin of destruction was heard from the tower now standing near them, and where unheard-of atrocities were committed in the name of religion, men were assembled on a mission of peace and love—men from distant countries, and members of various sects. The Catholic and the Protestant, the Quaker and the Presbyterian, grasped each other's hands in brotherly love, and the ministers of different forms of Christain worship led the way in that holy work. We never saw enthusiasm excited to such a pitch as at that momoment. The acclamations died away only to be renewed again and again, and at length the Americans and English stood up and gave seven rounds of hurrahs.

After nine hearty cheers to various parties in response to the resolution of thanks, that made the building ring—Mr. Cobden performing the part of fugleman—the meeting slowly dispersed, and found outside a crowd of curious spectators who appeared to regard with strange interest the foreigners who had crossed the Channel and the Atlantic, to indoctrinate them with the principle of peace and good-will towards all men.

On the following day, most of the foreign visitors made the most of their time in visiting the lions of the French capital. It is worthy of note that, notwithstanding the attractions out of doors, the members, with apparently scarcely any exceptions, punctually attended the sittings of the Congress.

THE CITY OF ROME.

Rome is still where it has been more than 2600 years; it is upon the Tiber, sixteen miles from its mouth, which runs through the western part of the city, and then turns west, and continues that course to its outlet, where it is some three hundred feet wide. Much of what was formerly covered with buildings, is now cultivated. This is particularly the case with much of the south-east part within the city walls and east and south of the Capitoline Hill. Bad air (malaria) is said to be the cause of the desertion of this part of the city. The ancient hills are still to be found, but are by no means so prominent as they once were, on account of the valleys having been filled up by the rubbish constantly accumulating. In this way the place of the ancient forum has been filled up at least fifteen feet. The land at the base of the Tarpeian rock is so much filled up that the modern traveler is prone to think that it would be far from certain death to be thrown from its top. It is not, as formerly, seventy-five feet high, with heaps of rocks below. In the northeast part are extensive gardens, and on the west side of them are the residences of the English and Americans.

The palace of the Pope is near the centre of the city. The church of St. Peter is on the west side; it is 750 ft. long, and 550 wide, and will hold 52,000 people. It cost $50,000,000.

The statue of St. Peter stands not far distant. It was formerly the statue of Jupiter, and was changed by some of the early Popes into that of the Apostle by some mysterious power, without changing its material substance in the least; which gave rise to the remark of the wag, that it was formerly the statue of Jupiter, and it is that of Jew-Peter still. The report that the great toe of this statue had been entirely worn away by the lips of the catholics, is not exactly true. It is a protestant stander. Yet it is true that the repeated kisses of the faithful for hundreds of years have worn it away considerably. No catholic passes it without stooping to kiss it. To see poor ignorant people do so, is bad enough; but to see men of learning and science, and of cultivated minds, like the Pope and Cardinals, constantly approaching this image with all reverence, and wiping his toe with their handkerchiefs, kiss it, wipe it again, and go on their way, is quite beyond endurance. One can have no patience with them. [Baird.

LIFE'S GUIDING STAR.

BY WM. LEGGETT.

The youth whose bark is guided o'er
  A summer stream by zephyr's breath,
With idle gaze delights to pore
  On imaged skies that glow beneath;
But should a fleeting storm arise
  To shade a while the watery way,
Quick lifts to heaven his anxious eyes,
  And speeds to reach some sheltering bay.

'Tis thus, down time's eventful tide,
  While prosperous breezes gently blow,
In life's frail bark we gayly glide,
  Our hopes, our thoughts all fixed below.
But let one cloud the prospect dim,
  The wind its quiet stillness mar,
At once we raise our prayer to Him
  Whose light is life's best guiding star.

A FAITHFUL LABORER.

Rev. F. O. Nelson is now laboring with great success in Gottenburg, Sweden. He was formerly a seaman. He is a man of natural eloquence, and is untiring in his zeal to promote the glory of God. Emphatically it may be said of him, that he labors "in season and out of season, reproving, rebuking, with all long-suffering and doctrine." He endeavors to improve every opportunity to point sinners to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." We will mention an interesting anecdote or two in proof of this.

Some years ago, Bro. Nelson happened to be in Virginia. While there, seeing a large number of negroes at work, and thinking they might not have enjoyed any religious instruction, he proceeded to talk with them about their immortal souls, and told them about Christ, the Saviour of sinners, who had died for them. While they were listening with deep interest, a magistrate came, and led him off to prison. Afterward he was arraigned as a criminal at the bar, charged with being an abolitionist. In the course of the trial, he addressed the Judge, saying: May it please your Honor, I am wrongfully accused; I stood looking at those poor blacks, and knowing that they had souls as precious as my own, I was anxious to tell them about Christ, that they might be saved. And now, he added, as I look around upon these officers of justice, I feel that their souls are precious, too, and I desire their salvation. He then, in a fervent manner, exhorted them to make their peace with God. The Judge was astonished at the course things had taken, and very meekly remarked to the supposed criminal, "You may go, sir; you may go, sir."

More recently, while in Sweden, Mr. Nelson was thrust into prison for "preaching the gospel." While confined in his cell, he found that merely a thin partition separated him from other inmates. So, burning with love for souls, he commenced exhorting them to repent and believe in Christ. It was afterwards found that the wife of the prison-keeper had frequently gone and listened to the preaching of the "strange seaman;" and after a short time she, standing at the side of his cell, was inquiring of this faithful man of God, "What must I do to be saved?" ENCOURAGEMENT TO PRAYER.

Sir Walter Raleigh one day asking a favor from Queen Elizabeth, the latter said to him: "Raleigh, when will you leave off begging?" to which he answered, "When your Majesty leaves off giving!" But think how much more bountiful God is, who did not give over granting Abraham his request for Sodom till he left off asking. And who can tell but if he had gone on, and prayed, that if five righteous persons had been found in Sodom, the city might have been spared for their sakes, according to his request? Can we think that God will hear the young ravens when the cry, and neglect the doves that mourn in the valleys?—that he will hear the young lions when they roar, and forget the lambs that bleat after the sheep? —that he will hear Hagar and her Ishmael, that cry unto him in their extremities, and will yet turn his back upon the tears, or stop his ears to the prayers of his own children that cry unto him daily in the name of his dear Son Christ Jesus? Undoubtedly not. St. Ambrose was wont to say, the better to comfort Monica, the mother of St. Augustine, who prayed much for him, "It is impossible that a son of so many prayers and tears should perish." As long, therefore, as God gives us a heart to pray for any mercy, let us not be out of heart. And why so? Because then we beg no more than what God hath commanded us to ask; and we ask no more than what he hath promised to give; and he hath promised no more than what he is able to perform; and he will perform no more than what he shall have glory for, and we know that his glory is dear unto him. A CHILD'S REBUKE.—Several years ago, a country town was blessed with a revival of religion. One evening Mrs. —— and her little daughter attended a meeting, and while the minister was speaking of the neglect of family duties, of reading the Scriptures and of family prayer, the little daughter, who listened attentively, and perceived that the preacher was describing a neglect that she had noticed herself, whispered to her mother. "Ma! is the minister talking to you?" To the mother the simple question was more powerful than the sermon. She was immediately brought under deep conviction of sin, which resulted in her hopeful conversion to God

DEATH OF A CHILD.—The Bath Tribune says that a child of Dr. Shaw, two years of age, died on Saturday last, after a sickness of six hours, from eating cobalt, which was prepared for flies. One incident connected with her death, says the Tribune, was affectingly beautiful. When her eyes began to grow dim with death, she fancied it was night and she was going to sleep, and she died with her customary "Good night, mamma, good night, mamma," many times repeated, trembling on her lips.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 4, 1849.

THE FREE READING ROOM.

A paragraph, clipped from the New-York Express, appeared in our paper last week, setting forth that some active members of our denomination were about to establish a free reading room, in which was to be placed an extensive collection of books and manuscripts relative to the observance of the Sabbath. We knew nothing about this project until we saw the notice in the Express, but we take this occasion to say, that we heartily approve of it, and hope that it will be carried out. In some central and well-chosen spot in this city, there ought to be such an establishment. The Sabbath Controversy is exciting attention among all orders of Christians. Almost every day there are developments which go to show that the public mind is ill at ease on this subject, notwithstanding the attempts of Dr. Edwards, et id genus omne, to force the popular dogma down every body's throat. Our denominational growth is by no means a correct index of the hold which our views have upon the public. In every sect are to be found those who believe what we teach, and are restrained from putting it in practice only by the inconvenience of the thing. An exalted tone of piety—such as that which Christ made indispensable to discipleship, when he said, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple"—would constrain them to forego every principle of convenience, and practice what they know to be right. But such piety does not make up the body of disciples now-a-days. Nevertheless, the consciences of these people are about active enough to make them wish that every body else would keep the Sabbath, so that they might come into the practice without any self-denial. And they are not only wishing for this result, but they always keep talking about it. They even plague their ministers with the subject, and want them to explain how it is that Christains all keep the first day of the week, when the law of God commands them to keep the seventh. There are others whose consciences are not quite so well awake, but they feel that it would be a very desirable thing to have more light. They would investigate, but they are not supplied with the means of doing so. They would read, but they have not the necessary books. It is not so clear, in the Bible, that "from the beginning of the world to the resurrection of Christ, God appointed the seventh day of the week to be the weekly Sabbath, and the first day of the week ever since, to continue to the end of the world, which is the Christian Sabbath," however clear it is in the Westminster Catechism. They would be glad to look into the subject a little, and see what were the reasonings of the early reformers, and what were the steps by which the growth of that opinion was promoted which was at last so gravely embodied in the Confession of the Westminster Divines. And we are assured from good authority, that many ministers are waking up to the subject. A first-day Baptist brother told us, not long since, that a considerable number of the ministers of their order had resolved to make themselves acquainted with the question. The spirit of inquiry is, therefore, evidently abroad.

Now, in view of these facts, what better service could be done for the cause of truth, than to establish a reading room, where every thing that has ever been written upon this subject may be free of access to inquirers? There is now in possession of the New York City Sabbath Tract Society a choice collection of old and rare works, many of them written about the time the controversy raged so high in England. These would no doubt be donated for a beginning. Other important works might be added. In our opinion, such a reading room ought to be adjoining to, or in connection with, our Tract Society's Depository, so that inquirers could at once obtain every thing they might desire on this important subject. Brethren, you who hold the Lord's money in possession, what say you to this enterprise? Shall it be undertaken, or not?

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The American Missionary Association is an anti-slavery organization, which was formed at Albany, N. Y., about three years ago. It sustains nearly the same relation to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions that the Free Mission Society does to the Baptist Missionary Union. The third Annual Meeting of the Association was held at Boston last week. Hon. Wm. Jackson, of Newton, the President of the body, occupied the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. C. Webster, of Hopkinton, when Mr. Scudder, Assistant Secretary, read the minutes of the Society, held in Hartford Conn., on Sept. of last year.

On motion of Lewis Tappan, Esq. of New York, the Secretary of the Association, Mr. Whipple of New-York, read the annual report, from which it appeared that two Missionaries of the Society have died during the year, viz: Mr. Carter in Africa, and Mr. Caswell in Siam. The treasury has been in better condition by 25 per cent. than on any preceding year, the whole sum received amounting to nearly $22,000. The Society has five Mission Stations. 1. The Mendi Mission. 2. The West Indies—Island of Jamaica. 3. The Canada Mission. 4. The Ojibwa Indians in Minnesota. 5. The Sandwich Islands. At these various missions there are 47 missionaries and assistants, besides 20 more in the home fields, at the West, six of whom are in the Buckeye State. There have been revivals of religion at some of the stations during the year. About fifty converts have joined Rev. Mr. Green's church at the Sandwich Islands. Among the converts at the Mendi Mission, was one of the Amistad captives, who have been so celebrated morally and politically.

In the evening, the annual sermon was preached in the Tremont Temple, by Rev. David Thurston, of Winthop, Me., who has been 40 years the pastor of the church in that place, and is now three score years and ten. His text was in Acts, 3d chapter, 10th verse: "And now the axe is laid at the root of the tree. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." The tree in the text represents the various evils in the world—the axe the gospel. The general divisions were as follows:—I. There are many evils in the world to be removed, many of which the preacher alluded to. II. The truths of the Bible are the appropriate means for removing all these evils. III. The truth must be applied to these right, to remove them—"the axe is laid at the root of the tree."

DEVOTING A FIXED PORTION OF INCOME TO CHARITABLE PURPOSES.

We wish our brethren would all act upon this principle. The Jews were required to give tithes of all that they possessed. Many suppose this law to have been abrogated by the gospel. But, in our humble opinion, the spirit of the law is as binding now as it ever was. We do not suppose that tithes should be exacted under the gospel in order to the support of a priesthood, as was the case under the law; but we suppose that, at least, as large a proportion of the property of Christians should be devoted to carrying forward the cause of God in some form. It is true, there is no specific injunction to this effect, either by Christ or his Apostles. But what of that? Shall not a Christian love his religion as much as the Jew loved his? Shall he not be as ready to give his money for the support of it, as the Jew was to give money for the support of his? Is he less bound to consider all he has as belonging to the Lord, than the Jew was? Now it seems to us that one great reason why Christ gave no injunction on this point, was that he took it for granted, that the love of His people for His name would be so intense as to supply the place of positive law. The true method of reasoning on the subject would seem, therefore, to be something like this: If, under the law, when there was but a very dark manifestation of the way of salvation, it was the duty of God's people to give a tenth of their possessions to religious purposes, certainly, under the gospel, when the way of salvation is made plain, and the obligations it devolves upon us are set in the clearest light—when the love of Christ as a constraining motive to do good is set before us in all its fullness, and "all nations" are pointed out as the proper objects of benevolent effort—(Matt. 28: 19)—it becomes us to give at least a tenth, and, if the providence of God seem to require it, a still greater proportion, to sustain the cause of religion.

Take another view of the case. Every good citizen feels himself bound to pay a tax—a certain fixed per centage of his property—for the support of the government. In certain cases he may regard the taxation to which he is subjected as unjust, and be very unwilling to pay it. But to the principle of taxation he cannot object; for it is nothing more than a reasonable price paid to government for privileges and securities conferred upon him. Now Christians live under the government of the Lord Jesus Christ. He is their spiritual king. Why should they not pay some regular and fixed portion of their income, as a tax, for the benefits which He, as their king, confers upon them, and that the means may be provided for the extension of so blessed a kingdom over others? And though there is no specific law to say exactly how much the tax shall be, nor any officer appointed to exact it, let the love which a Christian bears to his king prompt him to tax himself, and to do it liberally.

Or, take this view: When one man borrows a sum of money from another, it is expected that he pay an annual interest for the use of it. This is nothing more than what is just and equitable, and is so considered by all parties. Now, we have all been prosecuting our business with money lent us by the Lord. It is but just and fair that we should pay interest for it. We made a great mistake when we supposed that the Lord bestowed that money upon us as a gift, for which no consideration was to be returned. We make no doubt that there is hoarded up, in our small denomination, hundreds and thousands of dollars of the Lord's interest money, which ought to have been paid long ago. The Lord is now calling for a portion of it to be rendered to him. The exact rate of interest is not fixed by any positive statute; but why should it not be as high, at least, as one tenth?

In view of these considerations, what can be more reasonable than that Christians make it a matter of conscience to set apart a fixed portion of their income, and label it, "Holy to the Lord," to be rendered whenever, and in such a way as, He in his Providence shall call? Many of our people are mechanics. What is there to prevent them from setting apart a certain portion of their gains for the cause of God? Many of them are farmers. Why should not the man that cultivates a hundred acres of land, set apart ten to be cultivated for the Lord? Or, if he till but fifty, let him devote five to the Lord; and so on, according to the amount he has under cultivation. What might we not raise, in the course of a year, by some such systematic plan as this? Let the members of our denomination all act upon this principle, and we shall not hear of our missions languishing for want of funds; or of our Tract Society being hampered by embarrassments; or of any other work of benevolence failing for want of support.

TRACT OPERATIONS.

The friends of a thorough Sabbath Reform, and particularly the members of the Sabbath Tract Society, will have learned ere this, through the medium of the Sabbath Recorder, that at the late anniversary of the Sabbath Tract Society, it was deemed advisable, in view of the success of the labors of the Society hitherto, to enlarge the operations of the Society, by employing a competent person, if one could be induced to give himself to the work, in superintending its affairs, in lecturing, tract distributing, &c., and one thousand dollars was suggested as the least sum that the friends of the Society should think of appropriating to its use for the ensuing year.

The Board of Directors, at their meeting on the 16th Sept., took the matter into consideration, and determined as soon as practicable, to carry out the resolution of the Society. But whether such an agent as is proposed can at present be obtained, is known only to the Lord of the Sabbath. It is hoped that such an one is to be had; but, whether that is attainable or not, there is little doubt of our duty to contribute and pray for the success of the cause which the Society was constituted to advance, and greatly to enlarge our efforts to spread the truth and counteract the strenuous efforts making by other agencies to render it as difficult as possible for Sabbath-keepers to labor six days in the week. Self-preservation, if no higher motive, demands more energetic and liberal measures.

The efforts hitherto put forth in this cause have been very feeble—quite unworthy to be named as the measure of the liberality of a people numbering some sixty churches; and yet they have been abundantly blessed, in bringing men to embrace the truth. Every year since our organization has witnessed additions to the friends of our cause, incomparably more valuable than any sacrifices that we have made.

There is another influence produced by our efforts, faithfully put forth, which, though not so observable, may, nevertheless be quite as useful and encouraging, viz.—Their effect upon those who are to be regarded as the enemies of the truth—the proud Pharisees and bigots, who tell us at one time that any day in seven answers as well the demands of the Sabbath law as another; and, at another time, by force of statute laws, try to compel us to observe for the Sabbath what Constantine called "the ancient and venerable day of the Sun."

The following extract from a letter of brother Wm. M. Fahnestock, one of the German Seventh-day Baptists, now resident at Bordentown, N. J., contains some evidence of this effect, unwittingly given to him by one of this class of divines. It is hoped that its perusal will have the effect upon some of our hesitating, doubtful, and perhaps covetous brethren, and sisters too, that it did upon the narrator—to induce them at once to pay over to the society the sum necessary to constitute themselves life members. If it should have such an effect, it would not be long before the Board would be furnished with ample funds to carry out the resolution of the society.

Brethren, friends of Sabbath Reform, friends of religious liberty, every where, and of every name, will you not lend us your aid, by your prayers and contributions, to enable us to carry on the work in a manner worthy of the cause? Let the funds be sent on as fast as possible, and before we are ready, God in his good providence will give us the agent desired. "Trust in the Lord and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed."

Contributions should be sent to Thos. B. Stillman, Treasurer of the American Sabbath Tract Society, New York.

PAUL STILLMAN, Ch. of the Board.

Extract from Dr. Fahnestock's Letter.

Last summer, a twelve-month, as I stepped on board of a steamer on the Delaware, a gentleman, a clergyman, advanced towards me, presuming that he recognized in me a brother preacher. Notwithstanding his mistake, we sat down together, and after conversing a while on various subjects connected with the kingdom of our common Master, he inquired whether there was any thing of importance stirring in the religious world? My heart being full, and as out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh, I, without betraying myself, named the persecution of the German Seventh-day Baptists, and the approaching trial in the Supreme Court.

"Ah! he replied, that is a bad affair; our friends had better let that alone; it will make against us, in the end, as all persecutions do. Besides, should we succeed in having the law affirmed, which I confidently believe we shall, from the known feelings of at least part of the judges, their arguments, which carry a force with them that we cannot consistently and successfully confute, will be spread all over the land, and will be read by thousands, who otherwise would never have known any thing of such a people or their principles. We are always worsted in a conflict with the seventh-day Christians. There is no contest I dread so much as the Sabbath question with them. Their appeals to the Scriptures are so astounding, that they carry instant conviction to the minds of most people, who at once sympathize with them, and which impressions cannot be erased by months or years of labor on our part. The mind instinctively clings to their blunt, naked truths; and withal they are such an industrious, persevering people, that they accomplish much more with less means than any other denomination. In truth, they do annoy us exceedingly. They present themselves at our Sabbath Conventions, and claim to be heard as Sabbath-keepers, and we do damage to ourselves by gagging them, lest they put us into such an awkward position that there is no such thing as extricating ourselves from the dilemma. Indeed, sir, few as they are in numbers, these seventh-day people are our TERROR. I would rather encounter any disputation than their pertinacious advocacy of the seventh day as the Heaven-appointed Sabbath. They overturn our strongest positions by their flat contradictions, and by their fearless appeals to the Bible. There is no such thing as getting these Sabbatarians under your thumb, or keeping them under. They will always be uppermost. Here in this very controversy before the Supreme Court, they are ahead of us. An industrious fellow among them has wormed a most plausible statement of the question into the "History of all the Religious Denominations in the United States," just stereotyped and issued from the press, which will be read by hundreds of thousands of people, and must excite a lasting impression in their favor. And, again, but a short time since, Dr. Barnes preached a powerful sermon on behalf of the Christian Sabbath, one Sunday evening at the Tabernacle, in the city of New York, but the people had not passed out of the door before every individual was supplied with a tract on the other side of the question. I repeat, sir, that we cannot get these seventh-day people under—nor can we keep them under—they will be uppermost and ahead! The true policy would be to leave them undisturbed, and keep them in the background. When brought before the public they cannot be confronted. They will be ahead and be heard. We may gag them at our Conventions, we may crush them in our Courts, but we cannot stifle their Tracts. They silently insinuate themselves into every household and, prove a source of endless, as well as fruitless refutation on our part. Without these tracts we might get along, but their Tracts are our bane. While they have tracts they will keep uppermost in all controversy with them. They are read while we sleep; and hundreds slide into sabbatarianism while we rest in self-security. We rely on the usages of ages and civil enactments to coerce the day of rest; they deride the civil law, and demand the "thus saith the Lord." And in this they have the advantage over us greatly. They are a valiant band, and there's no telling what they may accomplish, should they prove true to themselves. I can only say that they place us in a most uncomfortable position as Protestants; and I would undertake any office rather than dispute with them, or attempt to refute one of their little Tracts."

That is the estimate in which we Sabbatarians are held by the advocates of the first day of the week as holy time, and that by a high dignitary in the Presbyterian Church—the most honorable estimate, I would add, that can be placed upon us. What may we not accomplish if we wake up to our mission? If one of our little winged messengers can put to flight a whole phalanx of Sunday sticklers—an army of learned D. D.'s—why not have them on the winds from Maine to Texas, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. If we were fully aware what we might accomplish for tha cause of truth, we would, all of us, be in the streets, the high-ways, and by-ways, scattering them as snow-flakes, until the whole world would be covered with these little leaflets of eternal truth; which, beside beautifying the desolate earth, like the hoar-frost which destroys rank and noxious vegetation, and purifies the atmosphere of pestilence, these little emanations of love and truth divine, would wither the weeds of error, and purify the tainted stream of the professing church.

VINDICATION OF THE TRUE SABBATH.

Under the above title, Bro. Morton has just published a pamphlet of sixty pages in defense of the Sabbath. It was written with special reference to the Reformed Presbyterians, through whose summary and arbitiary proceedings he was prevented from speaking in his own behalf, on his trial before the Synod; but we believe it will commend itself to the heart of every sincere inquirer after truth. At an early day we intend to make some selections from it which will show how he handles the subject. Meanwhile we are glad to be able to say, that the pamphlet has been quite favorably noticed by the New York press. The following from the Daily Evening Mirror, will give the reader an idea of the impression which it makes:—

VINDICATION OF THE TRUE SABBATH.—This is the title of a little work of about sixty pages, written by the Rev. J. W. Morton, recently a missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. Mr. Morton was suspended from the work of the ministry by the synod of the church with which he was connected, for having embraced the distinguishing doctrine of the Seventh-day Baptists. he states in the little volume before us, that in December, 1848, he was unexpectedly called upon to defend the practice of keeping holy the first day of the week in place of the seventh, and that on examination he was forced to the conclusion that there was no foundation for it in the Bible. He therefore abandoned the doctrine that he had been taught from his infancy, believing the seventh day of the week to be the true Sabbath. He was recalled from the mission in which he had been engaged, and from the account which he gives of his trial before the Synod, he was evidently treated rather harshly by that body, the privilege of defending himself being denied him. They peremptorily "cut him off" without even allowing him to state the reasons that had induced him to change his views. Whatever may be thought of the question which he discusses, it certainly must be admitted that the brief narrative he publishes is written in a calm, dispassionate style, breathing in every line a mild, Christian spirit. It can be obtained at the book store of J. L. Lockwood & Co., 459 Broadway.

BENEVOLENCE THAT "PAYS."

In Baltimore, week before last, there was a grand gathering of Odd-Fellows from all parts of the United States—a meeting resembling, in some respects, the Religious and Benevolent Anniversaries which are annually held in New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. In looking over the proceedings of this "benevolent" organization, we find some interesting and significant facts. We notice that the receipts of the past year amounted to over eight hundred thousand dollars, while the money paid out for benevolent purposes amounted to between three and four hundred thousand dollars, thus leaving nearly five hundred thousand to pay for managing the machinery of the organization, &c., &c. In view of this large provision, we were curious to know how liberally the benevolent leaders in this benevolent business were paid for their services. But we have found only one item of information on that head; which is to the effect that the Grand Lodge pays the expenses of representatives, giving them three dollars a day for attendance on the sessions of the Lodge, and six cents for every mile they travel in coming to and going from the place of meeting. By estimating the mileage of the representatives, and comparing the result with their necessary traveling expenses, it will be seen, that here is a benevolent organization that pays—the leaders, if not the poor widows and orphans.

A SUNDAY LAW TURNED TO ACCOUNT.—Sunday Laws are generally not only useless but hurtful. In Ireland, however, a state of things exists in which a statute against labor on Sunday is turned to account, whether good or bad we will not say. It seems that in that country crops may be seized for rent and poor's rates, but the seizure cannot take place on Sundays. And so the poor people, with the assistance of the whole neighborhood, reap the standing crops on the Sundays for themselves, and the only means of redress consists in forcibly taking possession of the crop afterward, which engenders fierce battles. "The sole prosecution against the people is upon an old statute which provides against Sabbath-breaking." This popular system of getting the good of the land has spread extensively in some districts of Ireland.

THE WESLEYANS OF ENGLAND.—An English correspondent of the New-York Tribune says that there is a formidable split in the Wesleyan Conference. The proceedings of the heads of this body had been freely commented upon in a certain Journal called Fly Leaves. The Wesleyan dignitaries had no mind to tolerate the free speech of the press; they had always been used to have it their own way, and nothing uncomplimentary had previously assailed their high places. Sundry ministers were suspected of the criminal Fly Leaves, and were publicly requested to disavow all connection with them. They refused. The peace of Christ's Wesleyan Church being in danger from their contumacy, they were at once expelled the connexion. They have been powerful people since. Newspapers, meetings, and private gatherings, have celebrated their martyrdom, and plaited their crowns.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have noticed that some ministers think it not proper to pronounce a benediction at the close of the Lord's Supper, and therefore close that ordinance with singing; yet these ministers close other religious exercises by pronouncing a benediction. Now, if it be unscriptural to pronounce the benediction after the Supper, can it be shown to be scriptural to pronounce the benediction after other or any religious exercises? If it be improper to pronounce a benediction after the Supper, is it not equally so after any religious exercise? If it be proper to pronounce a benediction after Sabbath and other religious exercises, is it not equally so after the Supper.

Will some of your correspondents give us an exegetical article upon the subject? Unanimity of practice among us would be desirable.

S. S. GRISWOLD.

HOPKINTON, R. I., Sept. 28, 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In the proceedings of the 43d Session of the General Conference, published in the Recorder of Sept. 15, I notice the passage of a number of resolutions, among which, is one in relation to Secret Societies, which I think needs some explanation, that its force may be understoood. Will some of "the wise men of the east" (or the west) explain how or why a "society formed to shield us from the evils of intemperance, afford mutual assistance in case of sickness, and elevate our characters as men," governed by and operating through "the great principles of temperance, benevolence, and brotherly love," must necessarily be—in its organization fundamentally, and in its influence practically—adverse to Christianity. An explanation would oblige

ONE OF THE INITIATED.

FIRE AT OWEGO.—The village of Owego was visited by a destructive fire on the 27th ult. It originated in a hall used by the Sons of Temperance, and was first discovered about 1 o'clock A. M. From some trouble about the fire apparatus or a want of water, it continued to rage, until sixty-nine buildings, in the business part of the village, occupied as hotels, offices, stores, shops, &c., were burnt down. The loss in variously estimated from $150,000 to $1,000,000. Probably the lowest estimate is too high.

BAPTIST EDUCATIONAL CONVENTION.—The controversy about removing Madison University has thrown the educational interests of Baptists in the State of New York into rather a bad fix. There are now two bodies, each claiming to be the legal Board of the Baptist Education Society. One of these bodies, it is said, was elected mainly by Hamilton votes, and with special referenceto securing the permanent location of the University at that place. The other is composed of leading Baptists throughout the State, and no doubt represents the denomination very generally and satisfactory. The question which Board shall take the direction of affairs, is one involving vast interests. With a view to settle it, and if possible to agree upon some arrangement or compromise which shall be mutually satisfactory, a Convention of the Baptist Denomination of the State of New York is called to meet at the Pearl-street Baptist Church in New York, on the 9th day of October.

RELIGION IN CALIFORNIA.—A correspondent of the New-York Tribune says, that in every large town of California there are one or more places of public worship. In San Francisco there are eight; one each for Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Swedenborgians, Mormons, Roman Catholics, and Hawaiians. The Methodists also have received a church by an arrival from the "States," which they are erecting, though they have no regular minister. The Baptists have the credit of organizing the first Protestant church, and building the first place of worship, in the territory. It is as plain a looking church as could well be constructed; is covered with sail-cloth instead of shingles, and furnished inside with cotton sheeting instead of laths and plaster. But it is a comfortable place for dry weather, and is very ably supplied by Rev. Mr. Wheeler, formerly of New York. It occupies a very fine lot, in a central position, and, plain as it is, cost about $5,000! The Episcopal clergyman stands among the highest "Churchmen." His motto is probably the favorite one of many others, "Excelsior," as he has called his organization "The Reformed Catholic Church of the Holy Trinity." So they go on in California.

DEATH OF A BISHOP.—The Bishop of Norwich, England, died on the 8th of September. He was the second son of Sir T. J. Stanley, of Alderley, Cheshire, and was born in 1789, so that he was seventy years of age. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He was formerly rector of Alderley, and was appointed Bishop of Norwich in 1837. He was also clerk of the closet to the Queen, President of the Linnæan Society, and one of the commissioners appointed in 1848 to inquire into the state of the British Museum. He was respected by all classes in his diocese, in consequence of his exertions in promoting education, and in supporting charitable institutions of every description. He was married in 1810 to the daughter of Rev. Oswald Leycester, by whom he leaves a large family. He was the author of the "Familiar History of British Birds," a work which has acquired an extensive circulation.

FRENCH PROTESTANT CHURCHES.—A synod of Ministers representing the Evangelical Churches of France, has been held in Paris. They agreed to a Constitution, on which they will hereafter be united. By one of the articles of this Constitution it is enacted, that each Church which enters into the union preserves the liberty of determining for itself its particular Constitution, according to its own views and requirements. It consequently regulates its worship, its discipline, and the form of its church government. Another article is as follows: Each church shall provide for its expenses by voluntary contributions, and not receive any pecuniary aid from the State, but be in a condition of complete independence.

THE ASTOR PLACE RIOTERS.—After a trial which lasted nearly three weeks, seven of the persons charged with participating in the Astor Place Riot, last summer, have been found guilty by an impartial jury. Sentence was passed upon them last Sabbath, by Judge Daily. Douglass, Bennett, O'Neil, and Mathews, are to be imprisoned for thirty days in the City Prison. Green is to be imprisoned for one month in the Penitentiary. Judson, who is charged with being the ringleader, and who is known as the Editor of a paper called "Ned Buntline's Own," is to be imprisoned for one year in the Penitentiary, and pay a fine of $250, to remain convicted until it is paid. The Judge, in conclusion, expressed his regret that the law was not more severe for the enormity of the offense. This conclusion of the matter meets with general approval and gives general satisfaction.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.—The N. Y. Tribune has advices from San Francisco, by way of Mexico, to August 18, being sixteen days later than the news by the Panama. They represent gold-digging as tolerably productive, although there is much disappointment among individuals. The health of the miners is generally good. The animosity existing between the Americans and the Spaniards, Mexicans, and Chilians, is said to be approaching a crisis. The latter have been ordered to leave in a fixed time, and if they fail to do so, fighting and bloodshed are looked for.

THE WEEKLY CHRONOTYPE comes to us in a new dress and enlarged form. It now has eight columns on a page, and in the last number we find twenty-nine columns of new and readable matter. Published by White, Potter & Wright, Boston, at $2 a year in advance.

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamer America, seven days later advices from Europe have been received—London to Sept. 13th, Paris 12th, Vienna 7th, Rome 6th.

Throughout England, cholera is on the increase. In London, on the 11th of September, there were 475 deaths; on the 12th 361. The crops are nearly harvested, in very good condition particularly potatoes.

The news from Hungary is without special interest. The fortresses of Comorn and Peterwarden still hold out. Nothing is known of Kossuth's whereabouts.

All the Northern States of Germany, except Oldenburgh, have acceded to the alliance proposed by Prussia, Saxony and Hanover.

The course which the Pope intends to pursue is as much a mystery as ever. It is considered probable, however, that he will place himself under the Austrian Flag.

A letter from Louis Napoleon to his friend Ney has been published in the Moniteur, and virtually acknowledged by the Cabinet. It makes some talk in political circles, and the following is an extract:—

"The French Republic has not sent an army to Rome to put down Italian liberty, but on the contrary to regulate it by preserving it against its own excesses, and to give it a solid basis, by replacing on the Pontifical throne the Prince who the first had boldly taken the lead in all useful reforms. I learn with pain that the benevolent intentions of the Holy Father, as well as our own actions, remain sterile in the presence of hostile passions and influences. The desire of certain persons appears to be to make proscription and tyranny the basis of the Pope's return. Say to Gen. Rostolan from me, that he is not to permit that, under the shadow of the tri-colored flag, any act be committed which can have the character of an intervention. I thus sum up the restoration of the Pope's temporal power: A General Amnesty—The Secularization of the Administration—The code of Napoleon—Liberal Government."

Gen. Raudon has been appointed to the command of the French forces at Rome.

Letters from Louis, Senegal, Western Africa, of the 25th July, give the details of a sanguinary engagement which had taken place between the French troops and the inhabitants of the village of Francyez (Fronta Tora) some distance up the river. The people from the neighboring villages had joined them to resist the invasion of the French; and, encouraged by a victory which their countrymen had gained over the French some years since, the negroes waited the approach of their assailants with great firmness, not firing a single shot until the expedition was within 80 yards of them. The blacks were protected behind barricades, and nothing but the muzzles of their muskets were visible. At length the firing began, and for twenty minutes the most determined resistance was made; at length the cannon having partially demolished the barricades, a charge was ordered, and they were soon carried at the point of the bayonet, when a general route took place, the blacks throwing away their arms and jumping into the river to swim to the opposite bank. Several discharges of grape were made at them, and a number of them were killed; after which the village and all the fields of maize were set on fire and destroyed. The loss of the blacks is considered to be very great, although only 50 of their bodies were found, the rest having been thrown into the river. The loss of the expedition amounted to 4 killed, about 30 wounded, 17 of whom were Europeans. The governor himself was wounded, but not seriously, just as he was mounting his horse.

Hostilities of Races.—The London Times says:—It is a painful task to be obliged to record the fact that the hatred of the different races assumes a more decided character than ever. Near Fascet, on the Bega Canal, close to the Transylvania frontier, the most frightful atrocities have been committed. The insurgents, under Maurice Perzel, who was perhaps the most ferocious leader that figured in this deplorable war, shortly before they surrendered, are said to have put all the male population of the Wallachian villages, near Fascet, that they could lay their hands on, to the sword, violated their wives and daughters, spitted their children, carried off their cattle, and set fire to their houses. The Wallachians Romanen as savage as their tyrants, now take bloody revenge whenever they find an opportunity, and do not spare a man of the dispersed Hussars and Honveds. In the east of Transylvania matters are not much better, and proclamations have been issued by the Army Commissioner Daniels, in order to put some check on the wild passions of the Romanen. Those of the Cronstadt district are in the habit of inducing two or three men of the Russian patroles to accompany them, and then going in this semi-official society to pillage the neighboring Magyar villages and the houses of the gentry. The commissary declares that persons guilty of such actions, whatever may be the language they speak, shall be brought to a court-martial.

Jewish Colonies.—The following notification has been published in several of the governments of West-Russia: "From 3,000 to 4,000 portions (ukastok) of land have been assigned for as many Jewish families, in the governments of Minsk, Witebsk, Mohileu, and Grodno; and those Jews who shall be willing to devote themselves to agriculture shall raise a sum of money from the crown, according to the law of March, 5, 1847. These would have a further privilege of exemption from recruiting and all taxes for several years. Such persons, therefore, as are desirous to engage in agriculture in any of the above Governments are to send in their petitions to the Civil Government, stating their income, family, &c., who will carry their wishes into execution, since it is the desire of the Government to settle a large number of Jews on these lands during the present year."

The Butler Divorce Case.—In this case, says the Philadelphia North American, the Court of Common Pleas of this County, on Saturday last, made a final and absolute decree, divorcing the parties from the bonds of matrimony. The decree granting the divorce is in the following language:—

"And now, the 9th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1849, the return of Thomas Dunlap, Esq., examiner of the depositions of the witnesses, taken before him on the part of the libellant, was presented and filed. Sept. 3d, 1849, on motion of George M. Dallas, Esq., rule to show cause why divorce should not be decreed—whereupon the Court, on the 22d day of September, 1849, after mature and solemn deliberation, being satisfied therewith, and proclamation being duly made for the respondent to come forth, and she not appearing, the Court do order, adjudge and decree, that the said Pierce Butler, the libellant, be divorced and separated from the bond of matrimony contracted with the said Frances Ann Butler, the respondent, and that all and every the duties, rights and claims accruing to either of the said parties by reason of the said marraige, shall henceforth cease and determine—and the said parties be severally at liberty to marry again, in like manner as if they never had been married."

Singular Death.—The Caddo Gazette, of the 6th. inst., gives the following account of a fatal rencontre which took place in Shreveport on the 5th inst., in which Nathan J. Turk was killed. The manner in which his death was effected is most singular: Henry Vines and the deceased entered the exchange speaking in a low tone. Turk was heard to say to Vines to keep away from him, that he did not wish to have anything to do with him. Said he then, "Henry, you are a stronger man than I am, but you shan't whip me." "I will whip you, you coward," replied Vines, at the same time receding two paces, with his hand under his coat tail. Vines then drew a pistol. Turk drew one about the same time, and snapped it at Vines, and dodged under the table, when Vines snapped at Turk, who then threw his pistol at Vines, and then run out at the back door. Vines threw his pistol at Turk, which struck him as he was clearing the door, and discharged itself, the contents taking effect on the left side of the back. The ball ranging upward, passed through the heart and lodged under the skin, near the throat, and back of the right collar bone. Turk ran some fifty feet and expired. It was in evidence that the fatal pistol was thrown a distance of 20 feet. From the wound, and the marks of powder, it was evident that the muzzle, when the pistol exploded, was in contiguity with the deceased.

Wool-growing in Illinois.—The Peoria Register gives a good account of the sheep pastures of that part of Illinois. The entire number of head in the country is stated at 30,000, and the wool clip of the last spring at 90,000 lbs. The venerable Bishop Chase is one of the chief wool-growers of that immediate vicinity, owning a flock of 2,000 head. C. Stone has also a flock of the same size, and there are several other flocks of from 1100 to 1500 head. The Register gives an interesting account of a flock of pure French Merinos, just introduced into that country, by Mr. Truman Humphreys, of Elmwood. These sheep are represented as distinguished for the extraordinary firmness and thickness of the fleece, large frame and strong constitution. The head and face are completely covered with wool, down to near the end of the nose. The imported bucks weigh some 250 lbs., and shear 22 lbs. of wool. The average weight of fleece from these shedp is said to be from 10 to 14 lbs., per head.

Sandwich Islands.—A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce, writing from Honolulu, draws rather a sad picture of the condition of his Kanaka Majesty, Kamehameha III. So rapidly is the native population diminishing that, according to this writer, the probability is that at the end of the next ten or fifteen years scarcely a native will be found on the islands. Indeed, one of the oldest resident physicians there has expressed the opinion that this result will be realized within the next five years. Four-fifths of the population have disappeared since the first visit of Capt. Cook, a period of seventy years, and about one-sixth of the remnant had died within the last year. The missionaries estimate the number of deaths within the last year at about ten thousand, or more than one tenth of the whole population. A majority of the infants have been among the victims. The present population of the islands is about eight thousand.

Chinese Ivory Carving.—I took some trouble and pains to obtain a view of the instruments with which the artist worked, but regret to say I was unsuccessful. The ivory balls are elaborately carved, and the ingenuity with which they are constructed, have long excited admiration and surprise at the artistic skill and means, by which so many concentric balls can be carved one within the other. I know not whether any one else has made the discovery; but the truth is, that each ball is constructed of two pieces, the edges of which are so finely scraped down, that the edge of one hemisphere is made to overlap its counterpart with the greatest nicety. Thus one ball is easily enclosed within another. The joinings are then united by a peculiar strong cement, aided by the employment of steam and pressure. Any one who wishes to make the expensive trial, will soon ascertain the fact, by applying a very powerful heat to one of these balls, which will open at the joints in due time.

Honesty.—A few weeks since, Mr. J. Holmes of Kingston, lost his pocket-book containing $13 in money. A poor man named Michael Sheehan, found the same and gave information of the fact to the proper authorities, but owing to the illness and subsequent death of his wife, nothing was heard of him again, until Monday. It was then ascertained, that although in want and distress, rather than to use the money found by him, he sold his boat, (by the use of which he obtained the means of support,) in order to secure funds sufficient to pay the funeral expenses of his wife. Upon learning these facts, Mr. Holmes presented Sheehan with the $13, and also with $5 additional as a reward for his honesty. [Boston Adv.

Proclamation,

By Hamilton Fish, Governor of the State of New-York.

Whereas, It has been represented to me that Robert Murphy of Rensserlaerville, in the County of Albany, a Special Deputy Sheriff in the said County, while absent from his home, on official business, on the afternoon of the 24th day of Sept. inst., at or near Hall's Mills, in the said town of Rensselaerville, was pursued by two men dressed in disguise, with masks, and armed with rifles or guns, and was fired upon by such men, and was dangerously, if not mortally wounded: And whereas, it is further represented, that, after the said Robert Murphy had been repeatedly threatened in various ways, a few nights since, about midnight, a quantity of gunpowder was maliciously and by design exploded in the shop of the said Robt. Murphy, causing much damage to the said shop, and setting the building on fire: I do hereby offer a reward of Five Hundred Dollars to any person or persons who shall give information which shall lead to the detection, apprehension and conviction of each or either of the persons who pursued, fired upon and wounded the said Robert Murphy, as above represented. And I do offer a further reward of Two Hundred Dollars to any person or persons who shall give information which shall lead to the detection, apprehension and conviction of the person or persons who were maliciously guilty of causing the explosion aforesaid in the shop of the said Robert Murphy. Hamilton Fish.

Trouble among the Indians.—We learn from the Frontier Guardian, of the 5th ult., that Mr. Reed, a gentleman connected with the missionary station at Bellevue, has returned to Kanesville, from a journey into the North-western country, some 300 or 400 miles, with the Omaha Indians, who were out on their summer hunt. At this distance they were in the neighborhood of the Pankas Indians. They were very successful in their hunt, killing and packing away about sixteen or twenty tons of buffalo meat. While there the Pankas surprised and killed three of the Omaha young men, who had separated from their party. This was regarded as a declaration of war. The Omakas prepared themselves for the fight. They formed a circular breastwork of their skin-bags of dried meat, and intrenched themselves as well as they could. Just at sunrise, on the 4th of August, the battle commenced, and lasted until 8 o'clock. The Pankas then retired, having killed four Omahas and wounded eight or nine, but not mortally, and lost about a fourth of their dried meat and 42 of their best horses. It is supposed that 15 or 20 Pankas were killed—among them their head chief—although only two scalps were taken, the bodies of the others having been removed by their friends. This attack was made to punish the Omahas for stealieg four horses, two years ago. The cholera is represented to have been very fatal among the Pawnees, and to add to their calamities the Sac and Fox Indians were about to make war upon the remnant of them.

Breach of promise.—Frances F. Clark vs. Otis Pendleton.—This case, which was an action for breach of promise of marriage, occupied the Court on Friday and Saturday, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. The parties belong to Stonington, and are very respectable. The promise alleged, and proved beyond any doubt, was made in 1846, and the defendant was master of a whaling ship, left the State soon after, remaining about 18 months. After his return, an interview took place between him and the plaintiff, which terminated by a refusal on his part to comply with the engagement, though he could give no plausible excuse for his conduct, and though there was no reasonable fault to be found with her. A letter written by the defendant to Miss Clark, while he was absent on the voyoge, was read in Court, and afforded some amusement by the fervor of the feeling expressed for her, being, like all other epistles of that sort, rather too warm for the perusal of third persons. The damages were laid at $5,000, and the Jury gave $2,000. The Judge, however, thought them too high, and upon being sent out again, the Jury returned with a verdict of $1,000, which was ordered to be recorded.

Terrible Tragedy.—The Reading Press of the 25th inst. says: "The hospital of the Berks Co. Poor House has been the scene of a bloody tragedy, which is almost unparallelled in the history of human actions, involving the destruction of a family, consisting of a wife and daughter, by the father, and his death by suicide, after he had inflicted dreadful wounds on the head and throat of his wife with a razor and hammer, and severing the throat of his daughter, a girl of some 18 years old with the same instrument. This shocking and sanguinary deed was committed in one of the chambers of the hospital, occupied by the unfortunate victims for the last ten months, on Saturday evening last, between 7 and 8 o'clock. His name is Frederick Stahl, a native of Germany, and his conduct has always been marked with propriety; but he may have been led to the act by the hopeless condition of his wife, who was insane, and that of his daughter, long confined to her bed by lameness, and unable to utter a word. The wife made her escape from the chamber, with her neck dreadfully lacerated by the razor, and her head battered with the hammer, the handle of which broke in his hands. When the overseer entered he found Stahl reeling to the floor, where he instantly expired; the daughter lay in her gore on the bed, with her throat cut from ear to ear. The Coroner, Dr. Witman, held an inquest on the bodies, and the Jury reported in favor of the facts as above related.

Cholera at Mackinac.—We learn, says a Detroit paper, from passengers on the steamer Albany, that six deaths had taken place on the Island from cholera since our last advices by the Empire State, or for 24 hours previous. The bodies of 21 Indians were found the day before, on the beach, about six miles from Mackinac. The Indians were on the return from the payment, and had no doubt indulged too freely in excesses of all kind which brought on the cholera. Our informant says, three deaths occurred while the Albany was lying at the wharf at Mackinac. The reports from there are truly deplorable.

The Liberty Press, a free-soil paper at Utica, N. Y., has been discoutinued.

SUMMARY.

The Rockingham Register states that Mr. Reuben Moore, of that city, last year made on one his farm, and hauled to market over nine hundred barrels of flour, besides what he used in his own family. With six hands and one wagon and team, he did the work on the farm, as well as the hauling to market. The crop was ground in his own mill, so that everything was done by himself and upon his own premises. In addition to the large quantity of flour made and sold from his farm, Mr. Moore also had 150 fat cattle to sell.

It appears from the last returns made to the British Parliament, that there had been imported into that kingdom during the year 1848, of tobacco, 27,304,134 pounds, from which the government had derived a revenue of £4,365,233 sterling, or $21,627,797. In other words ,Great Britain levies a duty of between seventy-nine and eighty cents per pound on our tobacco, which, after a year's labor, did not yield the planter more than an average of some four or five cents per pound.

Col. Samuel Bunch died at his residence in Granger Co., Tennessee, on the 25th inst. in the 65th year of his age. Col. Bunch commanded a regiment in the Indian wars of General Andrew Jackson; and, in the charge at the battle of Horse-Shoe was the first or second man over and inside the breastworks of the enemy. He represented his District four years in Congress during the Administration of President Jackson.

A man called Dr. Wyatt has been arrested at Spencer, O., who is known as the head of an extensive band of counterfeiters. Over $60,000 in counterfeit money and spurious coin were found in his dwelling, and in a cache in the woods adjoining, plates, dies and implements for striking bills and making spurious coin were discovered and seized. This establishment has been maintained for years.

In Williamsburg, on the evening of the 29th of Sept., there was a fire in a ship and lumber yard, which did considerable damage. Among the buildings burned was an aviary containing 800 Canary birds. As fast as the birds were set free they darted straight into the air, but, facinated by the glare of the flames, hovered above them and one by one dropped into and were consumed by them.

The New York Bible and Common Prayer Book and the Episcopal Tract Societies, state, in their reports for 1848, their joint income to be $7,851. Of this sum, $1,000 is paid as salary to the agent and treasurer, $100 to a boy, and $331 for rent, insurance, twine, packing boxes, &c., making a total of fourteen hundred and thirty-eight dollars, or more than one-fifth of the whole amount.

The Batavia Times says that, since the 18th of June various sums of money amounting to $4,500, have been lost through the mails between Batavia and Rochester. The losses have occurred at various times, proving the existence of a system of plundering the mails. Similar depredations are said to have been committed east of Rochester.

Death came with friendly care,
The opening bud to heaven convey'd,
And bade it blossom there."

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 13th ult., Horatio N. Burdick, in the 38th year of his age, leaving a widow and three children to mourn their sundden loss. His disease was of a complicated character, which eventuated in brain fever. Bro. Burdick was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Rockville, possessing piety of more than ordinary brilliancy. His faith in the divine Redeemer was unshaken in view of death, and he died without fear. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace.

At Providence, R. I., on the 17th ult., Mrs. Sally Burdick, widow of the late Joel Burdick, Jr., in the 54th year of her age. Sister Burdick had been a professor of religion for many years, and gave good evidence of being a real follower of Christ. A year or two previous to her death. her mind was partially deranged; but her relatives have this left for their comfort, that she had made her peace with God before that afflictive event. No doubt, their loss was her infinite gain.

GOOD NIGHT.

FROM THE GERMAN OF BRUER.

Dark is the night!
Yet stars are glimmering through the cope of heaven;
The air sighs softly through the wandering trees;
And innocence, unstained by evil leaven,
All bright within—the outward gloom can please,
With the sweet influence of the calm hour filled,
In its clear bosom, carrying its own heaven!
To all who have their day's work fulfilled;
To them good night!

Still is the night!
All day's loud noises wane;
Weary and tearful eyelids own the calm;
And sleep is lulling in her soft domain
The throbbing heart, with heaven's own soothing
To you for whom her shades descend in vain, [balm,
Whom care keeps watching, peace your cares disarm;
Soothed be the couch of sorrow and of pain;
To such good night!

Rich is the night!
Can man hope here for more,
When the dark night of trouble veils him round,
Than in bright dreams to see heav'n ope its store,
And each warm wish by fancy crowned?
To you for whom hope smiles by day no more,
May her soft whispers in her sleep be found!
To you good night!

Faith springs by night!
When all the fond heart hailed,
Have long beneath the lonely hillock slept,
When they—the dearly loved—the deeply wailed,
Fate's bitter flood from thy fond arm hath swept;
Think, amid all the trials that assailed,
One eye, above the stars, its watch hath kept;
And watches still, good night!

NEW AND CURIOUS RACE OF MEN.

In a former letter, I mentioned to you that Col. Ducouret who had already penetrated far in Africa, was about to set out on a new and extensive exploration of five years, under the special auspices of the French Government and at the charge of the treasury. The Minister of Public Instruction asked of the Academy of Sciences some Instructions for him, which were read at the sitting of the 20th inst. At the same time the Colonel addressed to the Academy a notice of the race of the Ghilanes inhabiting the interior of Africa, and renowned among the neighboring tribes as caudated, or having tails. The matter is so curious that I have caused to be translated for you what has been published about it, by one of the scientific reporters.

From the Scientific Report.

There exists a race of men who, according to the report of certain travelers, are originally of the kingdom of Gondar, or of others, who say they inhabit Soudan in the South, whose zoological characteristics are remarkable. They have a tail-like appendage, formed by the elongation of the vertebral column, and they are the last link in the human race. The slave merchants cannot dispose of them without great difficulty; so bad is their reputation. The traits which distinguish them are hideous ugliness of face and figure, ungovernable tempers, and stolid intellect. Some of this race are to be found, also, in the Phillippine Islands, but they were, doubtless, carried thither by the slave merchants. However, this may be, when a Levantine is looking out for slaves in the East, he is always warned not to purchase one who has a tail; he is told—"Of all slaves, this is the least profitable."

M. Ducouret, who was in Mecca in the year 1842, saw an individual of the species we have just mentioned, and belonging, he was told, to the breed of Ghilanes in the South. Though it be not the first time that we have heard the race of men spoken of, who are furnished with tails, nevertheless the fact is not sufficiently common to take away its interest. We will, therefore, enter somewhat in detail upon this strange organic manifestation. "I inhabited Mecca in 1842," says M. Ducouret, "and being often at the house of an Emir with whom I was intimate, I spoke to him of the Ghilane race, and told him how much the Europeans doubted of the existence of men with tails, that is to say the vertebral column elongated externally. In order to convince me of the reality of the species, the Emir ordered before me one of his slaves called Bellat, who was about thirty years old, who had a tail, and who belonged to this tribe. On surveying this man I was thoroughly convinced. He told me that in his country, far beyond the Sennar, which he had crossed, they spoke a different language; this, for want of practice, he had entirely forgotten; that of his compatriots, whom he estimated at 30,000 or 40,000, some worhipped the sun, the moon, or stars, others the serpent and the sources of an immense river, in which they immolated their victims—probably the springs of the Nile;—that they ate with delight raw flesh, as bloody as possible, and that they loved human flesh above all things, that after their battles with the neighboring tribes, they slaughtered and devoured their prisoners without distinction of age or sex; but that the woman and children were preferable, the flesh being more delicate.

"This Ghilane became a devout Mussulman, and had lived 15 years in the Holy City. The fondness, the necessity even, for raw flesh (it really was a want for him) did not fail to return upon him; and his master, therefore, by a precaution, never failed when this fit was on him, to provide him with an enormous piece of raw mutton, which he consumed ravenously before everybody present. This eager desire for raw flesh showed itself periodically; sometimes twice a week. Being asked why he did not try to correct such a habit, he answered with great frankness: 'I have often tried to overcome this appetite, which I received from my father and mother. In my country, great and small, young and old, live in this manner, beside eating fish, fruits and vegetables. If my master neglected to supply this requirement of my nature, I am sure I could not resist the desire that possesses me of devouring something, and I should cause great sorrow by falling on some person too weak to contend with me, an infant, for example.' Having asked him to allow me to see him naked, (for I wished to sketch him,) he resisted for a long time, but finally yielded, on receiving the promise of an entirely new dress which I was to send him. He came privately to my house, where he took off the scanty shirt of blue linen which he wore. I was thus enabled to contemplate him quite at my ease, and to paint his portrait without exposing him to the punishment which would have been inflicted on him, if he had been detected by his fanatical and superstitious master." The drawing made under these circumstances has been placed under the eye of the Academy.

Here are some extracts from the description given by M. Ducouret, of the Ghilanes: "The Ghilanes are a peculiar race of negro, which have a strong resemblance to the monkey, much smaller than the usual race—they are rarely more than five feet high. They are uncommonly ill made; their bodies are lean and seem weak; their arms long and slim; their hands and feet are longer and flatter than those of any other of the human species; their cheeks project, and their forehead is low and receding; their ears are long and deformed; their eyes are small, black, piercing, and twinkle constantly; their noses are large and flat; their mouth wide, and furnished with teeth very sharp, strong, and of dazzling whiteness; their lips are full and thick; their hair curled, but not very wooly, not thick, and it remains short. But what particularly distinguishes them is the prolongation of the vertebral column. This gives to each individual, male or female, a tail of two or three inches long."

Finally, here is the portrait of Bellal, the name of the personage the author encountered at Mecca:

"He was thin and dry, but nervous and strong. His skin was black bronzed, shining, soft to the touch like velvet. His feet were long and flat; his arms and legs appeared feeble, but well supplied with muscles. His ribs could easily be counted. His face was repulsively ugly. His mouth was enormous, his lips thick, his teeth strong, sharp, and very white; his nose broad and flat; his ears long and deformed; his forehead low and very receding; his hair not very woolly nor thick, but nevertheless curly. He had no beard, and his body was not hairy. He was very active and hardy. His hight was about five feet. His tail was more than three inches long, and almost as flexible as that of a monkey. His disposition, setting aside his tastes and habits, was good, and his fidelity was above all praise."

SINGULAR SERIES OF CALAMITIES.

Among the selections of an exchange paper, we find the following account of a sudden succession of calamities which have of late befallen the Spanish possessions of the Manillas:—

The Mernanos are a group of islands belonging to Spain, eastward of the Manillas, and are visited by many of our whaling ships in the Pacific. At the capital of the islands, a place called Agana, a most extraordinary epidemic made its appearance in February last, to which the attention of the medical world should be directed. The epidemic was introduced by catarrh and coughing, to so violent a degree as to destroy the sense of hearing, the ear emitting blood and matter, from which even those who recovered remained deaf. There was not one member of a family who could attend on another. Government had soups prepared for the sick, and served by boys, who were exempt from attack. The epidemic attacked ninety-five out of every hundred of the population, and a vast number died. Owing to a sudden change of wind, the epidemic ceased on the 23d of February, and patients began to recover; when, on the 25th, at 49 minutes past 2 P. M., a succession of earthquakes took place, appaling to think upon. The shocks, one hundred and twenty-eight in number, lasted until the 11th of March. It was apprehended that the island would be submerged—the inhabitants were hourly expecting death by a kind of subterranean boiling, which lasted nine days, and when their feet were on the ground, caused a sensation similar to that of a river flowing beneath. They were in apprehension of being on the crater of a volcano, and hourly expected to be thrown into the air by its bursting forth. We can imagine the terror of such scenes, encountered in less than a single month. Under these appalling circumstances, the inhabitants took refuge on board the whalers in port, where they were left awaiting the final event, and trusting to Providence to be enabled to reach the shore. Both these events are to be accounted for by natural causes, developed and operated upon suddenly by the Divine will, for some inscrutable purpose. It is these afflicting events which should induce us to pause, to reflect, to consider how vain is the power of man, how feeble are all our resolves, and how humble we should be before that mighty outstretched arm, which measures the heavens, and strikes unseen at those who have braved the Divine will, and disregarded the Divine ordinances.

IMPORTANCE OF FLANNEL.

The following extract from Robertson on Diet and Regimen, should not be lightly overlooked.

"Sir George Ballingall, in his lectures on military surgery, adduces the testimony of Sir James Macrigor to the statement that, in the Peninsula, the best-clothed regiments were generally the most healthy; adding, that when in India, he witnessed a remarkable proof of the usefulness of flannel in checking the progress of the most aggravated form of dysentery, in the second battalion of the Royals. Captain Murray told Dr. Combe, that 'he was so strongly impressed, from former experience, with a sense of the efficacy of the protection afforded by a constant use of flannel next to the skin, that when, on his arrival in England, in December, 1832, after two years service amid the icebergs on the coast of Labrador, and the ship was ordered to sail immediately for the West Indies, he ordered the purser to draw two flannel shirts and pairs of drawers for each man, and instituted a regular daily inspection to see that they were worn. These precautions were attended with the happiest results. He proceeded to his station with a crew of 150 men; visited almost every island in the West Indies, and many of the ports of the Gulf of Mexico; and notwithstanding the sudden transition from extreme climates, returned to England without the loss of a single man, or having any sick on board on his arrival.' It would be going too far to ascribe this excellent state of health solely to the use of flannel, but there can be little doubt that the latter was an important element in Capt. Murray's success."

A great man once said that it was no wonder that Oxford and Cambridge were such learned places, considering how much knowledge was yearly carried thither, and how little was ever brought away.

HISTORY OF M. POUSSIN.

As M. Paussin the ex-French Minister, has recently become a man of considerable notoriety in consequence of his rejection by the President of the United States, the following account of him by a correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, may be read with interest:

He is the son of an eminent artist, who was distinguished as a historical painter in Paris, about the time of or soon after the Revolution of 1792. In the year 1810 Napoleon was one day looking at the pictures in the Gallery of the Louvre, and, being struck with a battle-piece, he expressed his admiration of it, and asked the Minister of War, who was with him, the name of the artist. He was told that it was Poussin, who had lately died, leaving a widow and promising family in great poverty and distress. Napoleon requested the Minister to remind him of the fact at a suitable time. Subsequently, at the suggestion of the Minister, Napoleon took some notice of the family, and placed Guillaume Tell Poussin—the present Minister—at the Polytechnic School. He graduated with credit, and received a commission in the army.

After the battle of Waterloo and the final downfall of the Emperor, Poussin came to this country, poor, but not dispirited, and ready, with French facility, to turn his hands to any means of an honest living. He was employed by M. Latrobe, the architect, and also by Mr. Lane, as an assistant, at a small salary—some $500 a-year. Subsequently, Gen. Bernard came to this country and accepted the appointment of Chief of the United States corps of Engineers, and commenced the grand system of fortifications which was at that day deemed necessary for national defence. He took M. Poussin into his family, and he was commissioned as an officer of Engineers, with the rank and pay of Captain.

Gen. Bernard, upon the accession of Louis Phillippe, was invited to return to France, and Capt. Poussin accompanied him. After holding some emoluments under the Government of Louis Phillippe, M. Poussin united with the opposition to him. Under the Provisional Government, at the head of which was Lamartine, he was appointed Minister to this country, after the appointment had been declined by M. Tracy—the son of Count de Stael Tracy—who had been favorably known in this country. In both cases the selection was intended to be pleasing to this country and the United States Government.

The election of Louis Napoleon placed M. Poussin in a doubtful position. Though an original Bonapartist, he had not belonged to the party which elevated Louis.

LIFE AT THE MINES.

A letter to the Journal of Commerce, dated Sacramento City, July 23d, gives us a little insight into the comforts of mining:—

"You rise at 4 o'clock, swallow a hasty bit or two, then leap into your 'hole,' and delve there till eleven o'clock. The sun pours down most scorchingly—the high perpendicular rocks on each side reflect the heat, and make it doubly overpowering—above all you are steaming away your life in a deep hole, just large enough for full swing in your horrid labor—and all breezeless as the grave. The feeblest one in the company rocks the machine, the strongest digs in the hole, and the other carries the earth. At last you retire for the forenoon, to scorch over cooking the dinner, and loll panting in the shade till 3 or 4 o'clock. If you have made anything in the morning, this is the time to 'blow gold' from the fine black sand in which the final washing leaves it. Then, until dark, work is pushed.

Such intense heat is beyond all power of description. I have ranged through every variety of climate—have been becalmed a week under the line—but never felt or dreamed of such withering fire as fills the atmosphere every day at noon. Add to this the fact that digging for gold is most severe, weakening labor, and you will not wonder that half of all the emigrants leave the mines within the first week. Most men are not able to work in the sun, as they must if they would work to any advantage; and many who are able will not toil thus 'for all the gold in California.'

The general health of the mines is now excellent. Overwork and exposure to the sun are the only causes of sickness. The river water is melted snow from the mountains, and nothing can be more pleasant or healthful. The snow, however, is nearly all melted, the river falls fast, and will soon be supplied by springs poisoned by beds of copper ore. The water must then be boiled before it is drank; but yet it is impossible to avoid the danger of dysentery and all diseases incident to a feverish climate. Still, this is the best season for digging, and men will heap up their gold dust till Death strikes them down upon their pile of pelf."

RUSSIAN VENGEANCE.

Behind the chapel was a rack, and on both sides of the rack were several rows of gallows some miles in length, and instruments of torture ready for the unfortunate victims. The punishments were in accordance with the degree of culpability and station in society of the rebels. In the first row of gallows the most guilty were executed; after being subject to the rack they were quartered alive. The leaders had their hands and left leg cut off, and afterward impaled on long spikes, and left to their horrible fate. Their groans were heard for miles, and their bodies feasted the eyes of the panic-stricken population. In the second row of gallows they were only quartered, and their sufferings were at least shorter. In the third row the parties were simply beheaded. In the fourth row they were merely hanged. In the fifth they ran the gauntlet and the knout. All the ecclesiestics were burned. There were separate gallows for women, married and maiden. Even children of thirteen years were subjected to great cruelty. Married couples were occasionally hanged on the same gallows, as well as whole families. During the space of three months, 13,000 human beings were executed in the presence of Dolgourouki. Stenko Rosin's nephew and particular friend was quartered. Among the female prisoners was a handsome nun, who over her female garments had a male attire. She commanded a corps of 7,000 men, and gave more than once proofs of extraordinary courage and great ability in the field, and inflicted terrible losses on the Russians. When summoned before Dolgourouki, she displayed a firmness and presence of mind difficult to describe, and said, if every one under her command had done his duty in such a manner as she had done, Dolgourouki, instead of erecting gallows, would have taken to his heels. As for a nun in Russia to run away from a monastery is a capital offence, she lay down quietly on the funeral-pile, and was burned to ashes. The dangling dead bodies of so many thousand veterans brought many crows and ravens, which devoured the corpses. From that time that suburb is called the suburb of hell.

"CARRY ME OUT, FOR GOD IS HERE."

A minister of the Gospel was once preaching upon the character of God, showing his holiness and purity. Before him sat a man who long had resisted all the appeals of God's love, and the threatenings of his wrath, and to human view had become hardened in sin. But God sent an arrow to his heart. As the minister proceeded, an expression of thoughtfulness stole over his face, then he turned pale, and at last, unable longer to control his emotions, he exclaimed, "Carry me out, for God is here!"

Did you ever, when thinking of God, wish that you could escape from him? When you remember that he is a holy God, and cannot look upon sin but with abhorrence, do you not desire to flee from his presence? The wish is vain; whither will you fly? In heaven, where you profess to desire to dwell forever, God is present. But if you cannot bear to think of him here, how can you delight in his presence there? Would you not be ready to cry, "Carry me out, for God is here?" On earth, God's power and goodness create all the beauties that we see, and the planets are upheld in their courses by his hand. Even in hell, God's presence is felt, and adds deeper anguish to that world of woe.

What then will you do? Oh, fly to the cross of Christ. Repent, forsake your sin, and believe—believe that God is willing to forgive you, even you, for the sake of Christ. Give yourself to him, love him, serve him, and thoughts of God will be delightful; you will know him as your Father and your friend, your Almighty All, your everlasting portion, and you will look forward to heaven, as having its greatest attraction in the manifested presence of "God and the Lamb."

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS.—They were passing through the Strand as they talked, and by a newspaper office which was all lighted up and bright. Reporters were coming out of the place or rushing into it in cabs; there were lamps burning in the editors' rooms, and above, where the compositors were at work, the windows of the building were in a blaze of gas. "Look at that, Pen," Warington said; "there she is—the great engine—she never sleeps. She has her ambassadors in every quarter of the world—her couriers upon every road. Her officers march along with armies, and her envoys walk into statesmen's cabinets. They are ubiquitous. Yonder journal has an agent at this minute giving bribes at Madrid, and another inspecting the price of potatoes in Covent Garden. Look! here comes the foreign express galloping in. They will be able to give news in Downing-st. to-morrow; funds will rise or fall, fortunes be made or lost; Lord B. will get up, and holding the paper in his hand, and seeing the noble Marquis in his place, will make a great speech; and Mr. Doolan will be called away from his supper at the back kitchen; for he is a foreign sub-editor, and sees the mail on the newspaper sheet before he goes to his own." And so talking, the friends turned into their chambers, as the dawn was beginning to peep.

BOTANY OF PLATTE RIVER VALLEY.—Dr. Ormsby, in a letter to his daughter, in which he sent several species of new and rare flowers, says: "The whole valley of the Platte is rich in new and most interesting flowers, but very few of which had ever before been seen by the emigrants. Several species of the Cactus are found in great abundance. One in particular is truly beautiful, growing in the shape of a pear, surmounted with a beautiful large purple flower. The whole plain furnishes a most ample field for the speculation of botanists."

THE TEA PLANT.—The cultivation of the Tea Plant, which was undertaken by Mr. James Smith, near Greenfield, S. C. in 1848, has so far proved highly successful. In the fall of 1848 about 500 plants were received from China, via London, and in December they were planted in his garden. A considerable quantity oi tea seed was planted at the same time. Notwithstanding the severe winter and spring, the plants, which were left to take care of themelves, were unharmed, and are now in a flourishing condition. Several specimens of the green and black plant are in bud. The tea plant buds one year, but does not fruit till the next. Next year Mr. Smith expects to pick tea, although his great object for some time to come will be to increase the quantity of his plants. The tea seed was planted at a wrong season, and did not amount to any thing.

MAKING VINEGAR.—Nearly every one knows that in the conversion of cider to vinegar, exposure to the air is essential. The more thorough this exposur, the more rapid will be the formation of the vinegar. The Ohio Cultivator says: "We have seen this effectually done by causing it to run slowly from a barrel placed up stairs, through an aperture in the floor and ceiling, on a loose pile of fine sticks or shavings, below, through which the air could pass freely, then draining into a cask in the cellar."

KEEP OFF THE FLIES.—Flies are a great trouble to horses at this season. This evil may be prevented by rubbing upon the inside of their ears a little grease or oil, which should be repeated occasionally. Every merciful man who has a horse, will be "merciful to his beast," and prevent this injury.

ANNUAL MORTALITY OF CITIES.—London, 1 in 45; S. Petersburgh, 1 in 20; Genoa, 1 in 46; Paris, 1 in 32; Berlin, 1 in 34; Vienna, 1 in 25; Rome, 1 in 31; Geneva, 1 in 40; Philadelphia, 1 in 42; Boston, 1 in 40; New York, 1 in 35; New Orleans, one in 20; St. Louis, 1 in 25.

A STANZA,

TO BE ADDED TO THE SONG, "OFT IN THE STILLY NIGHT."

O, Jesus! thou who art
The balm for every sorrow,
Breathe now upon my heart
A hope of heaven's blest morrow,
Then in this mournful, mortal night,
Ere death's cold sleep has bound me,
Thy love shall bring celestial light,
With friends restored around me.
Thus, in this mournful night,
Ere death's cold sleep has bound me,
Fond hope shall bring the light
Of heavenly bliss around me.

BEM.—The following anecdote is going its rounds in Vienna concerning Bem. For many years he has had foreboding of his death. He himself has for many years assigned the year 1850 as the term of his existence. During his stay in Paris he once dined with the North American Ambassador. The conversation fell on foreboding, omen, and the like. The ambassador laughed at them, but Bem declared he firmly believed in them and related how he had thrice seen, when in his twentieth year, his own gravestone, with his name and the date of 1850 on it. Bem received in Transylvania several dangerous wounds. The physician shook his head, but Bem answered it quite calmly by saying that he had another year to live. On the faith of this vision, Bem exposes himself in battle to the hottest fire, and declares that the ball which shall hit him mortally will not do so before the the year 1850.

A COURT IN TEARS.—At Dedham, yesterday, says the Boston Traveler of the 22d, three Greeks were placed on trial for stealing a horse in Medway. From the inability of the prisoners to speak English, Dr. Howe, of this city was called upon to act as interpreter. One of the number on conviction, addressed the court in extenuation of their offence, detailing the events of their lives, and the wrongs and sufferings they had endured in their own land. After endeavoring in vain to get employment in this country, they were recommended to go to California. To obtain means to do so, they stole the horse, upon which the charge was brought. The address being interpreted, threw the whole court into tears.

VARIETY.

Daniel O'Connell was of opinion that Shakspeare was a Catholic, because, says he, he makes all of his monks and friars good men. But, said Mr. Lucas, the editor of the Tablet, "Shakspeare shows a strong disinclination to give temporal authority and power to the Pope." "That," replied O'Connell, "is a perfectly Catholic sentiment, and one in which I fully and cordially participate, so far as concerns the Pope's temporal dominions."

It is stated that three clergymen in succession, who were appointed chaplains to the Liverpool Cemetery, have become mentally deranged. The circumstance is attributed to their constant repetition (sometimes as often as six times a day) of the funeral service, and the impressiveness of the sad spectacle of which they were habitually the spectators.

The Bishop of Oxford recently sent round his diocess a circular of inquiries, amongst which was the following:—"Does your officiating clergyman preach the gospel, and are his conversation and carriage consistent therewith?" To this query the church-warden, near Wallingford, replied, "He preaches the gospel, but does not keep a carriage."

One of our exchanges says—"It is estimated that the rats in the United States consume $900,000 worth of grain in the year." Curious as this statement is, it would be still more curious to know by what strange process of ratiocination it was arrived at.

A man named Jackson, of the Baltimore schooner Cecil, while searching for specie aboard the sunken frigate San Pedro off the Spanish coast, left the diving bell, and rose sixty feet through the water to the surface, but died soon after.

An old gentleman who has dabbled all his life in statistics, says he never heard of more than one woman who insured her life. He accounts for this by the singular fact of one of the questions on every insurance paper being, "What is your age?"

A fellow out West, having been challenged lately to mortal combat, selected as his weapons two huge plates of green cucumbers, cut in slices, with vinegar, and a full dozen of green apples to each plate, as a dessert. His opponent backed out.

"I do not wish to say anything against the individual in question," said a very polite gentleman, "but I would merely remark, in the language of the poet, that to him truth is strange, 'stranger than fiction.'"

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German. Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery. 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
RICHARD H. BULL, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE CHOLERA.

Toward the end of the last century (in 1781), a body of 5,000 troops, stationed at Ganjam, a coast town, 535 miles north-east of Madras, were suddenly attacked with a disease, of such incredible malignity, that men in perfect health dropped down dead by dozens. Exclusively of those then smitten with instantaneous death, more than 500 men sickened in one day and for the most part sank beyond recovery within an hour. Next day, the distemper still raged with unabated fury, and on the third day more than half the army had perished or were in the hospital. Next year (in 1782) the troops under Sir John Burgoyne at Madras suffered from a similar, though less severe disorder, which within a month had attacked 1,000 men, of whom some died in the first hour, others expired after a day or two in horrible convulsions, and very few recovered.

The year afterward (1783) the same strange malady broke out among the pilgrims at Hurdword, and swept off no less than 20,000 of the worshipers at the celebrated shrine. At about the same time many of the inhabitants of India, civil as well as military, were seized with this cruel distemper, which the Moslems called "mordechim," or bowel-death. The term "mordechim" was corrupted, by persons more conversant with French than Persian, into mort de chien. The symptoms of mort de chien, as described by Mr. Curtis, who witnessed many cases of it both in Madras and Ceylon at that period, are identical with those of our Spasmodic Cholera.

The origin of Cholera cannot be distinctly traced to any earlier epoch. The Brahminical records, indeed, vaguely notice a somewhat similar disease as having prevailed among the Hindoos in remote antiquity; and Bontius, a practitioner in Batavia, about two centuries ago, describes, under the name of Cholera, a bilious distemper then prevalent in the Dutch settlement at Java. Passages, too, in the works of Hippocrates, Aretæus, Josephus, and Zacutus de Lisbonne, have been advanced in proof of the antiquity of cholera; and some have supposed that it was this pestilence which, in the time of King Hezekiah, overtook the Assyrian army, and smote, in one night, a hundred and four score thousand men. But whether these ancient plagues were really spasmodic Cholera cannot now be determined. No definite traces of its existence can be found before the outbreak of the mort de chien; and this distemper, we know, never spread beyond the confines of India.

In 1817, however, the mort de chien burst forth in Bengal with extraordinary malignity, and was found to have changed its character. No longer localized in the tropics, it was observed to travel rapidly westward; and men began to forebode, from its rate and course, that it would soon invade the continent of Europe. The circumstances of this disastrous outbreak—the origin of the mortality under which we are now suffering—deserve attentive consideration. The overflow of the river Ganges had swelled to a greater hight than usual the annual inundation of the marshy plains adjacent. Cities and villages appeared like houses in a temporary ocean, covered with innumerable boats, and traversed even by vessels of 100 tons burden. The whole country round Jessore was one sheet of water, and those jungly marshes, known as the Sunderbunds, which are intersected by numberless streams forming the delta of the Ganges, lay steaming in a moist, calm air, neither quite overflowed, nor yet quite dry, a hot-bed of putrescent miasma.

It was under such circumstances, aggravatedly the heats of August, that the first seizure occurred at Jessore. The mortality spread rapidly among the population, infecting chiefly the miserable Pariahs who earn, by excessive toil under a vertical sun, only about 4c. a day, and who live in squalid hovels, crowded and damp, in the filthiest quarters of the town. In a few weeks 10,000 souls, a sixth of the population, had perished. The civil courts were closed, business was suspended, and the wealthior inhabitants fled in crowds to the country. Within a month the disease broke out in Calcutta, about 100 miles to the south-west, brought, as some say, by fugitives from Jessore; originating spontaneously, as others suppose, from the same cause in both places. Here, also, it committed fearful ravages, destroying daily 200 persons. Its migratory character soon became terribly apparent; within a few weeks it had devastated every town and village within an area of several thousand square miles, from Sylhet in the east, to Cuttack in the west, and from the mouths of the Ganges upward to its confluence with the Jumna.

From this central district the pestilence traveled by three principal streams, one flowing south-west along the Coromandel coast to Madras; another, south-east, along the opposite coast of the Bay of Bengal to Arracan and the Malay peninsula; a third, westward, along the valley of the Ganges to Bundeleund, where the grand army, consisting of 10,000 fighting men and 80,000 camp followers, was assembled under the Marquis of Hastings.

The south-western stream took twelve months to reach Madras; in six months more it had crossed to the north coast of Ceylon, which island it rapidly over ran; and thence it was conveyed in the Topaz frigate to the Mauritius, where it appeared in November, 1819.

The south-eastern stream traveled more slowly. It took twelve months to reach Arracan, and twelve more to descend along the coast to the Malay peninsula. At the British settlement of Penang (an island on that coast) it destroyed three-fourths of the population. Thence it made its way through Sumatra, Java and the Spice Islands to Timor, its extreme south-eastern limit, spreading at the same time northward to the Philippine Islands, where it decimated the barbarian tribes, who rose against the Chinese and Europeans, accused them of magic, and butchered many thousands. At Pontiana, a Dutch settlement on the western coast of Borneo, it carried off the whole garrison except one man. Still running northward, (in 1820) it reached Canton, ravaged Pekin in 1821, and after devastating China for several years, passed the Great Wall in 1827, and spread through many parts of Mongolia. It is not true, therefore, though the assertion is common, and has been made the basis of a theory of Choleraic propagation, that this disease only travels westward.

The western stream, traveling about 400 miles in three months, against the periodical monsoon, and infecting some but sparing others of the towns and villages in its track, reached, early in November, the British army encamped on low ground, on the banks of the Scinde. It turned the camp into an hospital. Nine thousand men, about a tenth of whom were English or Sepoy soldiers, the rest camp followers, perished in a week. The sentinel was often seized at his post—his successor would be smitten too—a third man, and a fourth, would sometimes succumb before the two hours duty was performed. Many fell down in convulsions while carrying their comrades to the hospitals. The neighboring ravines were fiilled the with dead, for whose burial time and hands were wanting. For miles around, the fields and highways were strewn with the bodies of those who had vainly sought safety in flight. And when at length the Commander-in-Chief determined to move in search of a healthier position, the line of march presented the appearance of a battle-field. Nor was it till the army reached a high position at Erich, 50 miles off, on the steep dry banks of the Betwah, that the disease among them began to subside.

Within twelve months, that is, by August 1818, the western stream of the epidemic, pursuing its course along the Ganges and its tributary, the Jumna, had reached Delhi, spreading also to Saharampore and Kotah, towns situated just within the western limit of the basin drained by those rivers. Having ravaged these and many intervening towns, it stopt abruptly for nearly a year, arrested by the mountain range which bounds the basin in question on the west. By the time it reached Delhi, however, it had also spread northwards to the high table-land of Nepaul, on the southern slope of the Himalayah mountains, which checked for years its farther progress toward Central Asia. At the same time it had made its way southward to Bombay, where also it appeared in August 1818; and whence, six months later, it descended to the Trivandrum, and to the coasts of Cape Comorin, the most southern point of India.

Briefly within 18 months from its first outbreak, the epidemic had overrun the whole Indian peninsula, and had proceeded, in its course towards Europe, to the hills forming the western boundary of the basin of the rivers Ganges and Jumna. These hills, though their eastern slope was devastated by the epidemic for nearly twelve months, checking its career, to the great joy of the inhabitants of Chittore and the other territories lying westward of the range, who thought themselves secure from the terrible enemy which had taken possession of the opposite plains. Their fancied immunity was soon, however, at an end. Suddenly, in July, 1819, the people of Chittore learned, to their consternation, that the Cholera was at Oudeypore, the metropolis of the principality; and that, entering the royal palace, it had attacked the Prince himself, and had destroyed his Prime Minister in a few hours. In this city, as also at Ajneer and many towns adjacent, it committed dreadful havoc. Another pause—this time of two years—ensued. The mountain chain and burning deserts which lie westward of Hindostan seem for a while to have barred its passage.

In July, 1821, it broke out with tremendous violence at Muscat, Bushire, and Bussorah, the three principal ports of the Persian Gulf. In Muscat alone, 10,000 persons perished. At Bushire the houses were abandoned, the bazars closed, and the streets strewn with unburied corpses. At Bussorah 18,000 persons, nearly a third of the population, died in eleven days. While raging thus virulently round the shores of the Persian Gulf, the disease also spread rapidly from Bussorah, at the mouth of the Tigris, up to the great basin of that river and its confluent, the Euphrates. In one month it had reached Bagdad, then invested by the Persians, and destroyed thousands, as well of the besiegers as of the besieged.

During the Winter of this year (1821) its violence in some degree subsided. Next Summer, however, (1822) it resumed its march toward Europe, extending along the Tigris to Aleppo, and along the Euphrates to Ezeroum, in Armenia. It was raging in town when the Persian army (who had the infection among them) advanced, between 30,000 and 40,000 strong, to fight an equal body of Turks, encamped on high table-land in the vicinity. The Turks were not only beaten, but they became infected during the battle; and, indeed the victors, as well as the vanquished fell by thousands beneath the strokes of an invisible enemy, more terrible than any human foe. Between 3,000 and 4,000 of the Persians perished; whole troops deserted, panic-smitten; the rear of their line of march was strewn with dead bodies; and, by the time they reached Khooc, scarcely an army remained for the Prince of Persia, their leader, to dismiss. As for the fugitive Turks, they fled, doubly routed, to Bakou, on the western shore of the Caspian, spreading the infection along the road they traversed.

During the next year (1823) the disease made little further progress. It spread westward from Aleppo to Antioch, and several other ports on the western coast of the Mediterranean, and from Bakou it extended northward, along the western shore of the Caspian, to Astrachan, a Russian port at the mouth of the Volga. Here, however, it only occasioned a mortality of 144 persons, and then died out—it was fondly hoped forever.

Six years elapsed.

During this period the pestilence paused, strangely, on the western skirts of Europe. No quarantine was enforced; no obstacle was opposed to the streams of human intercourse flowing westward from the infected places. The plague seemed to be exhausted, and the alarm which its proximity had excited soon ceased and was forgotten. In the summer of 1829 it again gave signs of its existence in unabated malignity on the western boundary of Europe. It broke out in Orenburg, a town on the Tartar frontier, 400 miles up the river Ural, which extends northward from the Caspian Sea, whose shores the disease had ravaged in 1823. In Orenburg, and in the surrounding province, a tenth of the inhabitants were seized; and about a fourth of the smitten perished. This second warning renewed for a moment the forgotton fears of the Europeans. But no measures were taken to resist the impending pestilence.

With the subsidence of the disease during the winter, the apathy of Europe returned. No steps were taken to abate the filth and misery of their overcrowded towns. Their grave-yards, their slaughter-houses, their reeking cess-pools, still loaded with putrid steam the stagnant air; and their squalid populations, with blood already half corrupt and fevered, were suffered to lie strewn in the path of the epidemic, like prey in the path of a lion.

Next year, in 1839, during the heat of July, the smoldering pestilence broke out again in Persia, again crept along the western shore of the Caspian, infecting Salainy at the mouth of the Volga, and many intermediate towns. But this time it spread westward along the valley of the Kur to Tiflis, which it reached and ravaged within a month. It also ran westward into Caucassia, along the rivers Terek and Kuma. And from Astrachan it ran in 21 days 400 miles up the Volga to Saratoff, where it destroyed within a month 2,367 persons. From Saratoff it continued rapidly to ascend the Volga toward Moscow, where next month (September 14, 1830,) two or three cases were reported.

The Emperor of Russia now became alarmed. He threw a cordon sanitaire round Moscow, established a strict quarantine at its gates, and enjoined a careful isolation of the sick. In spite of these measures the disease spread rapidly, attacking chiefly the squalid inhabitants of a low-lying triangular island, formed by two branches of the river, connected by a canal. Here, in six weeks, above 3,000 perished. In the hight of the panic, while the town was strictly isolated, and the disease universally believed to be contagious, the Emperor Nicholas came himself to Moscow, to raise the spirits of his subjects, by showing himself ready to partake their danger. It is impossible not to admire the personal gallantry of such conduct. It does not, however, appear that the power of the autocrat was exerted to cleanse the Augean filth of which he boldly braved the perilous effects. The disease continued to ascend to the northwest, spreading from the Caspian to the Baltic at such a rate as would have infected all Europe in three months. Considerable apprehension prevailed; but still, in our great cities, the dead were buried as usual amid the living; still men were content to live surrounded by the offal of slaughter-houses; and then, as now, they continued to breathe the exhalations of black ditches, of open gully holes, and of noisome tanks, brimming with accumulated ordure.

The results of their supineness soon appeared.

While the Cholera was thus ascending the Volga to Moscow, and thence to Petersburg and the shores of the Baltic, it also spread down the river Don to the borders of the Black Sea, reaching Odessa and the mouth of the Danube soon after its outbreak in Moscow. The pestilence now made its way across the continent by several parallel streams. Along the valley of the Danube it spread to Vienna, which it reached in August, 1831. Along the shores of the Baltic, it crept from Petersburg, by way of Riga and Stettin, to Berlin, where it also appeared in 1831. An intermediate stream reached Warsaw and Cracow in the same year, and ravaged many towns of Poland. The Polish army are said to have taken the disease during a battle with the Russians, as the Turks had previously become infected in a conflict with the Persians.

From these principal streams the infection was diffused along the roads and rivers throughout Austria, Hungary, and Germany, till, among other places, it reached Hamburg in the Autumn of 1831.

Reverting for a moment to the East, we find Egypt attacked in the same year (1831,) the disease having been brought to Cairo by the pilgrims returning from Mecca, which had itself been infected by worshipers arriving from the tainted parts of Persia and India. At Mecca, 20,000 of the pilgrims perished in four days; and at Cairo the mortality was so terrible that even the physicians perished, and the hospitals were filled with shrieking wretches dying without aid. Constantinople had already, two months earlier, been entered by a pestilential stream branching southward from that which we have already traced along the shores of the Black Sea and up the valley of the Danube. In its westward progress through Europe to the point at which we left it, (Hamburg,) the pest disseminated its virus to these and many other towns which our limits oblige us to pass unnoticed.

It was early in October, 1831, that Hamburg was attacked. On the 26th of the same month, the disease broke out at Sutherland, on our Eastern coast, brought thither, it is supposed, by an infected vessel from Hamburg.

At that time, strangely enough, France was still uninfected, as also were the Spanish and Italian Peninsulas. Almost simultaneously with its appearance at Sunderland, the disease broke out in London among the shipping in the Thames, though not one of the intervening towns had as yet taken the infection. Four months afterward (in February, 1832,) Edinburgh was attacked, and a few weeks later the disease appeared in Dublin. It spread gradually throughout Great Britain and Ireland, and destroyed about 30,000 persons. Calais and Paris were affected nearly simultaneously in March, 1832; not, therefore, as might have been expected, by propagation of the disease from Germany along the Rhine, but obviously by a reverted stream from England. From these centers the epidemic spread through France, sometimes apparently by leaps to distant and isolated points. The mortality in this country was much greater than in Britain, Paris alone losing upward of 18,000 souls. Three months later (June, 1832) the pestilence appeared at Quebec. In the same month it broke out at New York, and, spreading rapidly, ravaged nearly the whole American continent.

While the western stream of virus was thus rapidly completing the circuit of the globe, a reflux current, traveling more slowly from England, in a south easterly direction, attacked Lisbon and Madrid in 1833, spread during 1834 throughout the Peninsula, infecting the British garrison at Gibraltar, penetrated in 1835 to Piedmont, Genoa, and Florence, (which, the Alps, it would seem, had previously protected,) reached Naples in 1836, and Rome in 1837.

At Naples, a rigorous quarantine proved utterly ineffectual. The city was surrounded with military cordons; the smitten were pitilessly torn from their beds, and isolated in a distant hospital; the physicians traversed the streets in black sacks of waxen canvass, with glasses inserted to see through. These terrific measures spread such a panic among the indabitants that 30,000 fled in a few days; the populace, declaring the food to be poisoned, began to rise; the king found it necessary, for their pacification, to walk through the most infected streets, to partake of the suspected bread, and to suspend the obnoxious quarantine regulations.

Marseilles and Toulon, which had escaped strangely enough when France was first overrun, were attacked by the retrogade current in 1835; and from those ports the disorder was carried to Algiers, which it ravaged in 1837, and whence it spread along the northern coast of Africa. In the same year (1837) Malta was attacked most severely, losing in 12 weeks 3,784 persons out of a population of 103,344.

From this rapid outline it will be seen that the cholera of 1847, in its course to England, had three periods of active progress. Two years it took to overrun India; two to pass through Central Europe to Great Britain. During two years it paused in its career on the western boundary of Hindostan; during six it smoldered on the Eastern verge of Europe. The two southern peninsulas of Europe, isolated in a great measure by the Alps and the Pyrenees, enjoyed a further special respite; nor was it till 20 years after its outbreak in Bengal, that this terrible disease had fetched the compass of the habitable globe. In its westward progress the disease was observed to have added to its former terrors a new and destructive feature—the consecutive fever; of which thousands perished after surviving the stage of collapse.

After lingering in each country for two or three years after the date of its arrival, the cholera subsided in Europe. In India, however, it became endemic, raging yearly for a period of several months, and yearly exciting the liveliest apprehensions lest it should burst its bounds and again overshadow the whole earth. Nothing, however, was done to prevent a second invasion, or to meet it, if it should occur. The track of cholera had been abundantly proved to be that of Typhus, both diseases attacking especially persons debilitated by overwork, insufficient diet, damp, crowded lodgings, and close mephitic air. Everywhere the squalid abodes of the poor and their miserable inmates had been the chief seats and subjects of disease. Yet the filth of London was left to ferment in its 300,000 cesspools; the foul tidal ditches of Bermondsey, Shoreditch, and Lambeth, still loaded with their stench the stagnant air; and every year 40,000 more corpses were added to the sodden mass of putresence on which our metropolis stands. And what is true of London is true also of Moscow and Petersburg, of Berlin, Vienna, and Paris; of Lisbon, Madrid, and Rome. Everywhere apathy and indolence followed on the subsidence of panic.

Of that apathy and that indolence Europe is at this moment suffering the consequences. The pestilence now raging has pursued, with but little deviations, the track of its predecessor, traveling, however, more rapidly, and committing fiercer ravages than before. Many cities—as, for instance, Petersburg and Berlin—were attacked at the same season, and even in the same month, in 1847, as in 1830. The same streets—nay, even the very same houses—that suffered most severely before, are suffering most severely now; and towns which, like Birmingham, escaped in 1830, are again enjoying a similar immunity.

Wealthy Stewards.—A correspondent of the Visitor, writing from Bath, England, says :—

"I must give you a fine idea advanced the other day by Mr. Jay. He was speaking to professed Christians, and reminded them that they were stewards, and said it was always a suspicious thing to see stewards grow very wealthy. He said it was a disgrace for a Christian to die very rich, and he wished ministers, when they preached funeral sermons for men who died so ingloriously, would say how much money they left, that the world might see with how much sincerity they had been singing for years—

"All that I am and all I have
Shall be forever thine;
Whate'er my duty bids me give My cheerful hands resign."

OCTOBER.

BY THE LATE WILLIS G. CLARK.

Solemn, yet beautiful to view,
Month of my heart! thou dawnest here,
With sad and faded leaves to strew
The Summer's melancholy bier.
The moaning of thy winds I hear,
As the red sunset dies afar,
And bars of purple clouds appear,
Obscuring every weltern star.

Thou solemn month! I hear thy voice;
It tells my soul of other days,
When but to live was too rejoice,
When earth was lovely to my gaze!
Oh, visions bright—oh blessed hours,
Where are their living raptures now?
I ask my spirit's wearied powers—
I ask my pale and fevered brow!

I look to Nature, and behold
My life's dim emblems rustling round,
In hues of crimson and of gold—
The year's dead honors on the ground;
And sighing with the winds, I feel,
While their low pinions murmur by,
How much their sweeping tones reveal
Of life and human destiny.

When Spring's delightsome moments shone,
They came in zephyrs from the West,
They bore the wood-lark's melting tone,
They stirred the blue lake's glassy breast;
Though Summer, fainting in the heat,
They lingered in the forest shade;
But, changed and strengthened now, they beat
In storm, o'er mountain, glen and glade.

How like those transports of the breast
When life is fresh and joy is new,
Soft as the halcyon's downy nest,
And transient all as they are true!
They stir the leaves in that bright wreath,
Which Hope about her forehead twines
Till Grief's hot sighs around it breathe;
Then Pleasure's lip its smile resigns.

Alas, for Time, and Death, and Care,
What gloom about our way they fling!
Like clouds in Autumn's gusty air,
The burial-pageant of the Spring;
The dreams that each successive year
Seemed bathed in hues of brighter pride,
At last like withered leaves appear,
And sleep in darkness side by side!

NAPOLEON AND PEACE.

The following remarkable and noble sentiments are quoted by the Eclectric Review (English) from Napoleon. They embody as the British Banner truly says of them, the grandest idea pertaining to his dominion that ever entered that "meridian intelligence." He is speaking in reference to the peace of Amiens :—

"I believed then, with the utmost good faith, that the lot of France, and of Europe, and my own, were fixed, the war being finished. It was the English Cabinet that rekindled it all; it is to it alone that Europe owes all the calamities that followed—it alone is responsible. For me, I meant to devote myself to the administration of affairs in France, and I believe that I should have brought forth prodigies. I should have lost nothing on the side of glory, but gained much on the side of happiness. I should have made the moral conquest of all Europe, as I was on the eve of accomplishing it by arms. Of what luster am I deprived! . . I had a project for general peace, by drawing all the powers to an immense reduction of their standing armies. And then, perhaps, as intelligence became generally diffused, one might be permitted to dream of the application to the great European family of an institution like the American Congress, or that of the Amphictyon in Greece; and then what a perspective of greatness, of happiness, of prosperity—what a grand and magnificent spectacle! However that may be, this agglomeration of European peoples must arrive sooner or later by the mere force of events. The impulse is already given, and I do not think, after my fall, and the disappearance of my system, that any balance of power will be possible in Europe but this union and federation of the great nations. The first sovereign who, in the midst of the first great disturbance, shall embrace in good faith the cause of the people, will find himself at the head of all Europe, and will be able to undertake any thing he wishes." Elsewhere he says, "There are, in fact, now only two nations, the Eastern and the Western. France, England, Spain, &c., have the same customs, the same religion, and nearly the same ideas. It is only one family, and those who wish to set them at war, wish for a civil war."

TO MAKE A GOOD MINISTER.

A young man was settled in a large and popular congregation in New-England, under very flattering circumstances. The church and people had settled him with the belief that he was a young man of more than ordinary talents, and with the expectation of his becoming a distinguished man. After a year or two, when the novelty of the thing had worn off, the current seemed to change, and the feeling prevailed that Mr. B—— was not, or likely to be, quite what they expected. He did not grow as they thought he would; he did not perform that amount of labor which was needed to build up the church and interest the congregation. Things dragged heavily. The young man felt the influence of the chill atmosphere which thus surrounded him. His spirits sunk, his health run down, and it was whispered around in the society, and in the neighboring towns, that Mr. B—— would probably have to leave; he was not the man for the place; he was not the man of talents which they had anticipated.

While things were in this state, at a meeting of the church, when the pastor was absent, (perhaps called to see what should be done,) Mr. O——, an intelligent member of the church, arose and said, "Brethren, I think we have been in fault respecting our minister. I think he is a young man of superior talents, and will one day be a distinguished man. But we have not sustained and encouraged him as we should. We have not spoken of him to others, with esteem and confidence, as we should. We have been standing and looking on, expecting him to raise both himself and us to eminence. Now let us adopt a different course. Let us encourage our minister with our prayers, our sympathies and efforts. Let us speak of him with esteem and confidence to others, and say that we think him a man of talent, who bids fair to be a distinguished man."

The thing was agreed on. The leading men set the example. Very soon every one was speaking in favor of Mr. B——. His people visited him, sympathized with him, encouraged him; and people out of the society began to think that Mr. B—— was rising in the estimation of his people. The young man felt the change. The cold, damp chill, by which he had been surrounded, and which had benumbed the energies of his soul, was exchanged for a warm, genial atmosphere. His spirits rose, his health returned, his energies awoke, and he soon showed to all that he had within the elements of a man.

Several revivals have attended his labors. In the affections of the church and people he has long since firmly established himself. They delight in him as a man of talent, as well as a good man. His name has become enrolled honorably among American authors, and he is one whom his own church and the churches of New-England delight to honor.

OLD CHAIRS AT INTEREST.

Nobody in all the neighborhood interested me like Mr. ——; I love to think of the dear old gentleman. How pleasant was it to run into his bright little parlor, and sit by his side, hearing him talk or talking to him, reading to him or hearing him read, asking questions or listening to stories of old times when he was a boy. Though his frame bore the frosts and infirmities of threescore years and ten, they had not chilled his heart; it was still young and fresh, and brimful of kindness. It also held his purse-strings, so that from the little parlor streamed substantial blessings, as well as hearty love; and it happened that I had occasion to know how often they found their way to the humble lodging of a poor widow and her daughter.

These were the relics of a past generation, and they seemed to be almost strangers amidst the new one which had sprung up around them. They had, in a measure, outlived their connections, their property, their early friendships; and the poor make no new friends. Few cared for them, and they cared for few. The only light that warmed or cheered them was the setting sun of days gone by. But if this warmed them, it could not feed or shelter them, or hinder the embarrassments of poverty, had not the old man's purse come to their aid; and so steadily did he eke out the scanty income of the widow, that I sometimes thought he was like to make her believe that her last days were her best days. I used often to wonder why he was so thoughtful of her wants; others were not, and what claim had she upon him?

One evening, in speaking of his early struggles, he said, "When Mary and I were married, we were young and foolish, for we had nothing to be married with; but Mary was delicate, and I thought I could take care of her best. I knew I had a stout arm and a brave heart to depend upon. We rented a chamber and went to housekeeping. We got together a little furniture—a table, bedstead and dishes—but our money failed us before we bought the chairs. I told Mary she must turn up the tub, for I could not run in debt; no, no. It was not long before our rich neighbor, Mrs. M., found us out, and kindly enough she supplied our necessities; half-a-dozen chairs were added to our stock. They were old ones, to be sure, but answer just as well for us. I shall never forget the new face those chairs put upon our snug quarters—they never looked just right before. The tables are turned with Mrs. M. and me now; she has become a poor widow, but she shall never want while I have anything, never!" cried the old man with a beaming face. "I don't forget those old chairs."

Ah! now the secret was out. It was the interest of the old chairs which maintained the poor widow. She was living upon an income drawn from the interest and compound interest of a little friendly act done fifty years before, and it sufficed for herself and daughter.

How beautiful it is to see how God blesses the operation of his great moral law, "Love thy neighbor." [American Mes.

STERLING'S DEATH.

On the 16th of September it was evident that his end was at hand. In this conviction he said, "I thank the All-wise One." On the 18th he wrote the following lines for his sister,—"This is for you; you will care more for this :"—

"Could we but hear all Nature's voice,
From glow-worm up to sun,
'Twould speak with one concordant sound,
'Thy will, O God, be done.'
But hark, a sadder, mightier prayer,
From all men's hearts that live:
'Thy will be done in earth and heaven,
And thou my sins forgive.'"

These were the last words he wrote. He murmured over the last two lines to himself. As it grew dusk, he appeared to be seeking for something, and on his sister asking what he wanted, said, "Only the old Bible which I used at Herstmonceux in the cottages." In the night he grew worse; and before eleven o'clock the last struggle was over, and his spirit had departed.

Apt Remark.—Good old Roger Ascham, the instructor of the unfortunate Lady Jane Grey, says :—"It is a pity, that commonly more care is had, yea, and that among very wise men, to find out rather a cunning man for their horse than a cunning man for their children. They say Nay! in one word, but they do so in deed; for to one they give two hundred pounds, and to the other but two hundred shillings. God, that sitteth in heaven, laugheth their choice to scorn, and rewardeth their liberality as it should be. For he suffereth them to have tame and well-ordered horses, but wild and unfortunate children; and therefore in the end they find more pleasure in their horse, than comfort in their child."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 11, 1849.

ABANDONMENT OF THE SABBATH.

Whatever may be thought concerning the acceptablenes of Sunday sabbatizing, it is a fact that those who have abandoned the Bible Sabbath for the first day of the week, have almost uniformly turned out badly. Some have gone from one step of declension to another, until they have become open infidels. This is not surprising. They abandoned the institution which the Creator ordained to be a standing witness against athiesm; what wonder is it, if they finally deny the Creator himself? Others have found their resting place in the bosom of Holy Mother Church. No wonder; it was the "man of sin," that "thought to change times and laws," and having once acknowledged his right to do so by symbolizing with him in the observance of the Sunday, it was easy for them to make a few more concessions, and, at last, to identify themselves with him perfectly. Others again have become loose in their morals, indifferent to the ordinances of religion, and, in some instances, such a reproach to the cause, that the societies into whose communion they have been received, have cursed the day that their acquaintance with them began. Some few, who have maintained a tolerable standing, have, nevertheless, been so lacking in the power of Godliness, that their children have been encouraged to take the way to ruin, and have lived only to be a curse to the world. Thus, in almost every instance, God seems to have frowned upon their dereliction of the path of duty.

In view of these painful facts, we should be led to doubt, whether "one day is as good as another," as we often hear it asserted. By the appointment of the seventh day, God has signified that day to be better than any other for sabbatizing; and he has given us the reason, viz. that it is the day on which He sabbatized. Now, as He has appointed the day, definitely and specifically, and has commanded that "in it [in that particular day] thou shalt not do any work," it is a difficult matter to make the conscience very sensitive and tenacious about any other day. This difficulty becomes Herculean with respect to those who have once clearly seen and acknowledged the claims of the appointed day. No man who leaves the Sabbath can, by any possibility, be made conscientious about the first day of the week. It is as clear as a sunbeam to him, that it is not the day which God has enjoined. The doctrine which he necessarily embraces is that of no-Sabbath. And having been led, as a mere matter of convenience, to disregard the day which God has enjoined, his reverence for the divine authority is weakened; it is an easy matter for him then to take another step in disobedience, and then another, and so on, until he lands where his "folly is made manifest to all men." Besides, when one has come to the conclusion that there is no Sabbath,—no day, under the gospel, that is more holy than another—and acts accordingly, he puts himself, in a good measure, beyond the reach of religious influence. He does not feel conscience bound to set apart the popular day to devotional purposes; consequently he neglects his closet, makes it a day of ease or pleasure, and is not recovered from the worldly mindedness which the cares of the previous week have induced. The world retains its unbroken hold upon him; no check is opposed to it; and he progresses from one degree of worldly mindedness to another, till thoughts of God and heaven are well nigh banished from his heart. What wonder is it, then, that those who abandon God's appointed Sabbath, should proceed from bad to worse, till they are locked in the embraces of the mother of harlots, or entangled in the meshes of infidelity.

We are by no means disposed to make the keeping of the Sabbath the sum of all religion; but we do believe that it often serves as a test of the state of the heart towards God, better than any other religious duty, and perhaps more effectually than all other duties together. The great thing in religion is, to have the heart right. It is not so much what a man does, as from what motive does he act? And, in order to ascertain the motive, it is necessary to look at the circumstances under which it becomes necessary for him to perform his duty. Hence, a positive institution sometimes seems better to indicate the state of a man's heart towards God, than a duty which is more strictly moral. We say sometimes; for we are aware that it does not always. In the midst of a community thoroughly pervaded by Baptist sentiments, it would be no great self-denial to submit to the institution of baptism. Under such circumstances, therefore, the observance of a positive rite is not sufficient to indicate what the man is. But place him in a community where Baptist sentiments are despised; especially, place him in some country where the avowal of such sentiments, and practical obedience to them, would be visited with fines and imprisonment, as has been the case in Germany, Denmark, and some other countries; and his observance of this positive institution becomes a better test of his willingness to "count all things loss for Christ," than the practice of nine-tenths of the duties of the moral law would without this observance. So with the Sabbath. The circumstances under which men are generally called to keep it are such, that it seems to test whether a man is a true Christian, better than the performance of most religious duties, without this, would. It is unpopular; everybody sneers at the keeping of it. It is inconvenient; the whole framework of society is adjusted to the keeping of another day. It is unprofitable; our people are shut out of many situations highly lucrative, because they require the performance of duty on the Sabbath. Add to this, they are liable to fines and imprisonments, even in this boasted land of religious liberty, if they perform common labor on the "Christian (?) Sabbath." Yet, a man may perform a great many other religious acts, and have "good report of all men." He may pray, and sing psalms very devoutly; he may visit the sick, give to the poor, subscribe largely to the support of missions, and other benevolent objects; he may be chaste in his speech, dutiful to his parents, a hater of adultery and lying;—all these, and much more, he may do, yet who will think the worse of him? His generally upright life, therefore, is an uncertain index of the state of his heart. It is not yet certain whether he would be willing to have his name cast out as evil, and be made as "the filth of the world and the offscouring of all things," for Christ's sake. He must be put to the test by some duty which is of no esteem among men. For who is a genuine disciple that is not willing to suffer the loss of all things for Christ's sake?

In view of these considerations, it is evident that the abandoment of the Sabbath is not simply a change of views; it is a complete apostacy from Christian principle. No wonder, therefore, that one who is guilty of it goes the downward road. Indeed, we have never yet heard of a well-authenticated instance of one turning from the Sabbath to Sunday, because he thought the word of God required him to do so. We never knew one who professed to act from conviction in doing so. In every case, so far as we have been able to get at the facts, it was a mere matter of convenience. He could belong to a larger church, he could enjoy a more edifying ministry, or he could have greater privileges for his family, or he could have greater opportunities for usefulness, or some such question of expediency, was always the point upon which the decision turned. On the other hand, who comes to the observance of the Sabbath, unless constrained by a sense of duty to God?

WESLEYAN METHODISM IN ENGLAND.

A brief notice of the agitation among the Wesleyan Methodists of England, has already appeared in the Recorder. Since that notice was prepared, a more complete account of the matter has come to hand, from which it appears that much importance attaches to the recent movements, and that a wide split is likely to ensue. It seems that under the hand of Dr. Bunting—a man who is represented as more of a politician than a clergyman—the Wesleyan Society has been gradually molded into a sort of despotism, which has made its power felt both ecclesiastically and politically. For years past some of the best men in the church have seen the tendency of things, and have privately expressed their fears of the consequences. Recently, a series of anonymous articles, setting forth the facts in the case, were printed under the head of "Fly Sheets," and extensively circulated among the Methodist preachers, in hope that they would be moved to speak out on the subject, and so check the existing evils, and produce the desired reforms. These sheets represent, that the plan of "Centralization," as it is called, has led to tyranny, pride, and partiality; and they give illustrative facts on each of these points. They show, also, that 'Dr. Bunting and a clique, contrary to the fundamental principle of Wesleyan Methodism, have been fixed in London; that step by step the powers of Conference have been insidiously conferred on committees; that then these committees have been formed of the followers of Dr. Bunting, and every independent and self-respecting preacher excluded. In illustration, facts such as the following are adduced: Dr. Bunting has been eighteen years in London, and is on twelve connectional committees. Seven other preachers of the clique are severally on 10, 11, 10, 9, 8, 7, 7 committees, and have on the average been eight years in London, located instead of itinerating. On the other hand, the venerable Jacob Stanley, who has traveled 43 years, is on one committee, and has, in the whole period, been seven years in London; while Dr. Beaumont, second to no man in the connection, but who is not of the clique, is not on one committee, has traveled 35 years. Another complaint of the "Fly Sheets" is, that £40,000 of the centenary fund has been squandered upon a building in London, to subserve the personal and political objects, the ease and convenience, of the governing clique. Still another complaint is, that ten per cent. of the whole revenue of the Missionary Society (£100,000 a year) has been expended in management, and that, too, while people were urged to greater exertions, and even the comforts of the Missionaries abridged!'

These are very grave charges, surely; and it is not surprising that the persons whom they implicate were thoroughly aroused thereby. But instead of attempting to disprove them, as one would naturally expect the accused to do, resort was had to a most discreditable system of espionage in order to discover their authors. This course failed, however, and several of the ministers who refused to sanction it by answering the questions addressed to them, were summarily expelled from the English Wesleyan Conference, at a recent meeting in Manchester. One of those ministers, a Mr. Dunn, in explaining the affair before a public meeting at Nottingham, is reported as follows:—

"The meeting would wish to know the exact grounds upon which they had been expelled. There was no charge preferred against them for false doctrine—no charge affecting their moral or Christian character—no charge of a want of attention to the general discipline of the body, or for neglect of their duties as Christian ministers. The whole point on which their expulsion rested was, that they refused to be a party to the novel, inquisitorial, arbitrary, despotic, un-English, un-Protestant, un-Wesleyan, and un-scriptural application of the rules of the Conference to the expulsion of the Rev. James Everett."

A correspondent of the Independent, in narrating what has since taken place says:—

"The high handed doings of Conference, in expelling and degrading ministers without a fault proved, except the not submitting to proceedings without precedent out of the history of the Holy Office, has moved even the passive and almost thoroughly-subjugated laity of the society. Wesleyans have assembled in great numbers to protest, at Huddersfield, York, Nottingham, Ipswich, Coventry, Burton-on-Trent, Sheffield, Framlington, Hull, Norwich, Gloucester, and at sixteen other considerable towns, including Bristol, long a center of Methodism; and on a recent evening the great room at Exeter Hall, London, was crowded with an assembly sympathizing with the expelled preachers. Among the speakers was Dr. Oxley, a highly respected person, who, as he said, had been a Methodist sixty years, and held all the situations a layman could hold, and would stand by the principles of Methodism while he lived; but he denounced the proceedings of Conference as disgraceful and unchristian."

EFFECT OF THE COMMOTION.

One effect of the recent commotion in Europe has been to produce a great change both in the political and the mental condition of the Jews. They have been relieved from a vast load of cruel oppression by several governments, and their minds have been much more accessible to the light of Christianity. A letter from Rev. B. W. Wright, written at Vienna in May last, appears in the Jewish Intelligence, London, in which it is stated that 600,000 Jews scattered over Austria were everywhere sending up letters of thanks to the young Emperor (who also bears the title of King of Jerusulem), for having restored them to a political equality with the other inhabitants of the empire. He proceeds to say that the terrible commotions in those countries were having a beneficial effect upon both Jews and Gentiles.

"Jews who never before thought of a Messiah begin now to say, 'These are the days of travail which precede his coming;' and both in the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches the tone of piety is deepened, and the expectation of the nearness of the second advent of Christ is becoming more general. In one bookseller's shop here I purchased three pamphlets, written lately by Roman Catholics, all stating clearly the premillennial advent of Christ, and the need of preparation for that day; although in one of these Paris was said to be the "great city" mentioned in the seventeenth of Revelations, and some future Napoleon would, it was supposed, be the Antichrist. In addition to this, secret circles of believers are being formed within the fold of the Romish Church, who, like the Ducho-borsi in the Russian Church, prefer to remain for the present within the outward circle of the church to which they belong. So, as our greatest trials often turn out to be our greatest blessings, we have reason to hope that out of this present and coming tribulation much good will come, many hearts will fail, many knees be bent in prayer, and many hands be stretched out to heaven for help; until (if the signs of the times do not greatly deceive us) the work is 'cut short in righteousness;' and a new sabbatic era is introduced as the conclusion formed to vindicate the justice of God and complete the happiness of man."

WARDER CRESSON IN TROUBLE.

We remember to have heard, several years ago, that Warder Cresson, of Pennsylvania, had become a Sabbath-keeper. Subsequently, under an impression that our Saviour was about to make his second appearance, he left this country to take up his residence in Jerusalem, where he supposed the Lord would establish his head quarters. In order to increase his influence for good to the saints, he obtained an appointment as Consul of the United States at Jerusalem. His recent movements and present troubles are indicated in the following paragraph from the Philadelphia Pennsylvanian:—

"We have just been informed that there is another case now in progress of investigation before a court of inquiry in this city, that will not only rival the notorious Hinchman case, but reflect great disgrace in the end on the prosecuting party, inasmuch as all their charges are to be prompted and sustained by religious prejudice, as well as the other motives common in such cases, viz: avarice and pride. It appears that a gentleman (Warder Cresson, Esq.) recently returned from a residence in the East, at Jerusalem, had there become convinced that Judaism was the true ism, and consequently became a Jew. He was appointed our Consul there, but did not act as such, as by some foul play his commission papers were detained from him by those entrusted to receive them from Government to send to him. On his return, the disgrace of his change of faith was so keenly felt, that, together with the desire, probably, of handling his property freely, prompted the prosecuting party to institute a charge of lunacy, and he, being a warm devotee to religion, is not too well qualified to maintain his ground against those who have wealth and influence to obtain a judgment in their favor. As these proceedings are, for policy sake, kept secret from the public view, we forbear now to enter more fully into the particulars, but we may, probably, before long. By the Constitution of the United States, an American citizen is guarantied his civil and religious liberties; but we trust that those who are dark-minded enough to deprive a man of these, from such motives, may meet the just indignition of the American people."

"SABBATH CONVENTION" IN ST. LOUIS.—A Sabbath Convention (so called) was recently held in St. Louis, Mo. The newspaper accounts of the origin and character of the meeting differ so widely, that we know not what estimate to place upon it. Some of the papers say that the Convention grew out of an increasing interest in the cause of Sabbath Reform throughout the West. Others say it was got up because the state of things was so bad that it could no longer be endured. If the following paragraph, describing the way Sundays are kept in St. Louis, be true, we think it is time something was done to civilize the people, to say nothing of Christianizing them:

"Of late no Sabbath passes without a riot, often accompanied by the lawless destruction of property, serious injury to persons, and not unfrequently loss of life, presenting a fearful omen of the future, unless public sentiment can be purified, and the majesty of the laws revived. As the invariable concomitant of this state of things, vagrancy and crime have greatly increased, and there never was a time in St. Louis when life and property were so insecure."

THE CRIME OF WORSHIP.—At Stamford, one Francis Royce, of Gunby, complained before the magistrates against his servant, William Bradney, for going to chapel (Dissenter's meeting) without his permission. "He would not keep any one in his employ who went to chapel." The man said he had a right to go to what place of worship he liked. Some of the magistrates advised Mr. Royce to discharge him instead of prosecuting him; but he said he was a good servant, and he did not wish to part with him, but "he would not let him go to chapel."

"The man asked the bench whether it was legal for him to be sent to tend horses in the lanes on the Sabbath? The Bench: 'We cannot interfere; you must obey your master's orders.' The defendant then asked his master if he had ever disobeyed his orders, or neglected his business. To which Royce replied, 'No.' The Bench, after some consultation, did not impose a fine, but said that as the man had broken his contract he must pay the expenses, 8s. Bradney: 'I shall pay nothing, as I have done nothing wrong; if you like you can send me to prison.' Mr. Manners said the master might pay, and stop the amount out of his wages. Bradney: 'If he does, I will summon him for the amount." The affair was thus settled, when Mr. Royce (amid the laughter of the parties inside the bar, and the derision of the by-standers) jumped into the witness-box, and exclaimed, 'He says he will go to chapel in spite of me?'"

FATE OF DR. ACHILLI.—The imprisonment of Dr. Achilli in a dungeon of the Inquisition has already been announced. The Christian Times has received intelligence of a peremptory order for his release; but the correspondent of the London Daily News, at Rome, looks forward to no such result. He says that the proceedings against Dr. Achilli are carried on with the greatest secresy; but the dungeon in which he is now confined is so uhwholesome that his relatives fear he will hardly live to learn his sentence.

FASHIONABLE AMUSEMENTS PROHIBITED.—Elijah Hedding, B. Waugh, Thos. A. Morris, L. L. Hamlin and E. S. Jones, Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have addressed a circular to all the Conferences, strictly enjoining the literal observance of the discipline of the Church, prohibiting dancing and participation in fashionable amusements. Members of the Church are forbidden the allowance of dancing in their houses, even though they themselves do not participate.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—The winter term of the Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York opened a few days ago. The new class will probably number over 30 members. During the last twelve years 267 young men have gone out from that Institution, the most of whom are, upon the Foreign or Home Missionary field. Of the 64 who graduate during the years 1847, and 1848, four went to India, three to the Sandwich Islands, two to California, one to Persia, one to Syria, two to Turkey, and one to China. By a decision of the Judges Duer, Campbell, and Mason, giuen recently in relation to the legacy of Jas. Roosevelt, Esq., it is believed that a sum which will vary not much from $25,000 was secured to this Institution.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Permit me to ask your correspondent, "One of the Initiated," the following question or questions:

Sir, does the resolution of the Conference, (to which you refer in your article that appeared in the Sabbath Recorder of the 4th inst.,) declare that a "Society formed to shield us from the evils of intemperance, afford mutual aid in case of sickness, and elevate our characters as men," governed by, and operating through "the great principles of temperance, benevolence and brotherly love," must necessarily—in its organization fundamentally, and in its influence practically—be adverse to Christianity? And, if so, what Society of such sort is that of which the resolution declares those things?

In the opinion of the writer, it is proper that this point be understood before entering upon an explanation or vindication of the doctrine of the resolution of the Conference.

A MEMBER OF THE CONFERENCE.

SACRILEGE IN THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The officers of an Episcopal Church, somewhere in New Jersey, lately invited a Presbyterian Minister to occupy their pulpit on a Sunday on which their Rector was absent. The Presbyterian did so, and it being an unusual occurrence, he published an account of it in some of the newspapers. An Episcopal editor, seeing the statement, thus comments upon it:—

"Of the Presbyterian Minister we make no complaint. We doubt not he is a good man, who supposed he was doing his duty. But of the parish of B——, whatever it is, we simply say, that if there is discipline in the Church, we hope they will be made to feel it. They have violated the Canons of the Church, and that is the least of it. If ordination means any thing; if consecrated churches mean any thing; if our Church has any warrant for her existence—then they have been guilty of little less than sacrilege, in our conscientious judgment."

THE LEAVEN WORKING.—The course taken by Baptist W. Noel, and some other influential clergymen who have seceded from the Church of England, is producing important results. Referring to them, the Cambridge Chronicle says:—

"We lament to state that an effort is now being made to draw off from the Established Church of England a large number of the clergy, in order that they may adopt 'Independent' principles, under the leadership of a member of a noble house (Gainsborough) whose secession has during the last few months excited some attention. The names of several excellent men have been handed to us as having intimated their intention of joining the new movement, and many others, it is said, are 'halting between two opinions.'"

EDITORS OF CATHOLIC PAPERS.—The Presbyterian says that Mr. Henry Major, formerly the Rev. Henry Major of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has announced his withdrawal from the supervision of the Catholic Herald, published in Philadelphia, and introduced his successor, the Rev. E. Q. S. Waldron; who is a convert to Romanism from the Episcopal Church. So that the two leading weekly religious journals of the Romanists in this country, the New-York Freeman's Journal, and the Philadelphia Catholic Herald, ; the chief, if not the only Quarterly Review, that of Brownson; and the principal weekly journal in England, the Tablet, are all edited by gentlemen who have renounced Protestantism and become the adopted sons of Papacy.

EDUCATION IN IRELAND.—The report on the State of the National Education System, by Mr. Kavanagh, the head inspector of Munster, is very interesting, and has important facts. The gross ignorance of English literature shown by the teachers, is a startling fact as described by Mr. Kavanagh. He says that numbers of them have science and classics enough to pass the sizarship examination in Trinity College, Dublin, yet know nothing of English authors, nor scarcely anything even of Irish literary celebrities (except the mere names,) such as Edgeworth, Griffin, Goldsmith, and many others. The fact is remarkable, and painfully important. It is of the greatest consequence to diffuse a love for reading in Ireland, and the want of libraries for the poor is a great evil.

DOINGS OF THE CLERGY IN FRANCE.—An English paper says that a good deal of attention is directed to the Metropolitan Council of the clergy, which has commenced its sittings at Paris. If we are to judge from the list of questions which are to form the subjects of deliberation, we can scarcely imagine that the Councils of ancient times could have had more important matters to discuss, the most recondite theological points of doctrine being strangely enough mingled with commonplace subjects. Everything appears to be conducted with great pomp and ceremony. Almost all the Bishops and distinguished clergy of France are assisting at the Council.

SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE.—The Jewish Chronicle (English) says:—"Sir Moses Montefiore and Lady Montefiore safely arrived from the Holy Land in this country, on Thursday, the 13th. They landed at Dover, and proceeded to their seat at Ramsgate. Lady Montefiore has, we are happy to hear, completely recovered from her previous illness. The money distributed by the philanthrophic Baronet in the Holy Land, which we noticed at the time, we know from good authority amounted to no less than £5,000."

REV. HOWARD MALCOM.—We recently chroniclee the forced resignation, by Howard Malcom, D. D., of the Presidency of Georgetown College, Ky., (over which he had presided for nine years) on account of his voting the emancipation ticket. We now learn that he has accepted the pastoral charge of the Fifth Bapist Church in Philadelphia, Sanson street.

SOWING CALVINISM AMONG THE METHODISTS.—Rev. C. P. Bragdon, book agent of the Methodist Church at Auburn, writes in the Northern Christian Advocate, that the American Tract Society, and kindred Institutions, which he says are Calvinistic in their tendency, are actually furnishing to the Methodist churches and congregations, from one-half to seven-eights of all their religious reading.

☞ The Steamer Hendrik Hudson has recently taken the place of the Oregon, and runs on the North River in connection with the Isaac Newton—the two boats forming the best line between New York and Albany, if not the best line that runs from New York in any direction.

FOREIGN MISSION INTELLIGENCE.

At the Monthly Concert of Prayer for Foreign Missions, held in one of the churches in Boston, on the first Second-day evening in October, a number of interesting communications were made relative to the American Board's operations, of which a Boston paper reports the following:—

AFRICA.—The reports from Southern and Western Africa were quite encouraging. The additions to the churches in Southern Africa were steady, and, of late, somewhat increasing; and there is believed to be a hopeful movement throughout the entire field of the missionaries' labors in that region.

CHOCTAWS.—The results of the last year among this tribe of Indians have been very gratifying. The additions to the churches have been 173, making the present total of communicants nearly 1,000. It would be difficult to find an equal number of churches in any part of the world, which have been so uniformly and greatly blessed for the last nine years. Indeed, during all this period there has been a continuous revival.

GREECE.—A letter received by the last steamer from Dr. King at Athens, represents his prospects as more encouraging than they have been at any time since his return to Greece. Twenty-nine persons now attend on his instructions from week to week, and among them are students of the University at Athens. He mentions also the very unusual and encouraging circumstance for that country, that two Greeks habitually attended the private prayer meetings which were held in his own house, and took part with them, praying extemporaneously.

INDIA.—Rev. Mr. French, from the Ahmednuggur Mission, occupied some time in developing the encouraging signs of the times in India. He dwelt, first, on the success of missionary labors in that country. In the two Churches under the care of the Mission with which he was connected, there were 119 native members, and the additions of late years had been much greater than during the first years of their labors. There is an influence at work in every direction, which is leavening the whole mass of Indian mind. The effects of this are, from time to time, developed by the coming in from a distant part of the country of persons who, years ago perhaps, received a tract, or casually heard a Missionary preach, and thus were awakened to think seriously of religious truth. Truth has wrought in them secretly but powerfully till it has constrained them to abandon their superstitions and embrace the truth. Another encouraging sign of the times in India is the waning power of Hindooism. This is seen in the temples of Idolatry, which are everywhere going to decay. Where one new temple is now being erected, five old ones are crumbling down.

The formation of societies among the natives for publishing in the native language books of science, history, &c., is another encouraging sign. So also is the fact that the sacred books of the Hindoos were being translated from the Sanscrit and published in the vernacular tougue. The general desire of the natives for knowledge is shown by their readiness to subscribe for a newspaper published by the Missionaries. Not less than 170 new subscribers have been added to their list within one year.

MADURA.—This Mission has heretofore been much troubled with the caste question; indeed, they have been obliged to cut off many church members; and some of their most promising converts have gone out from them. During the past year, however, the Mission has made considerable advance in its various departments of labor. Thirty-five have been admitted to the churches; and the influence of the Mission is more and more felt in the villages which surround the different stations.

NESTORIANS.—A letter from the Rev. Mr. Stocking, of the Nestorian Mission, gives an interesting account of a recent journey from Oroomiah across the mountains to Mosul. It was made for the purpose of seeing what could be done toward reviving the Mission at Mosul, which, it will be remembered, was opened at that place several years since, in behalf of the mountain Nestorians; but it was broken up by a concurrence of unfavorable circumstances—the death of the Missionaries designed for the station, and the warlike incursion into the territory of the mountain tribes by a neighboring chief. For some time past the Missionaries at Oroomiah have been receiving encouraging accounts from Mosul, and on visiting the place Mr. Stocking and his companion found a hundred persons or more under the influence of evangelical truth. The British Consul of Mosul had become friedly to the American Missionaries, and evinced a strong desire to have them reëstablish their Mission at Mosul. The Patriarch will, of course, oppose this step, so far as his influence can go; but his power for evil has been materially abridged, and his ability to persecute his people for embracing evangelical doctrines very essentially curtailed. For the present he remains quiet among the mountains. The effects of the revival at Oroomiah, are reported to be very encouraging. A spirit of reform had been awakened among the Nestorians, which promised great good.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.—Prosperity has attended the efforts of this mission, and the additions to the churches, during the past year, have amounted to about 1,600. There has been, likewise, considerable progress in piety and social improvement. But the epidemics which prevailed in the Island near the close of 1848, carried thither from our shores, have proved very fatal. The statements heretofore published in this country on this subject, are fully borne out by the latest intelligence. More than one tenth of the population have been cut down; of these, 2,350 were church members. The effect of this calamity upon the natives has been disheartening; and the missionaries are fearful that other diseases will be introduced from California and Oregon; and they are also apprehensive that there will be an importation of morals that will be more disastrous still. On the whole, the prospects of the Islands must be regarded as somewhat uncertain. The Providence of God has interposed in their behalf in a very remarkable manner hitherto; but he may have designs which we cannot now fathom. Should the Hawaiian race, however, be ultimately lost in the great Anglo-Saxon family, the influence of this mission will appear vastly more important than it now does.

General Intelligence.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

By the steamship Canada, which arrived on the 5th inst., seven days later news from Europe was received. The political news presents no new feature, and the English journalists lament the want of anything upon which they can be either smart or canstic, very grave or very gay, with the exception of the siege of Comorn, now regularly established. Military operations have ceased throughout all Europe.

Peterwardein surrendered to the Imperial troops on the 5th of September. Comorn still holds out, and it is said that the besieged, who number some twenty-five thousand men, can defy the besiegers for one entire year. Vienna papers say that 80,000 men are to be sent against them.

Three Hungarian officers have been put to death at Arad and Temesvar—one by hanging, and the estates of two were confiscated.

The influence of Russia and Austria is being exerted to compel the Porte to surrender the Hungarian chiefs who have taken refuge in Turkey, but letters from Constantinople to the 5th state that this has been positively refused by the Porte.

In order to repair the losses sustained by the Russian troops in Hungary, from cholera and the sword, the Emperor has ordered a fresh levy of recruits.

The Pope has quitted Gaeta, and has proceeded to Naples, where he has taken up his abode in the Portici Palace. His reception a Naples was of the most striking and popular character. The Pope evinces no intention of returning to Rome at present, and thus far no real progress seems to have been made toward a satisfactory solution of the Italian question.

At Rome all is uncertainty, and wholesale arrests take place without the observation of legal forms. Every one sees a crisis impending, but whether it is for good or evil is doubtful. The misery of the people increases daily, and with it their hatred of the priests. A new Journal, intended to be the Journal of the pure pontifical party, has appeared.

News was daily expected from Morocco, where the Spanish and French quarrel seemed likely to produce something more than a mere demonstration. The Moors were expected to make an attack on Manilla, having already cut off the supplies.

The potato disease is beyond all doubt extending into several districts in Ireland, and the low price of potatoes in the country may be attributable in some degree to the alarm of the farmers who are anxious to dispose of their crops.

The hop-picking in England has proved a disastrous one, and a great effort is being made by the growers to procure relief from the Government.

The vines in the south of France have suffered very seriously.

A most favorable change has taken place in the mortality from Cholera throughout England, and the number of cases has declined about half. From the commencement of the epidemic 12,837 persons have been swept away in London.

The Cholera is committing serious ravages at Trieste.

The cholera appears to have permanently diminished in Paris.

A frightful railway accident occurred at Lythan, Eng., on the 20th. In the afternoon of that day Lythan had been the scene of an agricultural dinner, at which upward of 300 gentlemen were present. The dinner broke up shortly after 9, and the company proceeded to the carriages which were for Preston and the District. They had barely started, when a collision of a fearful kind took place between the Lythan and Blackfort train, the latter running into the former with terrible impetuosity. Many of the passengers had their teeth knocked out, and others were fearfully wounded; limbs were broken, and a scene of a most appalling kind ensued. Several lives are said to have been lost.

Post-Office Robber Taken.—A letter from Rochester, N. Y. dated Sept. 29, says: It is known to the public that mail depredations, amounting in the aggregate to $4,000 or $5,000, have taken place during the last few months in this vicinity. Vigorous efforts have been making to detect the villain for some time, by a special mail agent, and the post-master in this city. Those efforts were at length successful. This morning, Edward H. C. Griffin, a clerk in the Rochester Post-office, was arrested, and has confessed the offense. He is about twenty years old, the son of a respectable mechanic who resides in this city, and has been in the post-office about a year. He was formerly a clerk in the Eagle Hotel, and up to this occurrence has always maintained a respectable reputation. The money stolen by him has been abstracted from a large number of letters, and at many different times. He usually selected letters coming from side lines, and managed his desperate operation with a good deal of skill. A considerable portion of the proceeds of his ingenuity he has invested by judicious purchases of real estate. On being arrested he manifested no little alarm, and made no attempt at concealment. His examination has not yet taken place, so that the full particulars have not yet transpired; but it is supposed that most of the missing money will be refunded by him. He is at present in jail.

Forfeiture of Citizenship.—The Richmond (Va.) Times, of Oct. 3d. says that Mary Ann Richardson, alias Mary Ann Gladden, the free mulatto woman who was arraigned before the Mayor's Court on the 8th of Sept. on the charge of having forfeited the right of citizenship because she had voluntarily visited the city of Philadelphia, in a non-slaveholding State, was yesterday again brought before the Mayor, and she required to leave the State within ten days, under severe pains and penalties. Margaret Batty joined Mary Ann in a bond for $100, on condition that she (Mary Ann Gladden) should leave the State within the space of ten days, never to return.

The Gale and its Effects.—On Sabbath night last, N. York was visited with one of the severest gales which has been known for many years. The effects of it were discernable for several days, in almost any part of the city, in the form of uprooted trees, torn awnings, and unhung signs. Several vessels were blown from their docks, and came near being dashed ashore on Governor's Island. A number of unenclosed houses, and two churches in process of erection, were partially or wholly prostrated. The large canvas pavilion at the corner of Eighth st. and Fourth-avenue, containing two dioramas by Deguerre, was seriously injured. The back of the pavilion was completely blown in, the wind rushed through the area, and tore the valuable pictures into shreds and tatters. These pictures were painted on a thousand feet of canvas each, and were supposed to be worth between $5,000 and $6,000. They belong to Mr. Charles Moore, who was absent at the time from the City. The pavilion, which was erected the past summer, for the purpose of exhibiting the dioramas, cost about $2,000. Many persons were injured by the falling of tree-limbs, sign-boards, &c.

News from the Emigrants.—Mrs. Noah Norton of Adrian, Mich. writes from the top of the Rocky Mountains, at the Pacific Springs, head of Sweet Water, July 29, 1849.

"There has been a terrible destruction of life, animals and carriages on the way. There are now more than a thousand dead horses, oxen and mules, that we have passed between this South Pass and Fort Laramie; and about as many wagons that have been, some broken up, some burned, and some left in good order by the way. The destruction of animals has been mostly in consequence of drinking at the salaratus or alkali poison springs, over-driving and want of proper care. For the last 300 miles the great part of the water is strong alkali, and if our animals drink it to excess when dry, they die immediately. But there is a sure remedy if applied seasonably. That is, to give them fat meat, grease, or lard. This we have done and it has saved our noble team.

Sad Affair.—The quiet county of Warren, Pa., was thrown into a state excitement on Sunday last. Two old men—named Walter Seman and Richard Powell, (the latter a Justice of the Peace,) met together near Seman's house, and being good friends and old acquaintances, they spent the day together and indulged pretty freely. Seman being an old hunter, the conversation turned on his hunting exploits. His enthusiasm rising high, he took down his old rifle (which he always kept loaded) and sportively said, "Powell, I have a great mind to shoot you." The muzzle of the rifle being in the direction of Powell's breast, the lattler struck it with his hand, doubtless with the view of preventing an accident. The stroke twisting the rifle in Seman's hand (who had his finger on the trigger) it was discharged, and the ball pierced Powell's thigh. There being no medical man within fifteen miles of the place, Powell suffered much from loss of blood; and when aid was procured he was pronounced hopeless. The doctors said Powell must die. Seman is a man of singular hospitality. On the morning after the event he declared he knew nothing of the matter and was inconsolable. He quietly resigned himself to the hands of justice. Both of these men are the fathers of large and respectable families. Such are the fearful consequences of indulging in whiskey.

Important to Patent Medicine Dealers.—Judge McLean, a few days since, decided at Chambers, a case of considerable importance to dealers in what are termed "Patent Medicines." G. Coffeen, Jr. the proprietor of the Chinese Liniment, applied for an injunction to restrain one James Brunton, an agent of John Loree, proprietor of "Loree's Ohio Liniment," from the sale of the "Ohio Liniment," on the ground that the venders of the "Ohio Liniment" falsely claimed that it was similar to the "Chinese Liniment," and produced that impression upon the community by advertisements, handbills and colorable imitations of the labels and directions of the "Chinese Liniment." The injunction was granted. The Judge held that the naming of his medicine by Loree, the "Ohio Liniment," made no difference, as "from the body of the label and the directions for the use of the medicine, it is clear that the language of the defendant is so assimilated to that of the plaintiff, as to appear to be the same medicine, the alterations being only colorable."

A wagon was overturned at Pittsburg last Thursday, and a quantity of loco-foco matches set afire by the concussion; there were some barrels of oil which helped the conflagration. The wagon and load were destroyed, and the driver, who was hurt by the fall, would have met the same fate, but for the arrival of some passers.

The Rush for California.—The Boston Traveler says, that a gentleman of that city applied a few days ago to Messrs. Howland and Aspinwall, of New York, for a passage in the November boat from Panama to California. He was informed that in a few hours after opening the books for this boat, every berth was taken up, and they have since received six or seven hundred applications for passage. A ticket holder, who changed his mind about going, obtained $100 advance on the price, and the holder of another ticket asks $125 premium. The tickets are advertised as "not transferable." New England is about to suffer a second depletion of her people for the shores of California.

A Baltimore letter says that the rush for California continues; two ships being nearly ready to sail, and a small fleet of seven schooners, of 80 and 90 tons burden each, being rapidly fitted out for the same destination. The schooners are intended for the trade of the small rivers running up into the gold region, and are expected to prove a great speculation to their owners. A large number of adventurers will go out in these vessels.

Whig Nominations.—The Whigs of New York held a State Convention at Syracuse last week, when the following nominations were made for the ensuing election:—

For appeal Judge—	J. A. Spencer, Oneida.
" Controller	W. Hunt, Niagara.
" Sec of State	C. Morgan, Cayuga.
" Att'y General	Sam'l Stevens, Albany.
" Treasurer	Alva Hunt, Chenango.
" Canal Com'r	N. J. Beach, Lewis.
" Prison Insp'r	B. Squire, St. Lawrence.
" St. Engineer	H. C. Seymour, Rockland

SUMMARY.

Died at his residence near Piermont, Rockland Co., on the 2d inst., after a short illness, S. G. Verbryke, in the 89th year of his age—being one of the few survivors of that time that tried men's souls—he having endured his share of it. He entered the army when a youth, and was surprised and taken prisoner by the British, and held as such for the space of two years and nine months, before he could effect his escape, he then being dwindled to a mere skeleton. After recruiting from this, he again entered the army, as ensign, and served during the War.

There was a railroad accident near Lewiston, Me., last week, from the displacement of a switch. The escape was a very narrow one for forty or fifty passengers, who resolved that the fault was occasioned by "the gross carelessness of the workman or men, who, with the knowledge that the train was due, neglected an important part of their duty."

The Athens (Ga.) Messenger, gives the following obituary notice of a deceased citizen of that county: "He was the father of eleven sons—five of the sons having married five sisters. He had also one hundred and eighty-nine great grand children; and at his funeral, two weeks ago last Sabbath, two horses were stung to death by bees; and another came near losing his life by the same!"

News from Yucatan reports a battle between the Whites and the Indians at Valadolid on the 9th of Sept. After two hours hard fighting the Indians were driven back and dispersed. The Indians were still near Bacolar in fortified positions. There is a reported disagreement among the chiefs.

Rev. Joy H. Fairchild, of the Payson Church, South-Boston, has commenced an action in the Supreme Judicial Court, against Rev. Nehemiah Adams, D. D., of the Essex street Church in this city, for libel and slander, suing for damages in $10,000.

By an arrival from Port au Prince, to the 6th inst., we learn that the Emperor Soulouque, of Hayti, had conferred on several of his Generals the titles of Lords, Dukes and Barons; he had also sent an expedition against the Dominican government, consisting of one corvette, one steamer, and two schooners containing troops.

Between the 18th of June and the 26th of September of the present year, three thousand five hundred and twenty dogs were slain within the limits of New York, at an expense to the corporation of seventeen hundred and sixty dollars for the mere killing alone. Of this sum Henry Boggs, the notorious Dog-Killer, received two hundred and fifty dollars. This delicate-stomached individual has made some three or four thousand dollars by the practice of his "profession."

The Newburyport Herald says that on Wednesday evening last a young man went into the shop of R. E. Mosely, to buy a watch key. Mr. M. instantly recognized the watch as one stolen from his store in Trenton street, Boston, three years ago, when he was robbed of $2,000 worth of property. Mr. M. and some officers, with the young man, proceeded to Georgetown, and recovered four gold watches from different individuals.

A disturbance occurred at Harrisburg, Pa., recently, which was created by the impression that a number of runaway slaves were secreted in the town. A row occurred at the door of a coloured church, where some of the slaves were supposed to be. The Sheriff armed a party of men to restore order. Four colored men were arrested, but the slaves escaped, and it is said are on their northward journey.

Wm. C. Parkhurst, a citizen of Sussex County, Del., has been taken on to Richmond on a requisition of the Governor of Virginia, charged with kidnapping. It appears that in April last he took three negro children to Richmond, and sold them as slaves, but subsequently it was ascertained they were free when he sold them.

The Canada papers announce that Lord Elgin, Governor General of Canada, has in his possession documents tending to implicate several leading politicians in a charge of treason, in regard to annexation of the Canadas to the United States.

The Colonization Society intend sending out three hundred colored persons to Liberia, in the packet which is to leave Baltimore, December 1st. Some five hundred are said to be asking for passage to Africa, among whom over 150 are free.

Frederika Bremer, the distinguished novelist, arrived in this city last week by the steamer Canada.

A letter from Pendleton, S. C., Sept. 16, says that by the mail of Friday previous there were received at that place a number of copies of an Abolition circular, directed to the members of the committee of vigilance. The executive committee of that body on the following day demanded the letters of the Post Master. On his refusal to deliver them, they entered his office and took them by force.

A very fine case of pocket-knives is now on exhibition at the Fair of the American Institute, from the Waterville Manufacturing Co., Waterbury, Conn. This Company has been eight years in operation—or, rather, getting ready to operate to advantage—and now employs 150 men in the manufacture of pocket-knives alone.

The Minnesota Pioneer notices the arrival in St. Paul of another caravan of carts from the Red River of the North. Each cart has a buffalo-skin over the top of it. Among a great variety of merchandise which they have engaged to take home with them is a fine church-bell, from which the Pioneer infers that the Selkirkers are not lost to the glorious influence of the blessed religion of Christ.

The New London (Ct.) Star says that Judge Hinman, at the Court now sitting in that place, has granted the petition of Cornelia Howard for divorce from her husband on the ground of "willful abstinence and neglect of duty for three years."

MARRIED.

On the 26th of September, by Rev. W. B. Gillett, Mr. Geo. A. H. Heath, of Pittsfield, Mass., to Miss Adaline Runyon, of Piscataway, N. J.

On the same day, by the same, Mr. Abner S. F. Randolph to Miss Sarah Clark Smalley, both of Piscataway, N. J.

In Independence, N. Y., Sept. 23d, 1849, by Eld. T. E. Babcock, Mr. Baylies S. Bassett to Miss Esther Crandall, all of Independence.

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 1st inst., Mr. Anson C. Murdock, of East Hamilton, to Miss Emily O. Clarke, daughter of Albert Clarke of Brookfield.

DIED.

In Piscataway, N. J., Sept 23d, Mrs. Rebecca Bloodgood, consort of Samuel Bloodgood aged 68 years. Mrs. Bloodgood was for more than a year a great sufferer from cancer. She had always been a conscientious Sabbath-keeper, though the only one of the family of that belief. Through life she maintained her integrity in remembering the commandment of God. She had never united in fellowship with the church, intending to have made an offering at the next preparatory season; but her sickness prevented. She bore her affliction with Christian resignation, giving evidence to her friends that she had gone to rest with Christ. W. B. G.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 29th ult., of dysentery, Mrs. Abigail Burdick, relict of Dea. Alpheus Burdick deceased, aged 60 years. Sister Burdick was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Rockville. By a patient and protracted life of Christian faithfulness, she secured the confidence of all who knew her. She left a family in which she is greatly missed; and the church of which she was a member, feels that in her death it has lost one of the most worthy and permanent of its members. Still relying upon the wisdom of God, her Christian friends feel assured that "the judge of all the earth will do right," and what is loss to them is gain to her.

In Hopkinton, R. I., after a brief but distressing illness, Sarah, wife of Hazard R. Gates, and daughter of Thomas and Lydia Edwards, in the 19th year of her age. She professed religion young and died young. Though her race was short, yet during that brief period she followed the Saviour ardently. As might have been expected, from such a life, she died in peace, requesting her relatives and youthful husband not to mourn for her. B. M. L.

At Hampton, Ct, Sept. 21st, Wm. K., son of Enoch B. and Sarah Lewis, aged fifteen months.

"So fades the lovely, blooming flower,
Frail smiling solace of an hour."

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 23d of Sept., Mr. Peter Weaver, aged 74 years.

THE LOVE LORN.

My een are dim wi' tears, John,
My heart is sair wi' wae,
I lie an' watch the stars, John,
Awearying for the day;
Yet it winna bring me rest John,
An' it canna bring me peace,
Till the clay is on my breast, John,
An' thocht and feeling cease!

I hae looed ye weel and lang, John,
An' shall while I hae life;
But ye've caused me mony a pang, John,
Wha should hae been your wife.
Though you never said a word, John,
My trusting heart to win,
Ye hae leed* before the Lord, John,
An' that is deeper sin!

Ye're hand leed seeking mine, John,
When naebody could see;
An' ye kissed it mony a time, John,
An' wasna that a lee?
An' your een leed looking luve, John,
Whene'er they turned on me;
An' your gifts, what did they pruve John,
But love—or treachery.

An' your step leed coming here, John,
Sae aft in cauld an' rain,
For mony a happy year, John,
Whase memory is pain!
For I thocht the time was come, John,
When we nae mair would part;
Yet ye gaed without ae word, John,
To ease my breaking heart!

Ye cam' o' your ain will, John,
Ye saw that I was poor;
Ye kenn'd I was nae light o' love;
Ye should hae passed our door.
But I loo ye after a', John,
An' pray to God in Heaven,
That I may be ta'en hame, John,
An' your deceit forgiven! MARY.

* "Leed" means "lied."

A CHOLERA INCIDENT.

Last week, near the close of one of those sweltering days which came along just as people began to hope that the dog-star had forgotten us, a young and neatly dressed Irish woman, with a child in her arms, was observed walking unsteadily through Harrison Avenue towards the centre of the city. Few seemed to notice her as she tottered along, or noticed only to bestow a scornful look, and avoid her. She was at last met by a lady who had a more obserivng eye, perhaps, as well as a warmer heart, than the crowd. She saw—or thought she saw—in that tottering step and woe-begone look, the weakness and weariness of hunger and grief, rather than the effects of inebriation. She stopped her, and spoke: "You seem ill and weary, ma'am." At the sound of the voice the poor creature sank down on a door-step by her side, and pressing her child to her bosom, answered: "Yes, ma'am, I am indeed w'ary, w'ary; I've walked all the way from Taunton since the light of marning, with the b'y in my arms, and yours is the first kind word I've heerd to-day!" The benevolent lady, whose residence was but a few steps, prevailed on the traveler to accompany her home, in order to rest her weary limbs, as well as to partake of some nourishment, of which she stood sadly in need, having eaten nothing since her departure in the morning.

Her story was soon told. She had lived in Taunton for several years, where her husband was employed in one of the large factories. Latterly, however, he had been out of work, in consequence of a stoppage of some of the machinery, though he had managed to pick up odd jobs now and then, by which they were enabled to creep along from day to day, while waiting and hoping for better times. But the cholera came, and her husband fell almost the first victim to that terrible scourge, leaving her utterly destitute of all present means of subsistence. She was not the woman, however, to sit down in idleness, while she eat the bread of strangers. Her husband had two brothers living in Boston, one of whom was married to her own sister; and, in the surety of finding a comfortable refuge for the present with these relatives, she had that morning taken her only child in her arms and started for the city. Her journey was long and toilsome, and how, while faint with hunger and at times nearly ready to sink under her burden—with blood-shotten eyes and blistered feet—she was enabled to accomplish it at last, she hardly knew herself: "God must have kept her up."

After having satisfied her hunger and fed her boy, the woman arose to depart. Her kind entertainer pressed her to remain longer, until she was more thoroughly rested; but she declined. She "was very grateful—it was but a little bit further,"—and she "felt ashamed to be a burden to strangers, when she had friends near by who would'nt let her suffer, and who would be so glad to see her." So, taking her child in her arms once more, and thanking the lady again and again, she departed.

On the following morning the woman appeared once more in the presence of the lady. Misfortune had followed misfortune. She had been to the house of her relatives, where she was to meet so warm a welcome—and they were not. The cholera had done its work there too; and within a few days, brother and sister and mother had been swept away. Thus had all hope of a home among her relatives been taken from her, and she was left a stranger among strangers, with no present resource but to call again on the lady who had already looked so kindly on her. That lady immediately interested herself in her behalf, and with the assistance of friends, the poor woman is already in a situation where she will be enabled by her industry to support herself and child.

THE CAPTURE BY THE PATAGONIANS.

The New-Bedford Mercury publishes a letter from Mr. J. D. Parker, dated Valparaiso, June 21, which gives a more particular account of the capture of Capt. Bourne, of the schr. John Allyne, in the Straits of Magellen, by the Patagonians. The following is Mr. Parker's account of the matter: "At 11 o'clock on the night of April 30, we anchored in Possession Bay, about five miles from the first narrows. The next day, the tide not serving until about 1 P. M., about half of our company went on shore, gunning. At 10 A. M. they returned, and said the natives had some deer which they wished to barter for bread and tobacco, and they wanted to see the captain for that purpose. Capt. Bourne went on shore, and leaving one man to take care of the boat, the others (that is, three besides Capt. Bourne), got on their horses and went back with them to their encampment, about two miles. Our men were thus separated, when they were attacked by the natives, and deprived of their guns and ammunition. Capt. Bourne and one other were bound, and the remaining two were robbed, but not detained. A few hours after they released the man who was with Capt. Bourne, telling him that we could have the captain by paying 12 bottles of rum, 1 bag of bread, and 12 lbs. of tobacco. The articles named were accordingly sent on shore, with two boats' crews, well armed, where they found about 300 natives, all on horseback. They would not give up Capt. B. until the ransom was paid. We parleyed with them until dark, to no purpose, when they came to the beach with Capt. B., sitting in front of a native on horseback. He hailed the boats, and told them to pay the ransom, and by no means to fire into them. The ransom was immediately paid, when the chief said it had not been given to him, and he would not give him up. As it was blowing a gale, the boats did not dare to stop any longer, and they came very near being swamped in getting on board."

HOUSES FOR LABORERS.

A New-York correspondent of the Detroit Free Press, writes as follows:

A move is making in New-York to ameliorate the condition of the laboring class. Several large capitalists are at the head of it. A large tract of land is to be bought some fifteen miles from the city of New York to erect a new city upon. Two millions of dollars to be the capital. The company are to build 5,000 brick houses at $500 each, including the lot of 50 by 200. These houses are to be let at $52 each to mechanics, or $1 a week, which will pay 10 per cent on the capital. All the houses to be uniform. Each occupant to have the right to purchase his house, by paying $2 a-week and keeping up the interest at seven per cent. In this way, he gets a title to his homestead in about six years. A negotiation is going on with the Hudson River Railroad, that the occupants of these house shall have the privilege to commute with the Rail Road Company for their passage to New York and back again, at a price not to exceed six cents a day for going and coming; the distance each way will not be far from 15 miles, at 3 cents a head. In this way they can reach the city in half an hour. If 10,000 laborers reside there, it would give the company $600 a day, or $187,000 a year.

The great drawback to the prosperity of mechanics is high rents. $100 to $150 has to be paid for very indifferent tenements. By living in the country and going to his work by railroad, on the plan proposed, he can possess a house of his own in five years, from the savings he would make from New York rents. The project is highly praiseworthy. The originators, when the work is finished, would be considered benefactors. Mr. Minturn, of the wealthy shipping-house of Fish, Grinnel & Minturn, is at the head of it. He is now in Europe getting information on the subject—there being a similar association in successful operation in England. Professor Mason, of the N. Y. University, is also engaged in it, both with his time and purse. They can now count on a million dollars capital that is ready to embark in it as soon as the plan is perfected.

A LION AND BULL FIGHT IN SPAIN.

On the 16th August, the great fight between the Lion and the Bull came off; and though neither of these animals was a whit the worse for the encounter, yet 3,500 chairs were broken by the infuriated and disappointed populace, not to mention broken heads and arms, prisoners, children trodden on, &c. At 5 o'clock an impatient crowd of 15,000 persons, of all ages and sexes, were yelling in the amphitheatre destined for bull-fights, and grudging the time His Majesty the King Consort (who was to preside over the function) kept them waiting. At last the Royal President took his seat in his box, and a swollen and sickly hyena, carefully fastened to a stake, was worried by two enormous dogs without making any resistance, till the populace, notwithstanding the royal presence, at last hooted, and caused the fight to be put an end to. After a moment of mute expectation a den was opened, and out rushed a magnificent bull, concerning whose birth, parentage, and education, every lover of tauromachy has been discoursing in club and coffee-house this last week. The noble animal butted against the iron palisades, and bent them as if they had been reeds.

The lion then came creeping out, and as the bull was staring at the yelling multitude, sprang at him. The bull treated his royal enemy to a couple of kicks, and then turning round made an attempt to gore him. Luckily for the lion, the bull's horns did not touch him, but nevertheless he was thrown about ten feet with tremendous violence. The bull lowered his head again, but the lion knew when he had enough, and ran round the amphitheatre amid the hooting of the public. A tiger was then introduced, between which and the lion a few scratches and growls were exchanged. The tiger then, perceiving the bull, sprang toward him, leaving the lion, who stretched out his lazy length and began to slumber. The bull made an effort to toss the tiger, but the wary animal, after receiving a slight bruise from the powerful skill of his opponent, began to crawl round the amphitheatre, and, when the bull eyed him, lay down as if affecting to be asleep. The bull seemed perfectly aware of his danger, and kept in the middle of the amphitheatre. Every time his crafty opponent approached creeping up from behind, the bull turned, presenting his lowering head and horns. This kind of thing, though eminently curious, was evidently too refined for the populace, who saw the shades of evening coming on, and as yet no blood shed, no emotion that could comfort them for the disbursement of six picetas for a ticket. Clamors for dogs began to be heard, and the perplexed authorities acceded to the demand. But the dogs, after one vain attempt at the lion could not be persuaded to go again. The shadows of night began to fall. The populace furiously demanded that the combat between the panther and horse should take place while they yet could see, and as no panther or horse was forthcoming, a tremendous tumult took place. The populace finding that their money would not be returned according to their furious demands, attempted to carry off the chairs, but the guard outside refusing to let them go out thus loaded, they began to break them. The soldiers looked on and laughed. The "foreigner"—the empressario was a Frenchman—would have to pay. The king consort retired without, in his capacity of President, giving any orders, and none could interfere till he had left his seat. Then, the populace, encouraged by impunity, began to set fire to everything they could lay hands on. Manolas exhibited the lucifer-match boxes they brought to light their lover's cigars with, and things were beginning to assume a serious aspect, when the Military Governor making his appearance, ordered the soldiers to load, and then reinforcements arriving, the crowd was driven out by the soldiers advancing with fixed bayonets. Some of Albion's fair daughters were there, and of course fainted, while the Spanish women seemed to enjoy the scene. The authorities, protesting that the conditions of the programme not having been fulfilled, have ordered the empressario or undertaker of the concern, to pay all the damage done by the people, and give two-thirds of his profits to the public charities.

DEATH OF MEHEMET ALI.

This distinguished man died at Alexandria in Egypt, Aug. 2, and was buried in Cairo, in an alabaster mosque built by himself, in the citadel. Twenty-six buffaloes were killed and distributed among the poor at his funeral, together with twenty-six camel loads of dates and bread, and a considerable sum of money. Mehemet Ali was born in Roumelia, the ancient Macedonia, 1760, the year when Bonaparte and Wellington appeared in the world. He began life as a tobacconist in his native town, then entered the army and distinguished himself in the successful efforts made by the Turks to drive Bonaparte and the French from Egypt, over which he was appointed Viceroy, and after various bold measures became virtually an independent King. To rid himself of the Mamelukes, or old organized soldiery, he invited the leaders to be present in the citadel of Cairo on the occasion of investing his son with military authority as chief of the expedition against the Wahabees, a warlike and fanatical Arab tribe. When the ceremony was over the Mamelukes mounted their horses to depart, but on reaching the gates, they were found shut, and a sudden discharge of musketry from soldiers planted on the walls completely annihilated them. It is stated that 470 perished in the citadel with their chief, Ibrahim Bey, and 1,200 more were killed through the country,—an act of perfidy and cold-blooded massacre without a parallel. In his latter years he became merciful and humane, and in domestic life was the model of a husband and father. He did not learn to read till he was 45 years old. He improved the condition of the people by introducing European arts, and husbandry, and mitigating the rigors of government, though it still remained oppressive, and the people little better than slaves. Though a Mohammedan, he paid little respect to the tenets of Mahomet, never fasting in the month of Ramazan, and showed the greatest toleration to all religions. He was the first Mohammedan ruler who extended real protection to Christians, whom he raised to the highest ranks, and made some of them his most intimate friends.

It is to be hoped, that through the intercourse of the Egyptians with Christian nations, and especially the English, better ideas of religion and government will be introduced, and the fires of pure religion be kindled upon altars where once they burned brightly, but for ages have smouldered if not been utterly extinguished. [Con. Jour.

A PRINCELY DWELLING.—Dr. Moffit, the great pill-man, is about completing a first-class dwelling on the north side of Union Square, to be occupied by himself. The interior finish is equal to any in the city. The drawing-room is ornamented with highly-wrought fresco painting (in imitation of bas-relief) in the Grecian style tipped with gold. The dining-room is in the Gothic style; parlor in light French; saloon and halls in the Elizabethan, and library in the style of Louis XIV. The ceiling of the latter is ornamented with likenesses of the Italian poets, Dante, Tasso, Ariosto, &c., and various devices. Some of the carved work is quite elaborate. The halls are lighted by a stained glass sky-light, eight feet in diameter. All the bath rooms are lighted and ventilated by means of iron sky-lights. Gas, and hot and cold water, are introduced into all the apartments. Some of the mantles and jambs are very elaborately carved. A mantle of Sienna marble in particular (yellow) is very fine. Its cost was $750. All the outside windows are of heavy plate glass. The building is four stories high, with basement and sub-cellar, and has a front of 45 feet and a depth of 84. The cost of the building will be about $85,000, including $25,000 for the lot which it occupies. Last year the Doctor built for himself a store in Broadway at a cost of near $70,000, including about $29,000 for the lot. [Jour. Com.

LARGE AND SMALL FARMS.—Most young farmers are unsuccessful, simply because their farms are too large; and the complaint is often heard that no money can be made at farming. Take up the directory of ten years since, and mark the names of all the merchants then doing business in New York; follow these names through the directories of subsequent years, and see if one in twenty have continued to do business for ten consecutive years without failing.

This is a sorry fact, and evidently arises from the fault of the merchants themselves. In agricultural language "they turn too heavy a sward, and do not lay it regular." So with the unsuccessful farmer; he has too much land; he cannot manure it properly, and his labor bestowed on unmanured land is not effective. Land fully manured, and thoroughly cultivated, will produce double the amount of crops that can be obtained from half-manured land. Land too, well manured, is more easily worked. Its particles more readily disintegate, and extensive crops do not require expensive labor in proportion to results.

WHEAT ON PRAIRIE LANDS.—Some very successful experiments have been made this year and last, in the central and northern part of Illinois, in the cropping of wheat on new prairie lands. Ner New Carthage, in 1847, Mr. A. Hamilton broke 100 acres of new prairie, finishing about the first of August. This he put into wheat, completing the sowing about the 15th of September. From this 100 acre tract he cut and secured 2,300 bushels of good wheat, losing enough, he thinks, through inability to harvest it in season, to have made the whole average 30 bushels to the acre. From which crop he is realizing the present season $1,800. The breaking of the ground cost him $1,50 per acre, or $150 for the whole, and the enclosing it $160, being at the rate of $15 per thousand for 10,000 rails, and $1 per thousand for laying the fence. We derive these facts from an account of Mr. Hamilton's operations published in the Warsaw Signal, the editor of which paper says that there are ten thousand acres of just such land, in its wild state, within eight or ten miles of that town.

IMPROVED RAILROAD SWITCH.—A few days since, says the Worcester Spy, we were shown the model of an improved Railroad Switch, invented and constructed by Harvey Sturtevant, an ingenious mechanic of our city. This Switch is so constructed, as to be always at the control of the engineer, who, by the simple raising or depressing of a lever, can turn the switch with absolute certainty, whichever way he pleases, while the locomotive is under full headway. The construction of this switch is of the simplest character possible, and not liable either to get out of order or to fail in its operation. The advantages of such an improvement must be obvious. It dispenses, at once, with the troop of switch-tenders now required on the Railroads, and obviates the danger arising from their too frequent neglect of duty. Scientific persons connected with the Railroads, who have seen it, are highly pleased with it, and feel confident that it must come into universal use.

IMPROVED PADDLE-WHEEL FOR STEAMBOATS.—The Jersey City Telegraph describes a new kind of Paddle-wheel, at the Machine shop of Messrs. Cobb, Fields & Co., of that city. The wheel is the invention of a Mr. Tingle, of New York. The paddles are of sheet iron, and instead of being at right angles to the arms of the wheels, consist of two parallel plates vertical to the water and so contrived, that when the paddle enters the water, it assumes the form of a bucket, or of the covers of a book opened, at an angle of 40 degrees—the plates move upon a pivot, and as the paddle rises from the water, the plates again become parallel, and the water escapes.

The advantage of this wheel is, that the power is effectively exerted at the right point, and that it lifts no water when rising, which is the great objection to the ordinary paddle-wheel. A trial was recently made, which was quite satisfactory. The wheels were properly adapted to a boat 32 feet long, and worked by two men, with a crank and band. With a company of 12 persons, the passage to Hoboken from this city was made in 18 minutes against wind and tide. The wheels are 5 feet in diameter.

SMOKING POTATOES FOR THE ROT.—I have been informed by a gentleman of my acquaintance, that he had stopped his potatoes from rotting by smoking them. After the potatoes were dug and placed in the cellar, (an out-door cellar,) he built a smoke and continued it eight or ten days, when the affected part dried up, and the rest of the potatoes remained sound and good through the winter. The remedy was discovered by placing fire in an unfinished cellar, to prevent the vegetables from freezing—immediately after which it was found that the potatoes had stopped rotting. He says he has tried the experiment for two or three years past, and has never known it to fail of arresting the disease immediately.

AUTUMNAL SOWING.—It has long been the practice with our most intelligent gardeners, to sow the seeds of certain vegetables in the fall. The onion is often sowed as early as September, and we have seen acres on the first of November, green with young spires. Cobbett, in his "American Gardener," recommends the sowing of other vegetable seeds in autumn, those of the beet, carrot, parsnip, &c., and says that the seed of all plants will lie safe in this way all winter, though the frost should penetrate a distance beneath them, except the seed of such plants as a slight frost will cut down.

TO PRESERVE MILK.—If milk be introduced into bottles, then well corked and put into a pan of cold water and gradually raised to a boiling point, and, after being allowed to cool, be taken out and put away in a cool place, the milk may be kept perfectly sweet for half a year. Or it may be evaporated to dryness, by a gentle heat, and under constant stirring. A dry mass will thus be obtained which, when dissolved in hot water, is said to possess all the qualities of the best milk.

CUTTING BUSHES.—This is a good season to eradicate, thoroughly and effectnally, the bushes which deface your cultivated lands; Fern, and worthless shrubs should now be cut in your pasture grounds; they shade the ground and diminish greatly the amount of feed, especially in dry times. Cut all off, and destroy them root and branch.

JEWISH NEW-YEAR.—The commencement of the Jewish year has been celebrated for several days past by our Jewish citizens, who will, on next Monday, observe the great day of atonement, fasting for 24 hours. The Jewish year begins at the new moon, which varies from the 5th of September to the 5th of October, and this year it began on the 16th inst. The first month of the Jewish year is called Tisri, and corresponds to part of September and part of October. The reason given for making the year commence at this season is a tradition that the world was created in September. [Sun, Sept. 21.

THE PRESENT FASHIONS AND THE PURITANS:—The Puritan fathers watched over not only the conduct of persons, but the cut of their garments. The present style of dress, it will be seen by the following order, was not much admired by that straight-laced sect:—

"July 7th, 1639. No garment shall be made with short sleeves whereby the nakedness of the arm may be discovered in the wearing thereof, and such as have garments already made with short sleeves, shall not hereafter wear the same, unless they cover their arms to the wrist with linen or otherwise; and that hereafter no person whatever shall make any garment for women, or any of their sex, with sleeves more than half an ell wide in the widest place thereof, and so proportionably for bigger or smaller persons."

DIMENSIONS OF ANCIENT CITIES.—Nineveh was 15 miles by 9, and 40 round, with walls 100 feet high, and thick enough for three chariots. Babylon was 60 miles within the walls, which were 75 feet thick, and 300 high, with 100 brazen gates. Thebes, in Egypt, presents ruins 27 miles round. It has 100 gates. Carthage was 25 miles round. Athens was 25 miles round, and contained 25,000 citizens, and 400,000 slaves. The walls of Rome were 13 miles.

Variety.

The Delaware Republican states, that Joseph Johnson, of Wilmington, has invented and patented a new machine, which he calls "The Bran Duster." It is designed, after the flour has been bolted, to further separate the bran from the flour, and such is its utility, that out of every hundred bushels of wheat ground an additional barrel of flour is procured. This is quite an important saving when we consider that some of the mills grind over three hundred bushels per day. Two or three of the Brandywine millers have already procured the Bran Duster or Sifter, and others, no doubt, will speedily follow.

The London Lancet of the 11th, contains a notice of an instrument which has been invented by Thomas Wakely, the surgeon of the Royal Free Hospital, to be used during the treatment of deafness in all its varieties. The Sonometer tests with the greatest accuracy the amount of hearing a person actually possesses in every stage of the affliction. With the aid of the Sonometer, no doubt can exist in the mind of the patient or surgeon regarding the progress of the case under treatment.

We are assured, says the American Artisan, by Mr. H. Serrel, of this city, that he can produce a plate capable of printing several thousand copies, which cannot be imitated, even by himself. An unlimited number of these plates can be produced, and all different from each other, suitable for labels, checks, notes, cards and in fact anything where printing is concerned. The invention has been submitted to several bank note engravers, who say that it is impossible to be imitated.

The St. Louis Reveille states that Mr. Hughes of that city has invented a plan "for carrying railroad trains across river gorges, up acclivities, &c., without the ordinary assistants, as bridges, inclined planes, tunnels, and stationary engines. By Mr. Hughes' method, a train of any weight can be taken over a mountain where the rise per mile is not more than 1500 feet, without difficulty."

Mr. J. S. Cutts, of Boston, has invented a contrivance for transferring the spindle to the shuttle, without removing the cob; thus saving both the waste in handling the cob, and the expense of the machinery to make the bind to hold the cob together. The plan is very ingenious and simple, and, we should think, must certainly come into use.

From some experiments made at the Agricultural Institute, at St. Germain, in France, it appears that the sheep, that gained in weight three and a quarter pounds a month, increased double that amount in the same length of time, when about one-tenth of an ounce of salt was added to their food each day.

Nothing is equal to young pine trees by the road side to break the cold winds, and to prevent the snow from drifting. There are many situations where these might be placed without injury to any one; and the cost of setting them is not half so much as the cost of making board fences to keep the snow from drifting.

A Mrs. Bryan, wife of a respectable tradesman in London, eloped with a young man whom her husband had received into his house from charitable motives, carrying off, at the same time, considerable money. The husband was so affected by the infamous conduct of his wife, that he was seized with a mortal illness that soon ended his life

The amount of specie now in the Bank vaults in New York, is over $8,000,000, and in the Sub-Treasury $3,600,000. Total, $11,600,000. An amount which, if we mistake not, is unprecedented.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration o Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery. 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation o Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance, of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

INFERENTIAL PROOF OF A FIRST-DAY SABBATH.

In noticing, two weeks ago, Mr. Morton's "Vindication of the True Sabbath," we promised to give our readers some extracts from it. To redeem that promise, we copy from page 41 to page 54. In sustaining the proposition, that the seventh day of the week is the only weekly Sabbath of God's appointment, Mr. Morton says:—

My fourth reason for believing this proposition is, that God has never blessed and sanctified any day of the week but the seventh.

In sustaining this reason, as I occupy negative ground, I shall simply defend it against your usual Scripture arguments in defense of your favorite doctrine, that God blessed and sanctified the first day of the week, in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ.

In arguing this doctrine, you do not pretend to offer positive, but only inferential proof. You quote certain texts, and say, Hence we infer that the first day of the week is the Sabbath. Now, as there are many possible, and even plausible inferences, that are not necessarily true, I intend to be governed, in the examination of your Scripture proofs, by the following rule of interpretation:—

"The whole counsel of God, concerning all things necessary for his own glory, man's salvation, faith, and life, is either expressly set down in Scripture, or by good and necessary consequence may be deduced from Scripture."

Brethren, I intend, with God's help, to show that, according to the above rule, which you admit to be correct, all your inferences in favor of a first-day Sabbath are unnecessary, and some of them wholly inadmissible.

YOUR FIRST PROOF.

Hebrews 4: 9, 10—"There remaineth, therefore, a rest (sabbatism) to the people of God. For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his."

Your premises consist of four assertions: First, That the rest, or sabbatism, that remaineth, is something different from the ancient Sabbath. Second, That the person who "hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his," is the Lord Jesus Christ. These two assertions I most cheerfully admit. Third, That Christ entered into his rest on the day of his resurrection. Fourth, That the sabbatism of God's people is enjoyed in this life. These last two assertions I utterly deny.

Your inference is, that the first day of every week, that being the day of the week on which Christ rose, is the sabbatism of God's people. Of course, if I prove that the last two assertions are false, your inference will be shown to be inadmissible.

I assert, then,—

1. That Christ did not "enter into his rest" on the day of his resurrection; for the following reasons:—First, Because the Scriptures do not say so. Second, Because this earth is not the place of his rest. He was, to the last day he spent here, "a pilgrim and a stranger in the earth," and had not therein "where to lay his head." But his resurrection took place on earth, and he continued on earth for "forty days" afterwards. Third, Because the Scriptures plainly teach, that the Mediator did "enter into his rest," when he "sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." Heb. 1: 3. "Arise, O Lord, into thy rest; thou and the ark of thy strength." Ps. 132: 2. This was the prayer of David and the congregation of Israel, when they removed the ark from the house of Obed-Edom to the place "that David had pitched for it." When Solomon and the elders of Israel brought up the ark from the city of David, and placed it in the holy of holies, in the temple "made with hands," they prayed in like manner, "Now therefore arise, O Lord God, into thy resting-place, thou, and the ark of thy strength." 2 Chron 6: 41. Now the ark was a type of Christ, while "heaven itself" is the true "holy of holies," "whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest forever after the order of Melchizedek." Heb. 6: 20. If, then, the ark entered into its rest, when it was placed in the holy of holies, Jesus Christ, the antitypical ark, entered into his rest when he sat down on the right hand of God, in the antitypical holy of holies. Fourth, Because the Apostle's great design, in this epistle, was to convince the church, and especially the Hebrews, that Christ, having "by himself purged our sins," as they all admitted he had done, "sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high," (ch. 1: 3,) as our ever-living Intercessor. Yes, the "one idea," that runs through the whole epistle, is to illustrate and magnify the doctrine of the glorious intercession of Christ the Mediator, who, "after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God." Do you ask proof? Take, then, the Apostle's own assertion, (ch. 8: 1,) "Now, of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: We have such a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." All that is said in the third and fourth chapters, about the rest of Christ and the sabbatism of the people of God, is included in this summary; so that it is to Christ's eternal rest in the heavens that the verses under consideration refer. Indeed, we have evidence of this fact, satisfactory enough, in the immediate context, (ch. 3: 4,) "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus"—compared with ch. 4: 14—"Seeing, then, that we have a great High Priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession." Fifth, Because there is not, in this epistle, one solitary reference to the resurrection of Christ, except in the concluding benediction; but it abounds in references to his ascension and intercession.

2. If I have reasoned correctly above, your assertion, that the sabbatism of God's people is enjoyed in this life, scarcely needs refutation. As Christ entered into his rest, when he received the crown of glory from the Father; so believers shall enter into his rest, when they "shall be glorified with him." Moreover, as Christ did not enter into his rest on the first day of the week, your inference, that that day is the Sabbath, is not only unnecessary, but wholly inadmissible.

Bear in mind also, brethren, that, if Christ did not enter into his rest on the first day of the week, then your great philosophical argument for the first-day Sabbath, founded upon the fact, that the work of redemption is greater than that of creation, vanishes at once into smoke, or, at least, becomes useless for your purpose.

YOUR SECOND PROOF.

Psalm 118: 22, 24—"The stone which the builders refused is become the head-stone of the corner." "This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it."

Acts 4: 10, 11—"Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole. This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner."

You premise, that "the day which the Lord hath made" is the day of the resurrection of Christ. Whence you i[illegible]at the first day of the week is the Sab[illegible]

1. If what you premise were true, the inference does not follow. The prophet does not say, We will rejoice and be glad in the same day of every week; but, We will rejoice and be glad in it, that is, in that day, whatever it may be. Now Christ did not rise on the first day of every week, but on one single day; and we may very well rejoice and be glad in that one day, without keeping any Sabbath in connection with it. Abraham rejoiced and was glad in the day of Christ; but he kept no Sabbath in honor of it. So, doubtless, you rejoice and are glad in the day of his crucifixion, though you do not celebrate it on any particular day of the week. But—

2. You are evidently mistaken in referring this language of the Psalmist to the resurrection of Christ—for the following reasons:

First—Because "the day which the Lord hath made" is the same in which Christ went in by the gates of righteousness. Verses 19 and 20. "Open to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them, and I will praise the Lord. This gate of the Lord, into which the righteous shall enter." Now, though Christ did come up from "the gates of death" on the day of his resurrection, he did not formally enter [illegible] righteousness," till that day when he ascended from Mount Olivet, which was not the first day of the week. His almighty power and eternal Sonship were declared most gloriously on the day of his resurrection; but it was on the day of his ascension that his mediatorial righteousness was formally approved by the Father; while it was visibly manifested, in the presence of the universe, that the door of heaven had been opened to all true believers. Then shouted the seraphim, and all the host of heaven, while the door-posts of the New Jerusalem trembled at the voice, "Arise, O Jehovah, into thy rest, thou, and the ark of thy strength. Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy!" Therefore, this is not the day of Christ's resurrection, but that of his ascension.

Second—Because "the day which the Lord hath made" is the same in which "the stone which the builders refused" became "the head-stone of the corner," (verse 22.) Christ did not become "the head of the corner," till he "sat down on the right hand of God." You assert that he did, and refer to Acts 4: 10, 11, quoted above, as proof. From what the Apostle there sets forth, you draw the inference, that, as he was set at nought by the builders, when he was crucified, so he became the head of the corner, when God raised him from the dead. The Apostle does not say, however, that this took place on the same day that he rose from the dead; and all that we must necessarily infer from what he does say, is, that he became the head of the corner since his resurrection, which is cheerfully admitted. But whether it was on the same day, or two, or ten, or forty days after, the Apostle saith not. Still your inference would be entirely natural and proper, if it were not contrary to the analogy of faith, and to the teachings of the same spirit in other parts of the Scriptures.

I suppose it will be admitted, that when Christ became the head of the corner, he became "the head over all things to the church," and that then "all things were put under his feet." Now the Apostle clearly teaches, that these things took place when he sat down on the right hand of God, as appears from the following texts:—

Ephesians 1: 20—22—"Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, (or, having raised him from the dead,) and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church."

Hebrews 2: 8, 9—"But now we see not yet all things put under him (man;) but we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor." Observe, that the Apostle's great object in this epistle is, to show that Christ is in heaven, forever interceding for the church.

Now, is it not manifest from these texts, that Christ became the head of the corner when he ascended to his Father and our Father, to his God and our God? Nor is there any thing in Acts 4: 10, 11, that contradicts this idea.

Brethren, the glorious building of grace has its foundation, not on earth, where we are pilgrims and strangers, but in heaven, where Jesus, the corner-stone, "elect and precious," sitteth at the right hand of God, and is constantly occupied in gathering from afar the "lively stones" of the glorious edifice. Blessed forever be his holy name!

YOUR THIRD PROOF.

John 20: 19, 26—"Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you." "And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them; then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you."—See also Luke 24: 26.

You premise, that the disciples, on the two days referred to above, one of which certainly was, and the other may have been, the first day of the week, had met together for public or social worship, when Christ appeared to them. Whence you infer, that the first day of the week is the Sabbath.

Now, what you premise seems to be a mere assumption, for which there is not a shadow of proof, either in the text or context. No one of the Evangelists says that they met for worship; nor did they worship, so far as we know, when met together. In regard to the first of those occasions, we are told, that they "were assembled for fear of the Jews;" and, as to the second, we are simply informed, that they "were within," which means, probably, that they were at home; for Luke tells us, that, on the day of the ascension, the eleven "abode" in an upper room. Acts 1: 13.

Again, your inference is not necessary; for the matter may be explained thus: On the day of the resurrection, the eleven, having procured a common lodging-room, "assembled for fear of the Jews;" and Christ appeared to them before the close of the same day, in order that they, who were to be witnesses of his resurrection, might have ocular demonstration of the fact, that he rose "according to the Scriptures." On the other occasion, "after eight days," he met them, probably, "as they sat at meat," (Mark 16: 14,) because Thomas, who had not seen him since his resurrection, was then with them.

These reasons are surely sufficient to account for his appearing on those occasions. But why demand reasons at all? Had he not a right to meet his disciples on any day of the week that he chose, without telling us why? Can you tell us why he appeared to the brethren when they were fishing? Christ has done many things for which the only reason we can give is, that it seemed good to him.

YOUR FOURTH PROOF.

Acts 2: 1—"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place."

Your premises are—1. That the Feast of Pentecost fell that year on the first day of the week. 2. That the disciples were for that reason, with one accord in one place." Week is the Sabbath. I reply—

Whether the Feast of Pentecost fell that year on the first day of the week, or not, the disciples did not meet to keep the Sabbath, but to celebrate Pentecost. They would have been, in like manner, "with one accord in one place," if it had been the fourth day of the week, because it was the day of Pentecost. Therefore, your inference is not only unnecessary, but wholly inadmissible.

YOUR FIFTH PROOF.

Acts 20: 7—"And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight."

You premise, that the disciples came together, in this instance, to celebrate the Lord's Supper, and to hear the word. Whence you infer, that the first day of the week is the Sabbath.

What you premise is very uncertain; for—

1. There is no evidence that they met to hear the word. The object of the meeting was "to break bread;" and the preaching of Paul seems to have been incidental, and not by appointment.

2. It is not certain that "to break bread" means to partake of the Lord's Supper. The Greek word, translated, to break, is used very often in the New Testament in reference to ordinary meals. An instance occurs in Luke 24: 35—"And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread."

But if what you assert were true, your inference is not necessary; for—

1. It is entirely proper, for aught we know to the contrary, to celebrate the Lord's Supper and hear preaching on any day of the week.

2. Perhaps this meeting was held at that particular time, because the Apostle and his company were "ready to depart on the morrow." It was probably a farewell meeting, as many learned men think, and the text itself seems to hint.

3. There is not one word said in the text about Sabbath-keeping; nor is there the least intimation, either in the text or context, that the disciples were accustomed to meet on the first day of the week for any purpose whatever.

But you say, Paul waited there seven days, and we have no account of his preaching till the last night of his stay, which was the first of the week. We reply, This is no evidence that he did not preach during the other six days. Luke tells us, in this same chapter, verses 2 and 3, that "he came into Greece, and there abode three months;" and he does not say that he preached once during that time. But a small part, indeed, of the doings of the apostles is recorded.

It is a remarkable fact, that this text, which is the only one in the New Testament that speaks of public religious exercises on the first day of the week, is, at the same time, the only one in the Bible that directly proves, that this day is not the Sabbath. I have already proposed to give up the argument in favor of the seventh day, if you produce one apostolic example of unnecessary labor performed therein. Will you give up your argument for the first day on the same condition? I believe this verse furnishes such an example.

The text proves nothing for you, if Paul's sermon and the breaking of bread were not on the first day. The sermon was preached between evening and midnight, and the bread was broken between midnight and break of day, and then Paul set out on his journey. According to the Roman method of computing time, the breaking of bread, at least, was in the morning of the same day in which Paul traveled from Troas to Assos, and thence to Mitylene; and, according to the Jewish method, the sermon, the breaking of bread, and the journey from Troas to Mitylene, were all within the compass of the same "first day of the week." That Luke should follow the unnatural Roman method, is so unlikely as hardly to be supposable. Now, if Paul traveled unnecessarily from Troas to Mitylene, as it seems he did, on the first day of the week, surely that day was not then the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. This text, therefore, proves positively that the first day is not the Sabbath, on which account it is of no little value in this controversy.

YOUR SIXTH PROOF.

I Corinthians 16: 2—"Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

Your premises are—1. That the Apostle here commands the Corinthians to make public collections on the first day of the week. 2. That, therefore, public assemblies were accustomed to be held on that day. Whence you infer, that the first day of the week is the Sabbath.

I deny both your premises. The Apostle simply orders, that each one of the Corinthian brethren should lay up at home some portion of his weekly gains on the first day of the week. The whole question turns upon the meaning of the expression, "by him;" and I marvel greatly how you can imagine that it means "in the collection box of the congregation." Greenfield, in his Lexicon, translates the Greek term, "by one's self, i. e. at home." Two Latin versions, the Vulgate and that of Castellio, render it, "apud se," with one's self, at home. Three French translations, those of Martin, Osterwald, and De Sacy, "chez soi," at his own house, at home. The German of Luther, "bei sich selbst," by himself, at home. The Dutch, "by hemselven," same as the German. The Italian of Diodati, "appresso di se," in in his own presence, at home. The Spanish of Felipe Scio, "en su casa," in his own house. The Portuguese of Ferreira, "para isso," with himself. The Swedish, "nær sig sielf," near himself. I know not how much this list of authorities might be swelled, for I have not examined one translation that differs from those quoted above. Now, if your premises are false, your inference is not only unnecessary, but wholly inadmissible.

YOUR SEVENTH PROOF.

Revelations [illegible] on the Lord's day."

You premise, that the "Lord's day" is the first day of the week. Whence you infer, that the first day of the week is the Sabbath.

You here assume the principal point in dispute, namely, that God has appointed the first day of every week to be kept in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ. Is every Friday the "Lord's day," because he was crucified on Friday? You answer, No. Is every Thursday the "Lord's day," because he ascended on Thursday? You answer, No. So, when you ask, Is every first day of the week the "Lord's day," because he rose on the first day? I answer, No. And is it too much that I should ask you to prove your assumption? I have never yet met with an attempt to prove it.

But, were this even proved, your inference would not be necessary. The first day might be the "Lord's day," and yet not the Sabbath. Would the bare mention of this day by the Apostle John, even if it were certain that he referred to the first day of the week, repeal or alter the fourth commandment? Certainly not. But you ask, What day did he mean? I reply, Most probably he meant the seventh, since we know from several scriptures that this is in fact the Lord's day. See Nehemiah 9: 14, and Isaiah 58: 13. But you ask again, Why did he not say "the Sabbath," if he meant it? I reply by asking you, Why did he not say "the first day," if he meant it?

Brethren, who can say, that, from any or all of the texts commented upon above, the inference is necessary, that the first day of the week is, and that the seventh is not, holy? But this is precisely what you infer from them. On the sole authority of these passages, together with that one in which Christ says, that he is "Lord of the Sabbath," you have no hesitation in affirming that the first day of the week is the very Sabbath day spoken of in the fourth commandment, and that the seventh day of the week is not now more holy than any other; or, in other words, that the blesssing which God put upon it in the beginning, (Gen. 2: 21,) has been taken from it, and given to another day. What! because "there remaineth a sabbatism to the people of God," therefore the seventh day must have ceased to be the Sabbath! Because "we will be glad and rejoice" in "the day which the Lord hath made," therefore the seventh day must have ceased to be holy! Because Christ showed himself to his disciples once or twice on the first day of the week, therefore the seventh day cannot be the Sabbath! Because the Pentecostal effusion of the Holy Ghost happened on the first day of the week, as is clearly demonstrated by arithmetical calculation, therefore the seventh day cannot claim to be the Sabbath! Because the disciples met once "to break bread" on the first day of the week, therefore God must have unsanctified the seventh day! Because the Corinthian and Galatian Christians were commanded to "lay by them in store" on the first day of the week, for the relief of the poor saints, therefore the seventh day can be nothing more than a working day! Because John was "in the spirit on the Lord's day," therefore the seventh day cannot be "the Lord's day," as it used to be! Because Jesus Christ is "Lord of the Sabbath," and has the right to change it, or even to annihilate it, (?) therefore the seventh day must have ceased to be a day of rest? O brethren, you dare not say, that any of these inferences flow from the Scriptures, as necessary consequences. But if they are not necessary—if there is any way of avoiding them, without doing violence either to the text or context—how can you ask me to believe that the first day is, and that the seventh is not, holy.

HYMN OF THE CHURCH YARD.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Ah me! this is a sad and silent city;
  Let me walk softly o'er it, and survey
Its grassy streets with melancholy pity!
  Where are its children, where their gleesome play?
Alas! their cradled rest is cold and deep—
Their playthings are thrown by, and they asleep.

This is pale beauty's bourn; but where the beautiful,
  Whom I have seen come forth at evening's hours,
Leading their aged friends, with feelings dutiful,
  Amid the wreaths of spring, to gather flowers,
Alas! no flowers are here but flowers of death,
And those who once were sweetest sleep beneath.

This is a populous place; but where the bustling,
  The crowded buyers of the noisy mart—
The lookers on—the showy garments rustling—
  The money-changers—and the men of art?
Business, alas! hath stopped in mid career,
And none are anxious to resume it here.

This is the home of grandeur; where are they,
  The rich, the great, the glorious, and the wise?
Where are the trappings of the proud, the gay—
  The gaudy guise of human butterflies?
Alas! all lowly lies each lofty brow,
And the green sod dizzens their beauty now.

This is the place of refuge and repose;
  Where are the poor, the old, the weary wight,
The scorned, the humble, and the man of woes,
  Who wept for morn, and sighed again for night?
Their sighs at last have ceased, and here they sleep
Beside their scorners, and forget to weep.

This is the place of gloom; where are the gloomy?
  The gloomy are not citizens of death;
Approach and look, where the long grass is plumy,
  See them above! they are not found beneath!
For these low denizens, with artful wiles,
Nature, in flowers, contrives her mimic smiles.

This is the place of sorrow; friends have met
  And mingled tears o'er those who answered not;
And where are they whose eyelids then were wet?
  Alas! their griefs, their tears, are all forgot;
They, too, are landed in this silent city,
Where there is neither love, nor tears, nor pity.

This is the place of fear; the firmest eye
  Hath quailed to see its shadowy dreariness;
But Christain hope, and heavenly prospects high,
  And earthly cares, and nature's weariness,
Have made the timid pilgrim cease to fear,
And long to end his painful journey here.

THE DUTY OF FREE INQUIRY AND DISCUSSION.

Its existence is generally admitted, but the senses in which it is admitted are somewhat various. With some it means: the duty of saying all that can be said "on our side," of making heaven and earth contri- the adjoined and equally imperative duty, of suspecting the presence of heresy wherever a thought is suggested for which a place has not been made in the pre-arranged system, and of striving, heartity, to destroy by insinuations, or to overwhelm with a general hullabaloo of outraged orthodoxy, the daring speculator who thinks he has evolved a needed truth, albeit at variance with the ancient formula.

With another and a larger class, and one as much more respectable than this as it is less brutal and ferocious, the duty of free discussion means: the duty of holding one's opinions tenaciously, and of letting every body else hold theirs equally so; the duty of keeping hold firmly, and with a clenched grasp that nothing shall be allowed to loosen, upon the received system; of gathering about that whatever obviously harmonizes with it, of illustration or of defense, and of shutting its ear unalterably to everything which even in seeming militates against it. Such persons, and they are probably the major part of most communities, are content to let other people think for themselves. They may sometimes express their own dissent from opinions, but they hurl no poisoned weapons against their authors; they oppose them simply by bringing in contrast with them the established system, with which they clash, and in the sure conviction of whose correctness their own minds calmly abide. They are courteous, gentlemanly, sometimes enthusiastic, but never passionate, and it is impossible not to respect them for their probity and humanity. Yet they never investigate a newly presented subject, freshly and radically. They never, with a generous holding in abeyance of former opinions, come to the consideration of a new position with open, calm, unbiassed minds, prepared to judge it upon its own basis, and to receive or reject it in obedience to a higher law than that of previons conviction.

There is a third class, to whom this is implied in the duty of free inquiry and discussion: primarily, that every man be allowed to think for himself, as a spiritual being, responsible to God, destined to immortality; be allowed to gather what views he can from nature, from experience, from conscience, from the scriptures; to express them freely, in his own method, and without the hazard of being taunted and ridiculed for them, or of being broken upon the wheel of popular suspicion. And, secondly but equally, that every other man be allowed, be required, to take those principles and measure them for himself, not by the creed book, nor by the opinions of other and fallible men, but by the Scriptures which are of God; by the wants and impulses of his own soul, when it is raised to nearest communion with God and Christ; by the mighty under-voices that speak up through the creeds and liturgies and doctrinal statements of the whole Past. There is no careless throwing aside of former opinions, here. They furnish the basis on which one shall stand, in measuring the new. But they are not themselves the measures of the new. These are to be sought alone in the Gospel, and in the breathings of God's Spirit.

Which of these theories of Discussion is noblest, Reader? which is the worthiest of the Christian soul? which shows most confidence in the power of Truth? which promises best for the advancement, not of faction or of party, but of the Truth and the Piety which are precious to God?

THE LAST MINK SKIN.

The editor of the Michigan Christian Herald, having passed a week at Saut. Ste Marie, gives an interesting account of his visit. He says much about the Indians and missionary effort amongst them, and finds that the great barrier to their progress in civilization and Christianity is intemperance. Few can withstand the temptation to taste what the whisky-sellers offer them in exchange for their commodities, and many will drink up their pay in advance. The common excuse among them, says the editor of the Herald, when asked to sign the pledge, is that the white men will offer it to them, and they cannot refuse, and therefore, to sign, will only prove them liars. Some exercise their judgement, and have self-control enough to sign and keep the pledge. The value of the pledge, as illustrated in a few instances, is seen in the following incident, Rev. Mr. Bingham, referred to in the extract, has been attached to the Saut Mission more than 20 years:—

"Pained with the frequent scenes of intemperance among the Indians, Mr. B. resolved to try the efficacy of the temperance pledge. He translated the pledge into their native dialect, and began to introduce the subject in his discourses. Among his hearers were two chiefs of considerable note, Waishky and Shegud. The former was a very intemperate man, insomuch that the people called him old Whisky. Shegud drank occasionally, to please his friends. One Sunday when both were at the meeting, the subject of temperance was introduced in the discourse, and at the close the pledge was read, they were invited to take the matter into consideration, to attend another meeting on the coming week, and sign it. Shegud said he thought it would be a very good thing, if they could only keep it. Waishky hung down his head, and made no reply. The day previous to the meeting appointed, Br. B. was passing through the village, and met Waisky and Shegud with a kettle of whisky, and both tolerably drunk. He stepped up to them and requested that they would let him pour it upon the ground. They begged that he would not, saying that they had got this to take their last drink, and were then going to say good by to it, and to-morrow, said they, we will come up and sign your paper. 'Kagait eunh?' (will you truly?) said Mr. B. 'Kagait, Kagait,' was the reply. Mr. B. passed, and left them to their farewell revel. The next day, surely enough, they were both present ot the meeting, and both signed it. Waishky maintained a fair Christian character until the day of his death, and Shegud has up to this day—now 18 or 19 years.

"Some years after this circumstance, Waishky in formed Mr. B. how he came to signthe pledge. He referred to the Snnday on which Shegud said he thought it would be a good thing to sign it, if they could keep it, and, said he 'I thought just as Shegud did, but was afraid it would make a liar of me if I should sign it, for I did not believe I could keep it. But the day before the meeting, Shegud came to me and said, Come, I have one mink skin left. Now let us sell that, and get what whisky it will fetch, take our last drink, and say good bye to it; and let us go up to-morrow and sign that man's paper, I said, very good; and we did so.'"

THE INFIDEL'S PREDICAMENT.

The Pittsburgh Saturday Visiter, gives a vivid description of a man without a God, in the following article.

The Boston Investigator.

An Infidel paper, comes to us and on the margin written, "madam please exchange," with pleasure sir. We never saw the Investigator but once before, and that was ten years ago. We read it carefully, and one sentence we shall never forget. The writer was speaking of the tendency of the doctrine of grace to licentiousness—talking of the license, a Christian might feel to sin, because of his hope of pardon through a Saviour; and boasting of the superior morality of his creed. He introduced the negative side of his argument in these words, "but the poor infidel has no God, no Heaven, no Jesus Christ, no Hell."

No words ever struck us with such a benumbing force, What a poor homeless orphan! what a helpless desolate child! A man without a God to love, or a heaven to hope for—a sinner without a Saviour—no elaborated description of wo unutterable, ever conveyed to our mind the picture of despair which did these few words. We never before said "Our Father," with the same meaning—the same overwhelming desire to be acknowledged as a child. Our Father. What if we were cast out into the regions of space to wander a loose atom, without a centre to attract us, no light to cheer, or a sun to warm—nothing before—our world behind, and an invisible, irresponsible, irresistable nothing driving us thence. Oh the dread horrors of such a situation! No Hell? No God, no Heaven, and the universe becomes a hell. Past, present and to come—around, above, below there is nothing but the blackness of despair—a dreary void, a sunless waste, and hopeless future, and what greater hell could any body have? The poor Infidel has nothing else.

Since that nothing rational or irrational, has ever appeared to need pity like the man who has no God. Religious newspapers, and professing Christians, often shake our faith, sadly. "The Investigator," would soon drive us home, and we will read it to keep us in mind, that if Christians lack perfection, Infidels are minus a God.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 18, 1849.

DOING EVIL THAT GOOD MAY COME.

Who among all the disciples of Christ would perpetrate what he knew to be a wicked act, in the expectation that it would result in good? The bare statement of the idea is so revolting, that one would think it impossible that it should ever be realized. Yet Christians sometimes make an exhibition of this spirit, when, perhaps, they are scarcely conscious of it. Not that they mean to commit downright wickedness for the sake of accomplishing good results; but they suppose that the results aimed at, and—in their opinion—sure to follow, are of such a nature, that what they do in the way of means towards their accomplishment ought not to be considered as wickedness. We speak not of Papists, with whom it is an avowed doctrine, "that the end sanctifies the means," but of Protestants, who profess to hold this doctrine in abhorrence. We speak, too, only of that which we know; we testify only of that which we have seen. To come to the point, then, without farther preliminary, we have known persons to abandon the Sabbath, and join themselves to the society of those who observe the first day of the week, under the pretext of doing more good. Sometimes ministers of the Gospel act in this manner. Now we have a few plain remarks to offer upon such conduct.

1. It indicates ignorance of themselves. They imagine that their limited usefulness is to be attributed to the narrowness of the sphere in which they are moving, rather than to their own unfaithfulness. They cast their eyes upon another sphere, apparently wider, supposing that if they were but once placed in it, they could accomplish vastly more for God than they now can. But did such persons ever read a saying of our Saviour—"He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much?" Did they ever attempt to apply this saying to their own case? Before one undertakes to abandon the communion of Sabbath-keepers, under the idea that his opportunities for usefulness among them are too limited, he would do well to enter upon a serious examination of his own heart, and see whether he has been "faithful in a very few things," before he aspires to have "authority over ten cities." It will be found true in every instance, that one who has been unfaithful in a narrow sphere, exhibits the same spirit when transferred to a wider one. If he is a minister of the Gospel, he is, in reality, no more successful—he accomplishes no more for God—than he did before. It is true, he may witness more cases of conversion; there may be a greater number of members gathered into the church under his ministry. But, on the supposition, that these cases of conversion are all genuine, to whose labor are they to be attributed? Are they the result of his labor, or of the labor of those members of the church who were connected with him in fellowship? Does he witness a greater number of conversions because his opportunities for labor have been more extensive, and because he has been faithful to improve them? Or is it because he has had a greater number to help him? It by no means follows, that because they were gathered into the church under his ministry, they were gathered by it. His labors—his prayers—his faithfulness—may have had but little to do with the good which he has witnessed. Though in this world he may have the praise, yet in the great judgment day it may be discovered that some of his fellow-members were the real authors, under God, of all that for which he received glory from men. He was, in reality, no more useful, because no more faithful, in the larger sphere, than he was in the smaller one.

2. It overlooks the fact that a man's usefulness is of God, rather than of men. They think that the countenance of a large and respectable body of people will give a man such influence, that he must necessarily be useful. But this is a sad mistake. A man is useful just in proportion as God blesses him, and no farther. He may proclaim divine truth to dead souls for half a century, and have a large congregation to respond Amen the whole time, yet all will be in vain unless God shall send forth the Holy Spirit to make the dead alive. And if God in his sovereignty choose to send his quickening spirit, not all the combined influence of men and devils can hold the dead under the power of death. God is not dependent upon the aid which his creatures may give him for the advancement of his cause. It is their duty to "come up to his help," to be sure, and if they do, he will graciously accept their efforts; but if they will not, he can do without them. "It is nothing with the Lord to save by the many, or the few." The man, therefore, who faithfully and prayerfully avails himself of what opportunities he has, will find that he is as useful as his Master wishes him to be. To desire to be more so, is a mere affectation of sanctity, savoring very little of the humility which becomes a true Christian.

3. It foolishly takes for granted that a man can be more useful by disobeying God, than by obeying him! What a deplorable mistake [illegible] Is not a man's moral power for good very much according to the obedience he is known to render to God's law himself. When, therefore, it is understood that he carries himself with indifference towards some one of the divine precepts, it is a blot upon his character which neutralizes the force of his efforts to win others to obedience. Besides, will God bless one who is willfully disobedient? And if God does not bless him, his calculations upon usefulness will only result in disappointment and confusion. A father has some half a dozen sons, whom he appoints to cultivate a piece of ground. To one he marks out an acre, to another three acres, to another two, and so on; but to the sixth he simply says, "Stand here, and guard this tree." Now what if this one, after a while, should begin to reason with himself thus, "It seems like small business for me to stand here, day after day, to guard this tree; my brothers are employed in work which is vastly more important, and promises greater results. I am capable of doing more active service than this; my powers are fitted to accomplish something of more consequence. I will, therefore, leave this post; and, surely, my father will approve the step, when he comes to understand the motive." Think you, reader, that such a child would be blessed in his undertaking? Could he be viewed in any other light than as a disobedient child? And would he not deserve to be beaten with many stripes, as one who "knew his father's will and did it not?" The father, upon his return, would be very likely to say, "You knew well enough what was my will; it was simply to guard this tree. Had you done what I commanded, you would have been as useful as I wished you to be, and you had no business to aim at any thing more. I cannot approve your conduct, nor help you in the scheme you have so disobediently undertaken." To guard the fourth commandment, is the great work which God has assigned to Sabbath-keepers. By strictly attending to this duty, we may be restrained from many opportunities which others enjoy; but it does not become us to say that our Father made a mistake, when he assigned us to this post. He will bless us in our obedience, not in our disobedience.

4. It takes for granted that a man's usefulness is according to the immediate results of his labor. But, according to this view, many of the best men that ever lived were not useful. Indeed, the usefulness of Jesus Christ himself was very limited, in comparison with that of some of his servants; for there were but few who received his doctrine while he ministered on earth. The prophets, too, had but little success. Nevertheless, the prophets and Christ advocated those eternal principles of truth which cannot be destroyed, and which must, by the blessing of God, sooner or later, find a response in the consciences of men. They looked not at immediate results, however, and seemed to care but little about them. Their great concern was to be found in the way of obedience. Hear the language of him who spake as never man spake—"I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." And can sinful mortals aspire to move in a better path? The results of his labors, though not immediate, are nevertheless such as never could have been, had he deviated one iota from the path of obedience to the law of God.

The remarks we have made are applicable, not only to those who abandon the Sabbath, but also to those who have become well convinced that God enjoins the observance of the seventh day, but have thus far refused to yield obedience. Reader, are you one of this number? Deceive yourself no longer with the idea that you can be more useful by continuing in disobedience. If you wish to be useful, let your delight be in the law of the Lord; meditate therein day and night; and then "whatsoever you do shall prosper." Ps. 1.

RESTORATION OF BISHOP ONDERDONK.

The Diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church of New York held its annual Convention week before last, in this city. One great subject of interest was a movement looking to the restoration of Dr. Onderdonk to his office as Bishop. After the failure of a resolution requesting him to resign, on motion of Dr. Higbee, of Trinity Church, the following was presented:—

Whereas, The House of Bishops and the house of clerical and lay delegates in the General Convention of 1847, passed a canon in the words following: "Whenever the penalty of suspension shall be inflicted on a Bishop, Priest, or Deacon in this Church, the sentence shall specify on what terms, or at what time the penalty shall cease;" and whereas the Diocese and Diocesan of New York have been, for a long time, under disabilities which it was the design of the canon to prevent in future; therefore,

Resolved, That the Standing Committee be requested to present at an early day an address to the House of Bishops, praying that venerable body to adopt such measures as may render the wise provisions of the said canon of 1847 available to the relief of our Diocese, so that the objects may be accomplished of the unanimous prayer of the Convention addressed to the General Convention of 1847.

The vote resulted as follows: Ayes—Clergy, 91; Laity, 39. Noes—Clergy, 36; Laity, 46. The minority, as we learn from the Intelligencer, protested against this act, denouncing the absurdity of the argument by which it was supported, denying that the Church is under the necessity of terminating the sentence of suspension against the deposed Bishop, and affirming that he has exhibited a contumacy during his suspension that will make his restoration anything but desirable to the prosperity and standing of the Church. The protest was presented by the Hon. Luther Bradish, and bears the names of some of the most influential of the clergy and laity of New York and Brooklyn.

FUNERAL IN THE GROUNDS OF GIRARD COLLEGE.

By the will of the late Stephen Girard, no "clergyman, missionary, or ecclesiastic," of any creed, is permitted to enter the College inclosures. Notwithstanding this infidel prescription, religious instruction is imparted to the pupils, perhaps even more thoroughly than if there had been no restrictions. The Bible is read morning and evening, and the duties of the day are begun and ended with prayer. A correspondent of the N. Y. Recorder writes, that on Sunday "sermons are regularly preached to the children by laymen." It appears, also, that when a pupil dies, he is not tumbled into the earth like the beasts that perish, but is interred with religious ceremonies. One of the Philadelphia papers details, at some length, the order of exercises connected with the funeral of a lad who had just passed his tenth year, the son of a widow lady of that city:—

The services of a minister of the Gospel being interdicted by the will of Mr. Girard, Mr. Farley, one of the Directors, read an appropriate portion of the Scriptures; after which, a pretty hymn, suitable to the occasion, was sung by the scholars. The Hon. Joseph R. Chandler then delivered an address, concluding with a fervent prayer, during which there was not a dry eye in the assembly.

The feelings of the mother had been nicely consulted in regard to the place of burial, and in accordance with her wishes, a spot was selected within the College inclosure. The grave was dug in the southwestern portion of the grounds, which have been laid out as a cemetery. The spot is close to the wall, shady and secluded: Here the body was committed to the earth with the ceremony of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The grave is the first that has been dug in the cemetery, and the solitary mound will be neatly inclosed and appropriately marked.

THE GAIN OF SUNDAY-KEEPING.

The Independent has an interesting letter from Lumberland, Sullivan Co., which says of the Hudson and Delaware Canal:—

"Nearly half a million tons of coal will be sent down the Canal the present year; next year it is expected that the quantity will be more than doubled. The boats now carry 50 tons each, but when the Canal is enlarged they will be made to carry each 100 tons, and about 100 boats can be passed through the locks in a day. About 8,000 men and 1,000 horses are in the employment of this Company, on their canal and railroad, and at the mines. The Sabbath is observed on the whole route. No locks are opened on that day. Three missionaries are constantly employed on the line of the Canal, one of whom is supported by the Company. This has been the policy of the Company from the beginning; and mark how they have been prospered. They now divide from 12 to 16 per cent. per annum on the capital stock, which is worth from 60 to 70 per cent. above par value."

Upon which the Tribune very pertinently remarks:—

"We fear our clerical friend has written [illegible] consider '12 to 16 per cent. per annum' the natural and proper reward of godliness and Sabbath-keeping, and fancy his righteousness a dead loss when his stocks are not 'worth from 60 to 70 per cent. above par.' We must be careful of our words."

We are very much of the same mind with the Tribune. Yet ever since Dr. Edwards put out his "Sabbath Manual," embodying a great number of facts to prove that the keeping of the Sabbath is highly profitable in the way of dollars and cents, health, long life, worldly reputation, &c., this mode of argumentation has been in high favor with the religious public. We have often uttered our protest against such reasoning, and we shall continue to do so. It is at war with the teachings of Christ and his apostles. They taught us to expect a reward for righteousness, not in the good things of this world, but in the glory of the heavenly state. We do not doubt, however, that there are occasions when the Almighty, by the dispensations of his providence, signifies his approbation of well doing, and as clearly indicates that "the wicked and him that loveth violence his soul hateth." But we question very much whether he would do so under circumstances which would give an implied sanction to error. If Sunday were the true Bible Sabbath—the day which God "sanctified" and "blessed"—it might be that on some rare occasions, when it was necessary to a public vindication of the righteous principles of his government, he would signally confound its violators. But convinced, as we are, that it has no more claim to be called the Sabbath than Monday or Friday has, we cannot but regard all these attempts to make capital out of those facts which seem to show that it is an unprofitable thing to desecrate the day, as about on the same level with the superstition of the barbarians of Melita, who denounced Paul as a murderer when they saw a viper fastened on his hand.

Convert from Mohammedism.—The London Missionary Herald reports the baptism of several persons in Saugor, a Baptist mission station in Asia. One of them was a private tutor to the Rajah of Tehri. He is a convert from Mohammedanism, and is now adorning the doctrine of God his Saviour.

The Fulton (Oswego county) Patriot, gives the name of Mrs. Goulding as the woman in whose possession Mr. Burt's boy was found. Mr. and Mrs. Goulding are English people, of some wealth. The Patriot says that Mrs. G. is gone to Canada, with the little girl whom she represented as the twin-sister of Master Burt, who it is now believed is also a kidnapped child.

Baptismal Regeneration.—The Archbishop of York, in his Primary Charge, just issued, says on the subject of Baptismal Regeneration:—"Whatever, then, our own particular views may be, we must be content, so far as concerns our judgment of the doctrine laid down by the Church, to leave the question open, as the Reformers left it." The Reformers "taught that spiritual regeneration in baptism could only result in the case of those who had been from all eternity elected to everlasting life by the free and sovereign grace of God. That all the baptized should be spiritually regenerate, was, in their view, utterly impossible; and, therefore, they could not intend, in the formularies they drew up, to require or to express such a belief, unless we unfairly attribute to them that shameless effrontery, that gross and scandalous dishonesty, which, to the reproach of our times, has been openly avowed by some, that men may teach what they do not believe, and that they may believe what is contrary to their teaching. With the knowledge of this fact before us, we can not insist on it as a doctrine of our Church, that all baptized children are, as such, spiritually regenerate."

Episcopacy Renounced.—The Rev. R. C. Shimeall has addressed a letter to the authorities of the Diocese of New York, announcing his withdrawal from the Episcopal Church, and his purpose to join the Presbyterian Church. He states that he has been a minister in the Episcopal Church seventeen years, and a witness of the conflict in that communion for and against fundamental truth. Till lately he regarded the views of the Tractarians or Romanizers to be unwarranted by the standards of the Church. But now he is convinced that they are right according to the standards, and that the evangelical or low church party are wrong; and that the only alternative for him is to walk either to Rome or to Geneva, and he has chosen the latter.

The Bones of Whitfield's Arm returned to America.—About a quarter of a century ago, the bones of one of the arms of the celebrated preacher, Whitfield, disappeared from their resting-place under the old South Church in Newburyport, Mass. By a late steamer from England, Rev. J. F. Stearns, pastor of that church, received a small box containing the bones, and with it a note, the following extract from which explains the whole afiair:

"Some years ago a brother clergyman was requested to obtain an original letter of the dear and honored Whitfield for me, which he thought he could easily do. He failed, however, in the attempt; but to my great surprise and mortification, he sent me what he called a precious relic of the holy man of God, one of his bones! and precious it is, but it was of too sacred a nature to expose to the public eye, and I have preserved it, hoping to restore [illegible] my own hands. This I must now intrust to you, and I shall be happy to learn from you that it has been done."

The trust thus committed to him was discharged by Mr. Stearns in the presence of the sexton of the church and the parish committee.

Hon. and Rev. B. W. Noel Threatened.—The English Churchman is in deep trouble for the honor of the Establishment, and calls earnestly upon the Lord Bishop of London, to inflict condign punishment upon Mr. Noel. It says:—

"Now, we believe that nothing which the authorities of the Church have said or done prevents 'the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, Chaplain to Her Majesty,' from officiating in any church to which the incumbent may choose to invite him. Yet he has denounced the Church as unscriptural—preached in Scottish and 'Baptist' meeting-houses—openly denied the lawfulness and efficacy of infant baptism—and has sought and received a repetition of the forms of Holy Baptism at the hands of a schismatical teacher! If this be not a case which calls for canonical punishment, we know of none which can occur. The Lord Bishop of this diocese cannot stand still and see the doctrine and discipline of the Church trampled under foot in this way, without practically confessing that he considers consecration vows as a mere matter of form. Surely this is a matter which the clergy of the diocese should promptly take up, if it be thought that His Lordship's hands require strengthening in any way."

Bigotry.—The English Churchman has the following exhibition of prelatical exclusiveness, arising from the Queen's habit of attending the parish worship at Balmoral:

"Her Majesty is still in Scotland; and, we are pained to observe, attends the Presbyterian worship, as on former occasions, although there are bishops and priests there; moreover, Her Majesty's Chaplain is, we trust, at his post. To say the least, such an example must greatly increase the difficulties of the clergy in impressing upon their flocks the sin and danger of worshiping publicly apart from the church."

It is possible that her Majesty has learned that neither in the church, nor yet in the mountains of Scotland, can the Father alone be worshiped, but that the true worshipers worship him in spirit and in truth.

Minutes and Reports.—The minutes of the General Conference, and the Annual Reports of the Missionary and Tract Societies, are now ready for distribution. A parcel will be put up for each church in the denomination; and it is hoped that friends visiting New York from the various sections, will call for them at the office of the Recorder.

Meeting-House Burnt.—The Meeting-House of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield was burnt to the ground on Frsday morning, Oct. 7th. The fire was first discovered between one and two o'clock, issuing from the roof near the belfry; and, notwithstanding the heavy rain then falling, so rapid was the spread of the flames, that nothing was saved, even to a single article of furniture. So intense was the heat, that the bell was literally melted, and the stoves and pipes utterly destroyed.

"This house had stood just forty-seven years, to a day. It was erected Oct. 7, 1802. Two years ago it was remodeled, painted, furnished with a bell and a respectable suit of furniture, and promised to the church and society a convenient and pleasant house of worship for many years to come, for themselves and their children after them. But, in one short hour all their anticipated advantages were overthrown. There was no insurance on the property. It is not known how the fire originated."

Long Pulpit Service.—Rev. William Turner, of Gateshead, preached his first sermon in 1782, while Napoleon was yet in his teens and the Independence of the United States was yet unacknowledged. The Gateshead observer says:—

"Napoleon has begun and ended his career—the American Republic has long ago celebrated its jubilee—the mail coach has been superseded by the railway train—penny postage and the electric telegraph have come into operation—and on Sunday, the 19th day of August, 1849, after a lapse of sixty-seven years, he ascended the pulpit, which he had occupied upwards of sixty years, and opening the sacred volume, read without spectacles the 22d chapter of Luke's Gospel, in a firm and audible voice. He then took for his text the 41st and 42d verses, and preached to a congregation, not one of whom [illegible] his first discourse from that pulpit. At the close he gave out the hymn of his friend and tutor, Dr. Enfield, concluding with the aspiration—

> 'Be Christ our pattern and our guide,
> His image may we bear;
> Oh, may we tread his holy steps,
> His joy and glory share!'"

American Tract Society.—The Indiana Christian Herald has been furnished with a tabular view of the donations to this Society for two years, which shows, at a glance, where the Society finds its support, and what churches it chiefly represents in its liberality. The aggregate of donations is less for 1849 than for 1848, by $11,833; but the falling off of donations from the living is only $5,595; the principal difference being in the legacies. The New England States gave 30 per cent. of the donations last year; the three Middle States, 40 per cent.; nine Southern States gave 15 per cent.; and five Western States, 11 per cent. Four of the Western States, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Mississippi, increased their donations from $7,853 to $10,271. The falling off in [illegible]

The Oldest Baptist Church.—A Committee of the Warren Association, consisting of Judge Hale, and Rev. Messrs. Tustin and Jamieson, has recently decided that the First Baptist Church in Newport, R. I., was constituted on the 7th of March, 1638, and is therefore the oldest Baptist Church in America.

RIOT IN PHILADELPHIA.

Philadelphia has been disgraced by another atrocious riot—commenced by vagrant boys, and carried on by heartless assassins, against the colored people and firemen. We give the following particulars from the Sun of Wednesday:—

An Awful Riot—Houses Burned—Firemen Killed, and many other Persons Wounded.—On Tuesday night a fearful and bloody riot took place in the vicinity of Sixth and St. Mary street, by which several firemen were killed, and a number of persons, both white and black, were wounded. At about nine o'clock, a crowd of boys, numbering about 20, having with them a furniture car containing a burning tar barrel, ran up Seventh street, and turned down St. Mary street. When about half-way between Sixth and Seventh street, a number of pistols were fired, but by whom we could not ascertain. The crowd of boys charged it on the colored people.

The crowd, certainly not more than fifty all told, made a fierce attack on the California House, a resort for colored people. The inmates resisted the attack for a long time, using guns and muskets with considerable effect on the aggressors. Finally, however, the crowd being augmented, they broke into the house, and set the lower story on fire.

The blacks flew for refuge, and falling into the hands of the rioters were beaten with clubs and stones, and cut with knives.

The flames continued to roll upward, and an alarm of fire was sounded. The firemen repaired to the scene of destruction, and when about to put their different apparatus into service, another body of rioters fired a volley of balls up the street, and one or two firemen were killed on the spot, and several others wounded. The bloody and terrific outrage was resisted by the firemen, who rallied and drove the murderous villains back. But, finally, the firemen generally were driven off, not being able to contend against such fearful odds, and the property was left to the mercy of the devouring element. The California House was soon reduced to ashes, and it is feared that several colored persons perished in the flames.

Several other houses were burnt. Two or three members of fire companies were shot dead, or mortally wounded; and eight or ten others, several of them blacks, were badly wounded. It is stated that neither the Mayor nor the Sheriff were on the ground at day-break on Wednesday morning, when the rioters were still engaged in their nefarious work.

FROM THE GOLD REGION.

The steamer Empire City arrived at this port on the 8th inst., bringing California papers to Sept. 1st, and above $1,000,000 in gold.

The U. S. steamer Edith, Lieut. Commanding McCormick, from San Francisco for Santa Barbara, went ashore on Point Conception, on the 26th of August, and was totally lost. It was thought the machinery might be saved if the weather continued favorable.

The Alta California gives a list of about 150 vessels which had arrived at San Francisco since the 1st of April, from different countries. Several U. S. vessels were also in port.

San Francisco seems to be growing with astonishing rapidity. The Pacific News says:—

An absence of a week, and one scarcely knows where he is on his return. Fine store-houses are taking the place of tents and hovels, and beautiful goods are arriving daily from China and elsewhere, which dazzle the eye of him who expected to see nothing in California but pick-axes, India rubber boots and tents, or pistols, bowie-knives, and dirks. Society, too, is as good at San Francisco as in any city of the east, excepting, of course, a scarcity of that best gift to man, woman. We notice, however, with pleasure, a daily increase in number of the fair sex—ladies who have braved the dangers and trials of a sea or land passage in company with their husbands in search of the riches of California.

A Convention for framing a State Constitution met at Monterey, Aug. 30th, but a quorum of delegates had not arrived. A decided anti-slavery spirit was manifest.

The Alta California of Aug. 16, says:—Although we are in the midst of Summer, a fire in the parlor stove every morning and evening, has been found agreeable to most citizens, especially to the unacclimated.

The general health of the 5,000 inhabitants of San Francisco, is good. Recently some deaths have occurred from diarrhea and dysentery, and many are now suffering from one or the other of these diseases; but the sickness is abating. Some solicitude is felt in regard to cholera and ship fever; but the general opinion is, that neither of these diseases can spread in such a climate as this.

The Pacific News says that the Kanakas of Happy Valley have suffered severely from the dysentery, and when we visited them, from their wan and faded features we felt that they longed for the sunshine of their native isles beyond the sea. The Lascars and Chinese endure this climate better, and the latter people do not seem particularly affected by the severity of the cold night fogs.

The Pacific News of September 1, says: Jacob B. Moore, our new Postmaster, arrived in the Panama, and has entered upon the duties of his office. Nearly 20,000 letters were received by the late mail. The present arrangements are insufficient for the rapidly-increasing business, and we are glad to learn that Mr. Moore is preparing to make such improvements as will insure a ready and prompt delivery.

An invoice of thirty dozen of shirts was received at San Francisco from the Sandwich Islands, having been sent to Honolulu, where labor is cheap, to be washed—the price varying from $5 to $9 per dozen.

There was much sickness at the mines at last accounts. The "sickly season" comprises the months of July, August, and September.

The Alta California says: A letter from the town of Stockton, dated August 1, contains the following information. It appears, by such other accounts as we have been enabled to gather, that Stockton has become the scene of excitement, the counterpart of which was witnessed in this place a week or two ago. We forbear commenting upon the particulars as presented.

"This afternoon a man was hung in Stockton. His name was Mickey, alias Bill Lyon, and he belonged to the fraternity of "Hounds," who have long prowled about and disturbed the peace. His offense was burglary and theft, and his trial was by jury, his sentence death by hanging. He was executed with the unanimous approval of the people of Stockton.

"A number of men implicated in offenses committed by the same gang, have been arrested, and their trial will soon take place. The prompt action of our citizens in these matters has restored law and order to their place, and we feel more secure now than we have for six months past."

Later advices confirm the above account, and add that one or more others convicted, were punished with a rigid observance of the barbarous forms of Judge Lynch; such as shaving the head, lopping the ears, and other disgraceful mutilations of the person.

On the 13th inst., the United States mail steamship Ohio arrived at New York, bringing about 150 passengers and $190,000 in gold. She brings nothing later from the gold region, her news having been anticipated by the Empire City.

Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, was to leave Europe by the steamer Niagara for New York. He will probably be accompanied by several other American members of the recent Peace Congress at Paris.

Brown, the escaped slave from the United States, and a member of the Peace Congress, was entertained with his colleagues at a grand dinner party given in Paris by M. de Tocqueville.

President Bonaparte has written a letter to the Emperor of Russia, congratulating him on his success in crushing the Hungarians! Wretched business for a Republican President.

At the Williamstown College they have adopted the plan of taking Daguerreotype likenesses of each graduating class. The frames remain the property of the College, and are to be reserved from year to year.

The sheriff of Philadelphia receives more pay than the President of the United States, his pay amounting to $30,000 a year! The sheriff of New York receives in fees $45,000 a year!

General Intelligence.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

By the Caledonia, which arrived at Boston on the sixth day of last week, we have some important items of intelligence.

According to the latest dates from Vienna, the fortress of Comorn had not yet surrendered to the Austrian troops, but it was confidently expected that it would very soon. If the negotiations for a capitulation should fail, a direct attack was to commence immediately; and according to the opinion of field-marshall Nugent, it would take from 40 to 48 days to take it. The garrison is said to be 96,000 strong.

Nothing definite has been arranged with regard to Hungary.

An aid-de-camp of the Emperor Nicholas arrived at Constantinople on the 7th Sept., on a special mission to the Porte. The emperor is very much displeased with the policy pursued pursued by the Turkish government in regard to the Hungarian and Polish refugees. An express dispatch to the London Times, dated Sept. 12, says:—The Emperor of Russia employs no argument in Court for his demand for delivery of the Polish refugees at Widden, but says in his letters that he will consider the escape of one of them as a casus belli. If the Sultan did not give a simple yes or no, to the Aid-de-Camp, he threatened to return to Warsaw. The Sultan persists in his resolution, and is backed by the Foreign Minister, the Grand Vizier, the Sieraskier, and Mahomet Ali Pasha, and Mahomet Pacha Ali, but the great majority of the Council is alarmed at the threatening tone of the Czar's note, and no official announcement of the Council's decision had consequently been made. There is reason to believe that the Turkish government, urged on by the English and French Envoys, will reject the demand. It is supposed that the Emperor will put his threats of war into execution should the answer be negative, although nearly the whole of the Turkish fleet is in the Golden Horn, quite ready for service, and could defend the entrance of the Bosphorus, yet the Turkish army bears no proportion to the forces the Emperor would march against the Turkish fronteirs in a few days. Sixty thousand Turkish troops are concentrated around Constantinople, but the English fleet could not reach the Golden Horn sooner than fifteen or seventeen days. A Russian fleet could be in the Bosphorus within 24 hours.

The Roman question was still unsettled, and but little hope was entertained of its speedy adjustment. As late as the 17th inst. nothing had been done. Gen. Rostolan, in his perplexity, says that he would far prefer the direction of a beleaguered city, to the diplomatic skirmishes which he is constantly obliged to keep up with the priests. It is said the Government of the United States disapproves of the conduct of its Ministers at Rome and Naples, in summoning the American frigate, Constitution, to Gaeta, to do honor to the Pope, and that they have been recalled, the Captain of the frigate being reprimanded.

The Pope's Manifesto, setting forth the "basis of institutions calculated to secure to you, our well beloved subjects, suitable liberties, and at the same time to secure our independence," together with his amnesty, did not give satisfaction, either in France or at Rome. Throughout the whole the name of France nowhere occurs, though she has played so prominent a part in restoring the Sovereign Pontiff to his Temporal Government. This studied omission has grievously wounded the pride of that country, and is certainly not calculated to heal the differences so long existing between the two nations. We learn that at Rome the concessions were considered by the people of Rome to be so niggardly that the greatest discontent was manifested as soon as they became generally known. The proclamations were torn down from the walls, and the populace vented forth their denunciations in the strongest terms of ridicule and disgust. As for the amnesty, no language could convey the deep feeling of animosity and regret with which it was contemplated.

Venice was calm, but wore an appearance of sadness, bordering on despair. Since the capitulation, the Governor had granted more than 50,000 passports, and entire families were quitting a country where business was prostrated by the measures which Austria had decreed against the paper money of the republic, and against the commercial privileges of the port.

The vintage had commenced in the south of France. It was calculated that the produce would be inferior to that of ordinary years.

Affairs in Ireland have not materially changed since the last advices. A paragraph in the Limerick Chronicle states that the English Government had granted a release to John Mitchell, with free leave to go wherever he pleases, with the exception that he shall not return to any part or colony of the United Kingdom. The Irishman, however, says there is no truth in this statement. John Mitchell is now on his way to the Cape of Good Hope, and it was understood that, on arriving there, a "ticket of leave" would be granted to him, the effect of which would be, to leave him at perfect liberty to follow any pursuit he pleased, but not to depart from the Colony. However, from the deep hostility evinced by the Cape Colonists to receive the convicts, it is not probable that John Mitchell will take up his abode there. In the dilemma in which they are involved, the "Government" may grant John Mitchel a free pardon, on condition of his not returning to the United Kingdom.

It was in contemplation to erect for her Majesty a marine residence on the Irish Coast, about seven miles from the metropolis.

The mortality from Cholera in England was still on the decline.

Advices from the military frontiers of Turkey state that the insurrection in Bosnia had broken out afresh. The arrival of a large reinforcement had encouraged the rebels to make another movement, which the Turkish Government would hardly be able to suppress without the assistance of Austria. This aid will not be withheld; the Austrians are making every preparation to advance to the scene of action.

The insurrection in the Ionian Islands is regarded as completely quelled, in consequence of the energetic measures employed. A small band of about forty insurgents have fled to the mountains, where, however, they must soon surrender to the soldiery surrounding them. Several executions by martial law have already taken place, to be soon followed by others.

It is said that Rothschild has contracted for a Piedmontese loan, and undertakes to pay Austria its War Contributions.

Letters from Geneva state that the foreign refugees there have been sent into the interior of Switzerland, with the exception of about 30, who are occupied in various trades.

Advices from Munich state that the Minister of Foreign Affairs, by order of the King, has charged all Bavarian Envoys abroad to inform the Government at whose Court they represent Bavaria, that that power has broken off every negotiation with Prussia, and will continue to do so until Austria gives a decided reply respecting the Federal question.

The Equinoctial Storm.—Several vessels wore more or less injured by the late gale in Boston harbor. About 400 sail found shelter in the port of Gloucester, Cape Ann, and rode out the storm in safety. The British ship St. John, from Galway, with 164 passengers, anchored inside of Minot's Ledge, Sabbath night, and early in the morning dragged her anchors, and went ashore on Cohasset rocks, and was totally lost, with upwards of 100 passengers. The surf was so high that no life boat could reach the ship. The jolly boat of the ship was stove in pieces. Captain Oliver and the crew, with a few of the passengers, came ashore in the long-boat. The captain is much blamed by some.

"The scene was witnessed from the Glade House, and is represented to have been terrible. The sea ran mountain high, and as soon as she touched, the waves swept the unfortunate beings upon her crowded decks, by dozens, into the sea. The spectators of this awful sight imagined that they could hear the cries of the victims as they were swept away: but as no boat, save the life-boat, could have lived in such a gale, it was found impossible to render aid."

More About the Wreck of the St. John.—The Boston Chronotype says:—

At 2 o'clock yesterday 25 bodies were interred. The services were conducted by Rev. Messrs. Reed and Osgood. The bodies were enclosed in separate coffins, which were placed on six carts and conveyed to Cohasset burying ground by oxen. The reporter of the Mail, who was on the ground at Cohasset yesterday, gives a number of interesting and important particulars, among which are the following:—

"Mr. Lathrop, at whose house the survivors were taken, relates an incident that is at once touching and affecting. The waves were dashing high before him, and on their crested tops, as they were breaking upon him, he saw what he thought was a small package of goods. While watching to save even this small relic from the doomed vessel, it fell upon him, striking him in the face. He reached forth his arms and grasped it, when, lo, he held an infant, yet alive. He placed it in safety, and that infant is now doing well in the family of Mr. Grove of this town.

"It is stated by three of the passengers, that on the afternoon of Saturday, after they had made Providence town light, the Captain mustered his passengers on deck, and joyfully assured them that the last night of their confinement on board had arrived. A sad truth, and most fearfully realized. His passage had been a good one, and he felt elated. The simple and light-hearted passengers, in the exuberance of their feelings, prepared for an illumination; the deck and rigging were decorated with candles, and song and dance wore away the evening of their last night on board the St. John. The Captain dealt out to his crew a treat of ardent spirits, and all on board participated in the joys and hopes incident to the termination of an Atlantic passage."

Gale on Lake Superior—Arrival of Sir John Richardson.—A correspondent of the Cleveland Plaindealer writes from the Saut St. Marie, on the 28th ult., that the propeller Napoleon (in which he was a passenger) had arrived from Isle Royale with the passengers who it was feared had been lost in her during the late tempest. She escaped the worst of the gale in Eagle Harbor, came down thence in 26 hours, picking up at White Fish Point a Cleveland party coasting up the Lake in boats, when they were driven ashore by the gale thirty miles above the Point, lost all but their lives, and were thirty-six hours without food until the Napoleon took them off. The storm was tremendous; the water rose at White Fish Point eight or ten feet higher than had before been known, and the volume of water passing the Saut was so great as almost to obscure the fall. The gale was severe on Lake Huron also, but no wrecks have yet been reported, though the schooner Swallow was blown high and dry ashore at the Saut. The writer says:—

Among others on board, we name Sir John Richardson, on his return from the Arctic region. He has found no traces of Franklin's expedition. Sir John left England in April, 1848, and from the Saut St. Marie has made the voyage in canoes and boats and overland, a distance of three thousand and five hundred miles and back, by way of Lake of the Woods, Mackenzie's River, &c. After reaching the Arctic Ocean, they traveled five hundred miles along the coast. He speaks confidently of the existence of a northern passage; its practicability, he says, is another question, the Summer being only from thirty to sixty days long. He goes by way of Toronto and Montreal to Boston.

We have also on board the U. S. Geological Corps, Foster, Whitney, De Sore, &c. They are bound down.

The Louisville Courier of the 5th has the following: "A negro man was shot about 8 or 9 o'clock on Wednesday night, on Pearl-st. by Mr. Wm. H. Forwood. Mr. Forwood saw the man steal a saddle, from a horse opposite his house, and on attempting to arrest him he resisted, and while endeavoring to escape, Mr. F. shot and wounded him. On the matter being represented to Judge Joyes, of the Police Court, he refused to take cognizance of the case.

Dreadful Tornado at Cape May.—The most destructive whirlwind that has occurred in New Jersey since the memorable tornado at New Brunswick, many years ago, appears to have swept over the upper part of Cape May County about 5 o'clock on Thursday morning. A letter from Dennisville, some seven miles from Delaware Bay, to the State Gazette, says it first struck a new two-story house belonging to Willis Godfrey, which was torn from its foundations and dashed to pieces, Mrs. G. and two children miraculously escaping.

A few rods farther, it came in contact with a new story and a half house, in which were the wife of Jones Corson, lately married, and her sister, both in one bed. Everything is swept clean where this house stood; it was entirely demolished. Mrs. Corson was found dead in the limbs of an old oak tree that was blown down some forty yards from the site of the house. But little hopes are entertained of the recovery of her sister, who was terribly mutilated.

From this point it passed onward, carrying fences, trees, &c., before it for a breadth of forty yards, a quarter of a mile farther, where it encountered a large two-story house, in which were the widow of Daniel Young, her daughter, and three others. The house met no better fate than those above-mentioned, yet, strange to say, the inmates received but slight injury.

At the end of another quarter of a mile, it struck a large barn, and what it did not take off entirely it scattered in every direction. From this point it upset some small buildings and threw others off the blocks, until it reached Great Egg Harbor Bay, near Beesley's Point, no doubt making a magnificent water spout in its passage over the water. A part of a roof was found on the point of Peck's Beach, four miles from the scene of disaster, and a hat six miles off. A scythe, without a snath, was carried three-fourths of a mile.

Interesting News from Florida.—We understand that the following gratifying intelligence has been received at the War Department from General Twiggs:—An interview had taken place between an officer of our Government and some of the leading men of the Florida Seminoles, which resulted most satisfactorily. It has been ascertained that the outrages committed on Indian River and Pease Creek were committed by a party of five young Indians, one of whom was a refugee, who thought he might escape from justice by embroiling his people in a war with the United States. The Seminoles disclaimed all connection with the perpetrators of the outrages, and stated that immediately after the offense was committed on Indian River, an effort was made to capture the offenders, but they were not taken until after the second outrage. The offenders are now in custody, however, and will in due time be delivered to the proper authorities. A meeting between the Head Chief of the Seminoles and Gen. Twiggs was appointed to take place at Charlotte Harbor on the 18th ult., and we may presume, therefore, that the interview has already occurred. That the Florida Indians are peaceably disposed is now considered beyond a doubt.

Horrible Depravity.—In the month of October, 1848, the vault of the Van Rensselaer family was entered at midnight by some sacrilegious wretches, the coffins were broken open, and the silver plates forcibly wrenched from them. They then proceeded to rob the bodies of every article of value, says the Knickerbocker, cruelly mutilating them to obtain the rings, &c. After having completed their horrible work, they left the vault, and notwithstanding the most unremitting search, no clue could be obtained by the police to them. A short time since one of their number, probably apprehending danger, or conscience-smitten, turned State's evidence, and exposed the names of his associates in crime, but they got wind of it and made their escape from the city.

Sale of Railroad.—Last week, on Monday, says the Philadelphia Ledger, a sequestrator, by a special act of Legislature, sold at the exchange, in this city, the Williamsport and Elmira Railroad, in Lycoming county, in this State, valued at $700,000, to Archibald Robinson, for $1,000. The sale was ordered on the complaint of creditors representing more than three fourths of liens, declaring that the annual receipts are insufficient to defray expenses, keep the road in repair, and pay interest on the debts due by the company.

Should the purchaser fail to complete the road, so as to connect with the New York and Erie Railroad within five years, the stockholders resume the franchises of the Corporation, by paying back the amount expended by the purchaser. It is, further, one of the conditions of the act under which the road is sold, that none of its materials shall be removed, nor the line of the road used for any other purpose than a railroad. Twenty-five miles of the road, from Williamsport to Ralston, are finished, and locomotives are running on it daily.

Later from Port-au-Prince.—By an arrival at Philadelphia from Port-au-Prince, with dates to Sept. 20, we learn that Soulouque had sent to France for a throne for himself and Empress, which was to exceed in cost and grandeur those of the most aristocratic Courts of Europe. Two orders of Knighthood had been established for the honor of the newly created nobility—that is, the Imperial Title of St. Faustian and the Legion of Honor.

Business affairs continue extremely dull, occasioned principally by the enforcement of the monopoly laws. There was no Coffee to be had, and Logwood was very scarce at $40 Haytien currency, per M. The ports were to be closed in 30 days against all imports and exports in foreign vessels.

New Counterfeit.—A new counterfeit on the State Bank of Ohio, has lately made its appearance. The plate is the same as the counterfeit on the Reading Bank of Ohio, with the exception of the substitution of the word "State," for "Reading." It is badly executed. The back of the note is red, with the words "State Bank of Ohio."

On Friday last, a lunatic named Willy Williams attempted to shoot Dr. Kirkbride, the chief physician of the Pennsylvania Insane Hospital. The lunatic was confined, and the Dr., who received but a single swan shot in his head, is doing very well.

SUMMARY.

The Saybrook Mirror gives an account of a bold attempt at robbery, which occurred at East Haddam on Tuesday night, Oct. 9, under the following circumstances: As Mr. —— Williams was going to a store, and when but a few rods from his residence, he was fired upon from the side of the road, and in an instant seized by two ruffians, who demanded his money. Upon being informed that he had none, and recognizing his voice, they told him they were mistaken in the person, and in an instant turned and fled. The ball passed through Mr. W.'s hat—certainly a narrow escape. The desperadoes were disguised, but Mr. Williams was familiar with the voice of one of them.

A diseased gland, weighing one and three fourth pounds, was removed a few days since from a man of about thirty years of age, by Dr. E. H. Willard, of Friendship. The operation, though ordinarily an extremely painful one, was performed without any knowledge on the part of the patient, who was kept insensible during the whole time by the inhalation of chloroform. No ill effects followed; but, on the contrary, the patient appeared as well, or even better, than previous to the operation, having no recollection of anything that had transpired, not even knowing that the operation had commenced.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun states that the Rev. James Nichols, of Caroline county, Md., who has for a long time been laboring under an aberration of mind, on Thursday of last week, shot dead Miss Juliet Nichols. She and several of the family were up stairs, at the usual time of Mr. N. holding family prayer, when he summoned them to his room. Upon the unfortunate lady opening the door, Mr. Nichols leveled a gun at her and shot her dead. He then, in his murderous insanity, dragged her out of the house some distance to a hog-pen, and attempted to throw her in. Failing to do this, he fled, and has not since been heard of.

One of the most important inventions now on exhibition at the fair of the American Institute is a newly-constructed plan for weighing every conceiveable form of thing, animate or inanimate; and to a degree of sensitiveness that vibrates almost at the approach of a hair, which, when falling upon it, creates a palpable demonstration. Beside the wonderful sensitiveness of the machinery, the weight is given to the smallest fraction in a moment, ready to be recorded. Another advantage of this scale over all others heretofore in use, is that live stock, when passing over it, whatever their weight, it will be shown by a glance at the index, which gives the degree, and is arranged after the manner of the minute-hand of a clock.

On Saturday night, at about ten oclock, Mr. Robert Evans Slater, residing in Parrish above Eighth street, Philadelphia, was writing or reading by a lamp of burning fluid. The light becoming dim, he got the can containing the fluid and proceeded to fill the lamp whilst it was burning. The fluid suddenly ignited, and the can instantly exploded. He was instantaneously enveloped in flames. He got into a bath-tub to ease his pain, and soon became chilled. He suffered the most excruciating agony until Sunday afternoon, when death put a period to his sufferings.

Last night, about 9 o'clock, several Chinamen, appeared at the Sixth Ward Station House, leading, or rather carrying, a countryman named John Lee, who had been suddenly blinded by a quantity of pulverized glass and cayenne pepper thrown in his face by another Chinaman, who escaped as fast as his legs could carry him. The sufferer appeared to be in great agony, and it is presumed he will lose the sight of one if not both of his eyes. He was taken to the Hospital, and the officers are on the lookout for the celestial scoundrel, who can hardly escape the punishment he deserves.

A young man named Emmons, of Farmersville, Seneca county, while riding in a buggy, with two young ladies, his sister and cousin, jumped out to hold the horse by the bit to prevent his running away in a fright. He was unable to hold him, and his cousin in springing out caught by her dress upon the step, was dragged some distance and her neck broken. His sister was thrown out and very seriously injured, and is not expected to recover.

The conductor on the Nashua and Lowell road recently seized three dogs belonging to sportsmen in the cars, the latter declining to pay for their transportation. A suit is to grow out of the matter, and one of the parties aggrieved, threatens, says the Lowell Courier, to employ Daniel Webster. Meanwhile, the dogs are boarded out at Lowell, to await the result.

Mr. Nathan O. Banks, Jr., a member of the Society of Friends, of Patterson, Putnam Co., while attempting to pass on board the Isaac Newton, at Albany, on Thursday evening, walked off the plank and was drowned, before assistance could be rendered.

The Belfast Journal learns that the great rush to procure lumber for California shipment has drained the market at Bangor, and the river is too low to get more down at present, which must raise the price of that great article of Maine trade.

The Circleville (O.) Watchman says it witnessed the operations a few days ago of an apple paring machine, invented by a Mr. Barnhill of that place, that pares with ease thirty apples in a minute, and far better than any machine hitherto in use.

We learn by the Owego Advertiser, that the total loss by the late fire in that village is $325,000 of which $110,525 was insured.

The Governor of New Brunswick has appointed the 11th day of October, as a day of Thanksgiving, for the bountiful crops. The only article that has not yielded abundantly is hay.

Thursday, the 29th of November, has been appointed to be observed as the annual Thanksgiving in Massachusetts.

The schooner Milan, of Oswego, foundered on Wednesday last on Lake Ontario. The crew barely escaped with their lives. The damage to the cargo was $3,000 or $4,000—covered by insurance.

Mary Purcel, aged 58 years, was burned to death by her clothes taking fire, in Ann st., Boston, on Thursday night last.

A correspondent of the Courier states that in August last, the second Controller of the Treasury examined the accounts of Hon. Isaac Hill, late pension agent at Concord, N. H., which examination proved that gentleman a defaulter to the Government in the sum of $13,000. The third Auditor was thereupon instructed to demand of Mr. Hill immediate payment of the amount, and, in case of refusal, to furnish a transcript of his accounts for prosecution.

Mr. Griffin, a clerk in the post-office at Rochester, has been arrested on a charge of committing the series of robberies which we mentioned last week; but after a thorough examination he was discharged; his character being good, and no direct evidence being found to show that he had committed the crime, or that he had indulged in any habits of expense inconsistent with his condition.

The Board of Commissioners to adjust Mexican claims, which assembles at Washington next month, have already twelve millions of claims filed before them, and more to come. They have adjudicated about one quarter of a million. The treaty provides for the payment of a sum not exceeding $3,250,000. The Government, however, must in the end pay the amount of the demand.

A third line of telegraph wires between Boston and New York has just been completed. People can now have their choice of modes, and send their messagas either by Morse's patent, or House's, or Bain's, as they like best. If competition is any security to the public, this work is likely to be well done, and at reasonable charges.

On Saturday, at 3 o'clock, a fashionably dressed lady, walking down Broadway, near Chambers-st., met with a most distressing accident. As she went along, she trod on a portion of a peach, by which she was tripped up, meeting with a very serious fall. A coach was called, and she was driven home to undergo the examination of her family surgeon. It could not be ascertained whether any bone was broken or not, but the lady was in great pain.

The New Haven Palladium announces the death of Henry Trowbridge, Esq., one of the most elderly and substantial citizens of that place, for a long period the head of one of the largest shipping houses in the State. It is understood that he has left several handsome bequests to the different benevolent and religious societies of the day.

The Boston Traveler of Wednesday says, twenty-seven of the bodies of those lost in the brig St. John, were buried at Cohasset yesterday, after appropriate funeral ceremonies. A large concourse of people followed them to the grave. Up to last evening no more bodies had been recovered.

A letter dated at Palermo, Sept. 5, states that the U. S. frigate Constitution was in that port, and that Capt. John Gwinn, her commander, died on the 4th. He was to be buried on the 6th, with military honors.

Dr. Wyat, chief of the gang of counterfeiters and bogus coiners, has been arrested at Spencer, Ohio, and the officers obtained abundant evidence of his guilt, by pretending to desire to go into business. Over $60,000 in counterfeit money and spurious coin were obtained from his dwelling, and in the woods adjoining were found plates, dies and implements for striking bills and making counterfeit coin. Dr. Wyat has kept an extensive establishment for years.

A collision has occurred at Camp Wells, Nova Scotia, between the Revenue Officers, and parties engaged as smugglers. The smugglers were armed, and several shots were fired. Finally the smugglers escaped to the American shore, with several of their number wounded.

The Wilmington Blue Hen's Chicken of the 12th inst. says: Constable Moody and others were watching at the Bridge on Monday and Tuesday night last, for fourteen slaves who had run away. Eleven of them belonged to Wm. Moffatt, and two to George Casey, both of Kent Co., Md. The slaves made good their escape.

A gentleman in New Orleans lately received a $1000 bill for a check for $100 from a porter of a bank during the absence of the Teller, and refused to give it up. He was accordingly arrested, but insists upon his right to keep the bill, as the principle of banks is "no mistakes rectified after leaving the counter." The matter is to be investigated.

Mr. Remmer, a Hamburg banker, recently deceased, has left by will 100,000 francs to whoever will discover a remedy for the cholera. The Academy of Medicine at Paris to be the umpire.

The Boston Catholic Observer says, the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Boston forwarded last week to the Most Rev. Archbishop of Baltimore three thousand four hundred and twelve dollars, the amount collected in this Diocese for the relief of our Holy Father, Pius IX.

Miscellaneous.

THE LONELY OLD WIFE.

Beside the old hearth she hath cherished for life,
Silent and sad sits the lonely auld wife;
Time hath left many a trace on her brow,
But grief hath not toubled her spirit till now.

There are tears in her eyes, that are dim with age,
And she looked in vain on the sacred page;
But she canna see aught but an old arm-chair,
That vacant and lonely is standing there.

Long ago, when her bosom was swelling wi' pride,
The lonely auld wife was a gay young bride;
And the rose on her cheek wore its richest bloom,
When she gave her hand to the joyous groom.

Faded and worn is her beauty now,
Gray are the hairs on her wrinkled brow;
Silent she sits by the auld hearth-stone,
Sad are her thoughts—she is there alone.

Her guardian is gone to his dreamless rest,
And the lonely auld wife has a troubled breast.
Yet not for the world would she banish away,
The chair he hath sat in for many a day.

She speaketh not save with her trembling breath,
But hopeth and waiteth and prayeth for death;
For joyless and dark are the days o' her life,
When the gudeman is gone frae the lonely auld wife.

INTERESTING DISCOVERY OF A LOST CHILD.

Three years ago John Burt, of this city, lost his son, James B., aged four years. He was an intelligent and attractive little fellow, and was last seen in the vicinity of a circus in the city. The only information he could obtain of the child was, that while he in company with one of his companions, was looking through the enclosure, a woman addressed him and invited him to accompany her into the circus. Since that time Mr. Burt has used every conceivable means to recover his lost son. He had always believed him to have been carried off by some one connected with the circus, and expected to find him, sooner or later, in some circus company. With this opinion predominant, he has made several journeys to different parts of the country, but always without success.

Hope deferred had well nigh made the heart sick, when his attention was called to a paragraph in a Syracuse paper relative to a little boy who was found by Judge House of that city, covered with mud and blood, endeavoring to shelter himself from the rain in a dry-goods box. The boy, the paragraph stated, gave his name as James Burt, and appeared to be 6 or 7 years of age. This corresponded with the name and age of Mr. B.'s lost child; but he had been so often deceived that he telegraphed to the Justice, making certain inquiries The reply was not satisfactory, as the boy had insisted that he had come from England three years previously. But a fuller description, in answer to a letter—particularly the statement that the boy had a dark brown mark under his left ear—so fully confirmed Mr. B.'s hopes that he went to Syracuse. He proceeded to the Orphan Asylum, where the boy had been placed, and, without having any description of the little fellow, instantly picked him out from a company of fifty, all dressed alike. Although the boy did not recognize him, parents can conceive of the satisfaction which the father felt at thus recovering his long-lost son, of whose identity not a particle of doubt remained.

The history of the abduction is substantially as follows, as gathered from the boy himself. He was spoken to by a woman, near the circus, as Mr. B. before understood. This woman took the child to a house in the city, which he does not recollect. Soon after dark, they went on board the cars, and after about an hour, as the boy thought, they got out of the cars, and took a canal boat. Immediately after they got on the boat, he recollects that the woman took off his apron first, and then his other clothes and put on him a pretty red suit. He then remembers reaching the woman's house in Oswego, where he saw a little girl, whom the woman called his twin sister; and he was told that his mother and father were dead. He was also made to believe that he had been brought to Oswego from England, and a new name was given him. He would, however, sometimes say that his name was James Burt, but he was whipped for this so often and severely, that he was generally known as Frederick G——. He never felt at home with his abductress, and once or twice ran away, and absented himself several days.

It was this predisposition to get off which ultimately resulted in his recovery. Having heard a great deal about the State Fair, and seen, at Oswego, extensive arrangements made for visiting it, he determined to go himself; and he went accordingly. While there, he picked up pennies by running of errands, watching cattle, &c., and so lived in the crowd, without attracting any particular attention. But after the Fair closed he did not get along so well, and used to wander about the canal, walking to the neighboring villages and returning to Syracuse at night, as his fancy dictated. It was while thus wandering about on the tow path, during the darkness and rain, that he fell on a stone, badly cutting his head and face, and rendering him so insensible that he laid out in the rain during the whole night. It was not until the day following that he was found and cared for. He is now with his parents—a bright, good-looking and happy little fellow, and will, we trust, remain, to compensate them for the unutterable grief which his three years' absence has caused them. We have the name of the wretch by whom the boy was enticed from his home; but Mr. B. does not, at present, wish it published. She is the wife of a respectable man of some property in Oswego, who professes to be ignorant of the manner in which the boy was obtained. He says that she accounted satisfactorily to him for the possession of the boy, but refused to give her story when Mr. Burt saw him. The case will undergo a legal examination, and it is to be hoped that the guilty parties may be visited with the extremest penalties of the law.

Water Saving Expedient.—The Land and Water Company, owning the factories at Lowell, and elsewhere, on the Merrimack, purchased a few years since, the right to the water of Lake Winnipissiogee. The Lake now constitutes a vast reservoir for the supply of the water to the Merrimack, during the months when the river is at a low ebb. To obtain the command of the water a new channel has been excavated, parallel to the old one. This enables them to command eight feet of water in depth of the whole surface of the lake. The supply thus obtained is in [illegible]. For some weeks past the Merrimack has been so low, that without this supply many of the cotton mills could have worked but a portion of their machinery. Some one has said that the aid thus obtained is worth a thousand dollars a day to the manufacturing companies. A single inch per day upon the surface of the Lake will usually be all that is required, and hence the eight feet will afford a supply for ninety-six days.

CROSSING THE ALPS IN A BALLOON.

M. Arban, a French aeronaut, ascended in his balloon from the Chateau des Fleurs (the Vauxhall of Marseilles) at 6½ in the evening of the 2d inst., and alighted at the village of Pion Forte, near Turin, the following morning, at 2½, having accomplished the distance, about 400 miles, in eight hours. The particulars of this voyage are related by M. Arban himself, in one of the Marseilles papers, as follows:—

"I ascended from the Chateau des Fleurs on Sunday evening, the 2d inst. at 6½ o'clock. At 8 I was over the wood of Esteret, where I ascertained that I was at a hight of about 2 miles. The temperature of the air was cold, but dry; my centigrade thermometer marked four degrees below zero. The wind was south-west, and sent me over Nice. For nearly two hours I was surrounded by very dense clouds; my cloak no longer sufficed to keep me warm; I suffered much from cold feet. I, nevertheless determined to proceed and to traverse the Alps, from which I knew I was not far distant. My provision of ballast was enough to raise me above the highest peaks. The cold gradually increased, the wind became steady, and the moon lighted me like the sun. I was at the foot of the Alps; the snows, cascades, rivers, all were sparkling; the ravines and rocks produced masses of darkness, which served as shadows to the gigantic picture. The wind now interrupted the regularity of my course. I was occasionally obliged to ascend, in order to pass over the peaks. I reached the summit of the Alps at 11 o'clock, and as the horizon became clear, and my course regular, I began to think of supping. I was now at an elevation of 2½ miles. It was indispensably necessary for me to pursue my journey, and reach Piedmont. Chaos only was under me, and to alight in these regions was impossible. After supper I threw my empty bottle into the snow beneath, where, possibly, some adventurous traveler will one day find it, and be led to conclude that another before him had explored the same desert regions. At 1½ in the morning I was over Mount Misso, which I knew, having explored it in my first journey to Piedmont. There the Durance and the Po take their source. I reconnoitered the position, and discovered the magnificent plains of the mountain. Before this certainty, a singular optical delusion, occasioned by the shining of the moon upon the snow, was like to make me think myself over the open sea. But as the south-west wind had not ceased to blow, I was convinced by this fact, as well as by others I had noticed, that I could not be over the sea. The stars confirmed the accuracy of my compass, and the appearance of Mont Blanc satisfied me that I must be approaching Turin. Mont Blanc to my left, on a level with the top of which I was, being far above the clouds, resembled an immense block of crystal sparkling with a thousand fires. At a quarter to three, Mount Viso, which was behind me, proved to me that I was in the neighborhood of Turin. I determined to alight, which I did without any difficulty, having ballast enough to go much further. I alighted near a large farm-yard, where I was surrounded by several watch-dogs, from whose caresses I was protected by my cloak. Their barking awakened the peasants, who were more surprised than frightened at seeing me. They admitted me to their house; informed me that it was half-past two, and that I was in the village of Pion Forte, near Stubini, 3½ miles from Turin. I passed the remainder of the night in the farm-house, and in the morning the peasants accompanied me to the Mayor, who delivered me a certificate, attesting my arrival, &c. I immediately sat down to write to the Director of the Chateau des Fleurs, to relieve the anxiety of my wife, friends, and the Marseilles public who might be interested about me. I then repaired to M. Bois le Comte, the French Ambassador, who gave me a passport. At 11 the same morning I attended the church of la Madre di Dio, where a funeral service was performen in honor of Charles Albert's death. This ceremony was followed by a review of the National Guard. In the evening I went to the Theatre d'Angennes, where Sigier played Louis XI. I could hardly believe that the evening before I was at the Chateau des Fleurs at Marseilles, 140 leagues off."

LUTHER'S TABLE-TALK.

PRECIOUSNESS OF THE WORD.

"Oh! how great and glorious a thing it is to have before one the Word of God! With that we may at all times feel joyous and secure; we need never be in want of consolation, for we see before us, in all its brightness, the pure and right way. He who loses sight of the Word of God, falls into despair; the voice of heaven no longer sustains him; he follows only the disorderly tendency of his heart, and of worldly vanity, which lead him on to his destruction."

THE FICKLE HEART.

"The heart of a human creature is like quicksilver, now here, now there; this day so, to-morrow otherwise. Therefore vanity is a poor miserable thing, as Ecclesiasticus says. A man desires and longs after things that are uncertain and of doubtful result, but contemns that which is certain, done, and accomplished. Therefore what God gives us we will not have; for which cause Christ would not govern on earth, but gave it over to the devil, saying, 'Rule thou.' God is of another nature, manner, and mind. I, he says, am God and therefore change not; I hold fast and keep sure my promises and threatenings."

CHRIST'S RULE.

"How wonderfully does Christ rule and govern his kingdom, so concealing himself that his presence is not seen, yet putting to shame emperors, kings, popes, and all such as think themselves wise, just, and powerful. But hereunto belongs a Plerophoria—that is we are sure and certain of it.

Jesus Christ is the only beginning and end of all my divine cogitations, day and night, yet I find and freely confess that I have attained but only to a small and weak beginning of the height, depth, and breadth of this immeasurable, incomprehensible, and endless wisdom, and have scarce got and brought to light a few fragments out of this most deep and precious profundity."

THE VICTORY OF FAITH.

"The school of faith is said to go about with death. Death is swallowed up in victory. If death, then sin. If death, then all diseases. If death, then all misery. If death, then all the power of the devil. If death, then all the fury of the world.

But these things do not appear, but rather the contrary; therefore there is need of faith; for an open manifestation of things follows faith in due time, when the things, now invisible, will be seen."

THE FARMER.

If I was asked who belonged to the privileged order, in our land, I should reply the farmer, for no other reason than he is rarely if ever, the victim of those fluctuations in trade and the currency—and that he is entirely relieved in the sale of his products from the evils of that credit system to which almost every other class of community is subjected.

Whether the price of the necessaries of life are high or low, it is all the same to the farmer, so far as he produces them for his own consumption. His surplus, unlike the wares of the tradesmen, or the produce of the manufacturer and the mechanic, will always command cash, and on that account it is at all times free from those assessments which the credit system never fails to impose on the capital and products of the other classes of community; in fact, it is always the farmer's own fault, and it can never be said that it was an evil incidental to his profession if he is ever linked with bankruptcy, or his subsistence diminished by bad debts.

Look at the poor unfortunate miller and the produce buyer, growing up under the hot-bed influence of trade, which gives an additional stimulus to their already too active gambling spirit. They are the farmer's victims.

Look at the clergyman, faithful and gifted as he may be in teaching those lovely lessons which make man God-like; yet he is hardly sure from one year to another of a place whereon to lay his head.

Look at the lawyer, now starving unless he can get get practice at that juryless court whose title burlesques the name of equity.

Look at your printer, standing over his case, working without an hours relaxation —his patrons thinking it encouragement enough to take his paper without paying for it, and while he has thousands honestly due him he is harrassed and perplexed for money to carry on his business. Alas for him!

The merchant and the trader encumbered and paralyzed by competition. bad debts, embarrassments and bankruptcy. A victim of the credit system and bank inflations.

The mechanic, felonously eating out his substance or disgracing his fair fame, in the shape of States Prison co-brother; often reduced to the bare necessity of making his employer rich before he can get his due; his career is too often one of labor and embarrassment. But the farmer with the staff of life in his barns, sheep on his hills, and pigs in his pen, laughs to scorn the facetious ills of life; 'tis true, he has his cares, but without them he would be much to be pitied. If everything was done to his liking without his own supervision, the devil or some demon-passion would become his master—

"Making his abundance the means of want."

The industrious, provident farmer has the earth for his chemical laboratory, which in common with its glowing vegetable surface teaches him many lessons, Flora is his handmaiden, and Ceres and Pomena shed their bounties upon him, making him nature's nobleman.

[Genesee Farmer.

A MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

The interesting incident which we subjoin, is from the Rev. Sydney Dyer's Address on a Mother's Influence.

"While engaged in distributing tracts among the shipping in the harbor of New York, I visited a ship recently from Greenock, Scotland, in the forecastle of which I met a very aged Scotch sailor, who manifested a disposition to repel every advance, declining my tracts, and replying angrily to my questions. Feeling that one so near his end stood much in need of having his attention turned to the subject of religion, I felt unwilling to leave him, without having tried every avenue to his feelings. Knowing how proverbial Scotch mothers are for their attention to the early instruction of their children, I asked if he had not once a mother who taught him to say his prayers and read the Bible? The question seemed for a few moments perfectly to stun him; he stopped short, remained perfectly motionless, except the deep heaving of his bosom, and the convulsive quiver of his lips; and then throwing up his hands, exclaimed, amid a shower of tears, 'My mother! my sainted mother!' As soon as he could sufficiently compose himself, he made me sit down upon his locker, and then with a trembling voice and deep emotion related to me, how in his infancy his mother used daily to teach him the Creed, the catechism and the Lord's Prayer, and would kneel down and pray with him, often wetting his little cheeks with her tears. But her death, when he was quite young, left him alone in the world, and since that time he had followed the sea and a life of sin. He had raised a family, but God had taken them, and he was now alone in the world. 'But (said he) the bitterest hour I ever saw, was the one in which my mother died; and though I have lived four-score years in sin, I still have faith to believe that my mother's prayers will be heard and answered in my behalf.' Whether this was ever the case, I know not as I saw him no more; but the incident most forcibly illustrates the enduring nature of a mother's influence and its certain rewards."

The Committee of arrangements for providing accomodations for the meeting of the American Board, at Pittsfield, applied to the Shakers at their settlement near that place, to know if they would entertain some of the strangers in attendance. The Shakers replied thai they would cheerfully entertain eighteen; but if men and women were sent to their houses, they must lodge as the Israelites were required to mourn at Hadad Rimmon! The Scripture reader will remember that the husbands were to mourn apart, and the wives apart!

ANECDOTE OF LATIMER.

It was related of Latimer, that when he once preached before the tyrant Henry VIII., he took a plain, straight forward text, and in his sermon assailed those sins for which the monarch was notorious, and he was stung to the quick, for truth always finds a response in the worst man's conscience. He would not bend beneath the authority of his God, and therefore sent for Latimer, and said 'Your life is in jeopardy if you do not recant all you said to-day, when you preach next Sunday." The trimming courtiers were all anxious to know the consequence of this, and the chapel was crowded. The venerable man took his text, and after a pause begun with a a soliloquy, thus:—"Now, Hugh Latimer, bethink thee, thou art in the presence of thy earthly monarch; thy life is in his hands, and if thou dost not suit thyself to his fancies, he will bring down thy gray hairs with blood to the grave; but Hugh Latimer, bethink thee thou art in the presence of the King of kings and Lord of lords, who hath told thee, 'Fear not them that kill the body, and then can do no more; but rather fear Him who can kill both body and soul, and cast thee into hell forever?' Yea, I say, Hugh Latimer, fear him." He then went on, and not only repeated what he before advanced, but, if possible enforced it with greater emphasis. What was the consequence? Henry sent for him and said, "How durst thou insult thy monarch so?" Latimer replied. "I thought If I were unfaithful to my God, it would be impossible to be loyal to my king?" The king embraced the good old bishop, exclaiming, "And is there yet one man left who is bold and honest enough to tell me the truth?"

APPLES AS FOOD.

The importance of apples, as food, has not hitherto been sufficiently estimated in this country nor understood. Besides contributing a large proportion of sugar, mucilage and other nutritive matter, in the form of food, they contain such a fine combination of vegetable acids, extractive substances, and aromatic principles, with the nutritive matter, as to act powerfully in the capacity of refrigents, tonics, and anti-sceptics; and when freely used at the season of ripeness by rural laborers and others, they "prevent debility, strengthen digestion, correct the putrefactive tendencies of nitrogenous food, avert scurvy, and probably maintain and stregthen the powers of productive labor."

The operators of Cornwall, in England, consider ripe apples nearly as nourishing as bread, and more so than potatoes. In the year 1801, a year of scarcity, apples, instead of being converted into cider, were sold to the poor; and the laborers asserted that they could stand their work on baked apples without meat; whereas, a potato diet required either meat or fish.

The French and Germans use apples extensively; indeed, it is rare that they sit down, in the rural districts, without them in some shape or other, even at the first tables. The laborers and mechanics depend on them to a very great extent, as an article of food, and frequently dine on sliced apples and bread. Stewed with rice, red cabbage, carrots, or by themselves, with a little sugar and milk, they make both a pleasant and nutricious dish.

THE WANT OF A TRUE AIM.

"I respect the man," says Goethe, "who knows distinctly what he wishes. The greater part of all the mischief in the world arises from the fact, that men do not sufficiently understand their own aims. They have undertaken to build a tower, and spend no more labor on the foundation than would be necessary to erect a hut." Is not this an exact description of most men's strivings? Every man undertakes to build his tower, and no one counts the cost. In all things the times are marked by a want of steady aim and patient industry. There is scheming and plotting in abundance, but no considerate persevering effort. The young man launches into life with no definite course in view. If he goes into trade, he has, perhaps, a general desire to be rich; but he has at the same time, an equally strong desire for present gratification and luxurious living. He is unwilling to pay the price of his ambition. He endeavors to secure the present and lets go the future. He turns seed time into harvest, eats the corn which he ought to plant. If he goes into professional life, he sets out with a general desire to be eminent, but without considering in what particular he wishes to excel, and what is the price of that excellence. So he divides his time and talents among a great variety of pursuits; endeavoring to be all things, he becomes superficial in proportion as he is universal; and having acquired a brief reputation, as worthless as it is short-lived, sinks down into hopeless insignificance.

TO PREVENT MILK FROM SOURING DURING THUNDER STORMS.

We have heard great complaints from dairy women about their milk getting sour during a thunder storm, although perfectly sweet a short time previous. The following plans suggested by a a correspondent, will prevent this in a great degree. All the pans containing the milk ought to be placed upon non-conductors of electricity, such as blocks of baked wood, pieces of glass, or wood that has been well painted and varnished. The last named articles are the most easily provided; beeswax, feathers, and woolen cloth are also non-conductors, but inconvenient to be used. All these articles will insulate the pans and prevent the electric fluid from entering, which is the cause of acidity or is, in fact, the principle of acidity itself. If glass basins were substituted for tin pans, the plan would be better still, and there would then be no necessity for the practice suggested above. The glass would preserve the milk much longer sweet than pans, and the acid would have no effect upon it. We are not aware of any acid that has the least impression on glass, except the flouric acid. All iron vessels, or vessels compounded with iron, as tin pans, attract the heat very readily, and of course sour the milk; and such is the affinity of iron for an acid that we doubt much if it is ever washed out entirely. Iron vessels we are confident, are the very worst that could be used for the purpose; they are very inferior to wood.

In England, in 1847, 201 persons were killed, and 147 injured, out of 54,854,019 railroad passengers; and in 1848, 202 were killed, and 219 injured, out of 57,855,133.

Russian Roguery.—A gentleman of St. Petersburgh, buying a cap, selected one of an unusual shape, from the hatter's counter, and, after much haggling, purchased it, although it had been made to order, and the party for whom it was intended was expected to call for it momentarily. To secure it the gentleman put it on his head and departed. In the course af his walk he found in his pocket a snuff-box which did not belong to him, and which he knew was not there a short time before; he could not account for it; presently he drew forth a strange handkerchief, and shortly afterwards he found himself enriched with a pocket-book. Suspicious of these additions to his property, he determined to stroll leisurely about to watch the result; and at length, from the quantity of things placed softly about his person, he became convinced that he was converted into an ambulatory receiver of stolen goods, of which the cap was the sign. He at once made the discovery to the police, who were not long in turning the information to account.

Piano Playing Simplified.—A recent number of the Journal des Debats speaks of an invention which, it is thought, will make a revolution in the dancing world. It attracted great attention at the recent Exhibition of Manufactures in Paris. It is a mechanical apparatus, capable of being applied to all pianos, and by means of which every kind of piece can be executed. Quadrilles, waltzes, polkas, &c., spring as if by enchantment from this combination under fingers the least practiced, and the most unacquainted with the instrument. If one wishes to give a soiree or a country party, there is no need of looking about for performers; each member of the company can furnish his contingent harmony, and pass in turn from dancing to music. This piano mechanism costs about 350 francs, and the inventor of it is M. Alexandre Debain, Rue Vivienne, No. This ingenious process has gained for him the personal congratulations of the President of the Republic, who was very much attracted by it.

Cracked Wheat, or Wheaten Grits.—This is an article of diet which has recently been introduced amongst us, the good qualities of which ought to be universally known. As an ingredient for puddings, &c., to take the place of tapioca, rice, faolena, &c., it cannot be too highly recommended. But our object at this time is to call the attention of those to it who labor under any bowel complaints, which are so universally prevalent. As an article of diet for such persons, we think it decidedly the best thing we have yet seen. Possessing all the necessary ingredients for the most wholesome nutrition, it is in the form, when properly cooked, which bests adapts it to soothe the stomach and bowels when in a diseased or irritable state. Those who have tried the article are almost universally much pleased with it.

Variety.

A brace of curiosities, carefully wrapped up and labelled as follows, has been recently sent to the National Museum:—The rope with which Jacob "lifted up his voice;" a few stitches taken by a tailor in a coat of paint; a little perfume from the flower of the army; a minute quantity of jelly made from the current of the Mississippi; a few soaked logs from the drift of a discourse; and a thimble full of steel dust supposed to have been made when Macbeth "filed his mind."

A practical farmer informs the Hartford Times, that in taking up a fence that had been set fourteen years, he noticed that some of the posts remained nearly sound, while others were rotted off at the bottom. On looking for the cause, he found that those posts that were set part limb down, or inverted from the way they grew, were sound. While those that were set as they grew, were rotted off. The fact is worthy the attention of all farmers.

Letters from Tunis to August 4th, announce the death of the excellent Sir Thomas Reade, British Consul, through whose kind influence the Bey of Tunis, in 1843, abolished the slave trade in his dominions. 'for the glory of mankind, and to distinguish them from the brute creation.' The funeral was celebrated with unprecedented pomp, all the great officers of the government walking in the procession, a thing never before known in a Mohammedan country.

"If you would ever marry," said a Roman consul to his son, "let it be a woman who has judgment enough to superintend the getting of a meal of victuals; taste enough to dress herself—pride enough to wash her face before breakfast, and sense enough to hold her tongue when she has noshing to say."

The American Agriculturist says: "A gentleman within our knowledge has a small orchard on the Hudson river, of less than seven acres, which produces from $500 to $750 worth of apples annually. This is not one year of plenty, and another or two of famine, but is a rgular, steady average yield. All this is secured by the simplest process, viz., good management."

A stammering blacksmith, attending as witness at a court, in a money dispute, between two of his men, was asked by the Judge why he did not advise them to arrange the matter. His answer was, "I to-o-ld the fo-o-ls, to se-e-tle; for I said the clerk would take their co-a-ts, the lawyer their sh-i-rts, and if they get into your honor's clutches you'd ski-i-n 'em.

A statistical writer has emigration, outfit, and labor of twenty thousand emigrants to California for one year, will cost the United States $22,200,000, which sum must be received in return for expenditure before the profits can commence.

Mr. Goodell, missionary at Constantinople, in describing the terrible fire in Pera which consumed about four hundred houses, and was checked just as it reached the mission-house and school, says:—"Some of those who rushed by us at the time of the fire were heard to say: These houses never burn!"

The commissioners on drunkenness in Great Britain estimate the value of labor lost through intemperance annually, at $200,000,000.

A true picture of despair is a pig reaching through a hole in a fence to get a cabbage that lies a few inches beyond his reach.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

DR. BOUND'S SABBATH.

Our readers may not be aware, that the celebrated Dr. Bound, who wrote the first treatise in favor of the first day of the week, commonly termed the "Christian Sabbath," which was printed in 1595, was honored as the discoverer of a new doctrine of the Sabbath. The Sabbath thus brought to light, (or rather darkness,) was called, in distinction from the Sabbath known to the world before, "Dr. Bound's Sabbath," and his followers were called "New Sabbatarians." But Dr. Bound was not ambitious of honor, and the term Christian Sabbath was adopted to give it greater popularity. We will give a few extracts from the work of Dr. Bound, which will show the views of the inventor himself; and by comparing them with the doctrines of the present day, it will be seen what improvements have been made since he wrote. In support of the fourth commandment, he says:—

"The first commandment hath one reason joined to it, the third one, the second two, the fourth THREE; and thus bindeth us up with a three-fold cord that can hardly be broken; for he setteth downe three reasons, not onely to commend unto us the excellencie, and to shew the necessitie of keeping of it, but also to give us to understand, how rebellious and corrupt our nature is here especially. As it is, indeed; for many are not perswaded, that there should be any day at all kept; others doe not agree upon the day, which it should be; some preferre other daies before it, or make them equall with it; they that are otherwise minded, yet are not established in the precise resting and straight ceasing from so many things as God requireth; much lesse doe men agree upon the publike and private manner of sanctifying and keeping it holie. Therefore the Lord doth not onely command it, but also first sheweth us the equitie of it, in that he hath given us sixe daies to be occupied in for our selves; and therefore it is good reason that we should rest upon the seventh, to attend upon his busines, as it were. Secondarily, we should doe it so much the rather, because he hath gone before us in his owne example, who therefore rested upon the seventh day, when he had created the whole world in sixe, that wee thereby might the rather be allured unto that order, which he was purposed to establish, namely, that wee should rest upon the 7. day from our owne works, as God did from his, and so be like unto our Creator. Thirdly, and most especially, that we should doe thus, because God hath bestowed an especiall blessing upon this day distinct from the rest, even the blessing of sanctification; and therefore it is not lawfull for us to use it to any other end, but to this holie and sanctified end, for which God in the beginning created it." * * *

"First of all, therefore, it appeareth in the storie of Genesis, that it was from the beginning, and that the seventh day was sanctified at the first, so soone as it was made; in so much that Adam and his posteritie, if they had continued in their first righteous estate, should have kept that day holie above the rest, seeing the Lord sanctified it for their sakes; and though it be so indeede that they should have been occupied in some honest calling and work upon the sixe daies (according as it is sayd to Adam, that the Lord put the man into the garden of Eden, that he might dresse it and keepe it) yet notwithstanding, upon the seventh day they should have ceased from all worldly labour, and given themselves to the meditation of God's glorious workes, and have been occupied in some more unmediate parts of his service, according to the former commandment. And that we might understand indeede, that the law of sanctifying the Sabbath is so ancient, the Prophet Moses in Genesis doth of purpose use the same words which the Lord God himselfe doth in pronouncing it, (as it is set downe in Exodus,) namely, that he blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, and that in it God rested from all his worke which he made; to teach us assuredly, that this commandment of the Sabbath was no more then first given when it was pronounced from heaven by the Lord, than any other the morall precepts, nay that it hath so much antiquitie as the seventh day hath being; for so soone as the day was, so soone was it sanctified, that wee might know, that as it came in with the first man, so it must not goe out but with the last man, and as it was in the beginning of the world, so it must continue to the ending of the same, and as the first seventh day was sanctified, so must the last be; and as God bestowed this blessing upon it in the most perfect estate of man, so must it be reserved with it, till he be restored to his perfection againe." * * * * *

"And that this Sabbath day, which hath that commendation of antiquitie and consent which wee have heard, ought to stande still in his proper force; and that it appertaineth to us Christians now, most evidently appeareth by that authoritie and credite which it receiveth from the Gospell and Newe Testament also, in which it is so highly commended unto us, (that I might not in this place speak of the manifold other testimonies that it hath in the Old.) And by name we may see how our Saviour Christ and all his Apostles establisheth it by their practise, for they, upon the Sabbath ordinarily enter into the Synagogues of the Jewes, and preach unto the people, doing such things upon those dayes, as appertaine to sanctifying of them, according to the commandement." * * * * *

"First of all, they ignorantly say, (as all objections doe arise from the ignorance of the trueth,) that the Sabbath is a Jewish thing, belonging only to that people, and so not appertaining unto us. Against which all that wee have alreadie spoken and heard, doth most evidently and openly, and (as it were) with a lowd voyce speake: For it hath been substantially proved, that this Commandement did no more begin with the people of the Jewes, than any other; nay, that it was 2,000 yeares and more before ever they were a people, and it hath continued now 1,500 yeares and more in the Church, since the Jewes were no people; and when all Jewish things have been abrogated, onely this hath continued still in the Church, in his owne proper force, that it might appeare, that it was of a nature farre differing from them, having neither beginning nor ending together with them.

"And this is that which a learned man master Wolphius saith, (when having before spoken of other festivall daies of the Jewes now abrogated) hee addeth: Sabbathum autem dierum ordinarium and perpetuum, &c. But the ordinary and perpetuall Sabbath of daies, that is the seventh day, (by this name hee opposing it to the Sabbath of weekes and yeares) is not to be reckoned among the figures and ceremonies of the Jewes, both because it was ordained in Paradise before the fall of man for the worship of God, and also it is commanded in the Decalogue, which containeth in it nothing ceremoniall, nothing typicall, nothing to be abrogated; for in that I hold the position of the Schooleman to be true: The precepts of the Decalogue are (indispensibilia) not to be dispensed withall. And therefore the urging of this commandement upon the Church of God at this day so straightly, is not to bring them into the intollerable bondage of the Jewes, from which they are delivered by Christ; nor to lay upon them any yoake which neither they nor their fathers were able to beare; but to challenge them with that ancient obedience, which God alwaies required at their hands, and from which they were never free. Nay to shake off our obedience to that, whereunto the Church hath alwaies yielded under this pretence in so waightie a matter, is to abuse our libertie, to turne it into licentiousnes, and to set open a windowe unto all kinde of prophanenesse." * * * *

"And thus wee may conclude the truth of this doctrine that wee have in hand, notwithstanding any thing that hath been spoken against it, namely, that as there hath been a Sabbath day from the beginning, so there is great reason that it should continue to the ending, and though it had never so many adversaries that have bent their force against it, yet they are not able to overthrowe it, as being that which is strengthened by God's Commandement, and (as it were) fortified by his owne hande; yet I am not ignorant, that it hath many and mightie enemies, and those that have a great deale more to say against it than I have uttered; nay, I doe not thinke, that there is any one poynt of our Religion, that is so in controversie among the learned of all sortes, as this of the Sabbath, wherein many friendes doe disagree." * * * *

"Herein the Lord hath beene mercifull unto his Church, and succoured the infirmitie of man in this behalfe, and decided the endlesse contention that might have beene about this matter, in that he hath told us that it is the seventh day, which he hath sanctified for that purpose. For it is in expresse words sayd in Genesis, that God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it; and in Exodus, The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; and afterwardes the same words be repeated by Moses in Deuteronomie. Therefore it must needes be upon that day and upon none other, for the Lord himselfe sanctified that day, and appointed it for that purpose, and none but it. And therefore it is truely said of that greate clerke Saint Augustine, De solo Sabbatho dictum est, &c. This is said onely of the Sabbath, GOD sanctified the seventh day. In so much that a man being in conscience persuaded that he should keepe holy unto the Lord some one day or other, should ignorantly chuse out some other day, neglecting the seventh, to sanctifie it by resting from his labours, and wholly applying himselfe to God's service, he could not look for that blessing from GOD, which no doubt the Church of God doth find at his hands upon that day by virtue of his especiall promise, for he blessed that day and sanctified it. And as Peter Martyr alledgeth it out of Rabbi Agnon, This blessing doth light upon those who observe and sanctifie the same Sabbath that God hath appointed; and wee doe not reade that hee bestowed that blessing upon any other day, which we know he did upon the seventh." * * *

"Now seeing it appertaineth onely unto God to blesse us, it cannot belong to any but him to appoint the meanes whereby hee will convey this blessing unto us, and hee hath not onely sanctified the means, but hath especially blessed the seventh day for those purposes, and dealing with it, we deale with that which hath an especiall blessing upon it for our sakes. For this cause we use in the sacraments the water, the bread, and the wine rather then any other thing in the world; and we look assuredly to receive that blessing from these creatures which we cannot from any other, because GOD hath sanctified them for this purpose, and hath put that rich blessing upon them for our good, which no other creature hath under the sunne. In so much that if any one would minister or receive the Sacraments in any other elements than these, he should not finde that blessing of the forgivenes of sinnes, and newnes of life, which the Lorde doth by these meanes convey unto his Church. For as no man in the worlde can of himselfe make this promise unto men, that they shall bee washed and cleansed from their sinnes by the bloud of Christ, and that by his body and bloud they shall be nourished in soule and in body unto everlasting life; so none in the worlde can appoint out the meanes whereby God will convey these inestimable treasures unto us, put us into the possession of them and make us assured of them, which when himselfe hath done wee cheerfully looke for that good from them, because hee is faithfull and true, that hath sayd, hee hath thus blessed them for us. In regard of which, as the Jewes did faithfully keepe that seventh day to the end, which they knew by the word, which onely God blessed and sanctified for their use, so it was unlawfull for them to change it for any other, because they had not that warrant that they should be specially blessed unto them, as they had for this, which being that very day, upon which the Lorde himselfe rested from all his worke which hee made, he did therefore blesse this seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it hee had rested from all his worke that God had created and made, to that ende, that they observing that day rather than any other, might therein bee made like to their Creator, and might shewe by their practice, that they worshipped him, whom they knew, even him, that as he had made an especiall covenant with them to save them, so he was able to doe it, for it was even hee, who when he had made the whole worlde in sixe daies, rested upon the seventh, and therefore sanctified it, and none but that, that this work of his might be had in an everlasting remembrance. And when all the Gentiles round about sayd, that they worshipped every one of them the true God, (and yet they did not thus knowe him by his word, and by his works, and therefore made him but an Idoll) they by their practice in observing that seventh day did shewe, that they did know him aright, and so made him knowne unto others; the glorie of which worke had beene obscured and darkened, if they had changed the number of that day, which the Lord in wisedome left to his Church to bee observed in the policie and discipline of it, when hee might have appointed some other, that so the benefit of our creation might alwaies with praise be remembered in the Church, according as it is said in the words of the commandement, In sixe daies, the Lord made the heaven and the earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day, therefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it, which in the verse going before hee calleth the seventh day. Thus we learne that God did not onely blesse it, but blesse it for this cause, and so wee see, that the Sabbath must needs be still upon the seventh day as it alwaies hath beene."

The preceding quotations show how the seventh day was identified, in the mind of Dr. Bound, with the SABBATH DAY. That he herein stood upon the basis of truth, will be apparent to every Sabbath-keeper. His reasoning is consistent with sound Sabbatarian views. But what shall we say of his consistency with himself? Mark the man who was first in his own cause, and let his neighbor search him out. Observe, reader, how this great man lowers the standard of God's truth, and crouches to human practice and Popish inovation—how meanly he passes over to the enemy's camp, and abandons his own principles for the practice of his opponents.

"But now concerning this very speciall seventh day, that now we keepe in the time of the Gospell, that is well knowne, that it is not the same it was from the beginning which God himselfe did sanctifie, and whereof hee speaketh in this Commandement, for it was the day going before ours, which in latine retaineth his ancient name, and is called the Sabbath, which we also grant, but so that we confesse, it must alwaies remaine, never to be changed any more, and that all men must keepe holy this seventh day, and none other, which was unto them not the seventh, but the first day of the weeke, as it is so called many times in the new Testament, and so it still standeth in force, that we are bound unto the seventh day, though not unto that very seventh."

It appears that Dr. Bound, who was the father of the new Sabbath doctrine, was not sagacious enough to see the force of the distinction made by some of his successors of the Puritan school between the Sabbath of the fourth commandment and the seventh day. His dissecting knife was not keen enough to separate the joints of God's law, and show to the world what had not been before discovered, viz. that in the beginning God sanctified the Sabbath, but not the seventh day, thus leaving, covertly and unknown to the writers of the old Testament, an opportunity to introduce another day afterwards, without any express law for the purpose. Solomon, the wisest of men, was not able to see the nature of the law of God; but wise men of the seventeenth century learned, that the fourth commandment was so framed as to allow of men's keeping one day in seven from the beginning; and had the Jews found it out also, they might have observed the day of the Sun with the heathen, and at the same time been void of transgression of the law of the Sabbath. The custom of dissecting God's law is of modern date.

COMMENTARY ON THE NINTH COMMANDMENT.—At the examination of the children of the Windsor Infant School, a little boy was asked to explain his idea of "bearing false witness against your neighbor." After hesitating, he said it was "telling lies," on which the worthy examiner said, "That is not exactly an answer. What do you say?" addressing a little girl who stood next, when she immediately replied, "It was when nobody done nothing, and somebody went and told of it." "Quite right," said the examiner, amidst irrepressible roars of laughter, in which he could not help joining, the gravity of the whole proceeding being completely upset.

THE SEA-SHORE.

BY C. P. CRANCH.

The wild waves madly dash and roar,
In thunder-throbs, upon the beach;
Their broad white hands upon the shore
Forever they outreach.

Up through the cavernous rocks amain,
With short, hoarse growl, they plunge and leap,
Like an armed host, again and again,
Battering some castellated steep.

Great pulses of the ocean heart,
Beating from out immensity,
What mystic news would ye impart
From the Great Spirit of the sea?

Ever, in still increasing force,
Earnest as cries of love or hate,
Your large and eloquent discourse
Is mighty as the march of Fate.

I sit alone on the glowing sand,
Filled with the music of your speech,
And only half may understand
The wondrous lore that ye would teach.

The sea-weed and the shells are wise,
And versed in your broad Sanscrit tongue;
The rocks need not our ears and eyes
To comprehend the under-song.

The ocean and the shore are one—
The rocks and trees that hang above,
The birds and insects in the sun
Are linked in one strong tie of love.

Would that I might with freedom be
A seer into your hidden truth,
Joining your firm fraternity,
To drink with you perpetual youth!

FAMILY PORTRAITURE.

Legh Richmond's "Domestic Portraiture" presents some beautiful and instructive pictures, a specimen of which will be found in the following narrative, connected with the last days of his second son, Wilberforce, who died before he arrived at the age of manhood.

Why Friends can be left without Regret.

Wilberforce sat silent for some time, then looked up, and said, "Come and sit close to me. Let me lean on you." Then putting his arms round me, he exclaimed, "God bless you, my dear." He was agitated, and ceased speaking. Presently he said: "I must leave you—we shall walk no further through this world together—but I hope we shall meet in heaven. Let us talk of heaven. Do not weep for me, dear F——, do not weep, for I am very happy; but think of me, and let the thought make you press forward. I never knew happiness till I knew Christ as a Saviour." He then exhorted and encouraged me to study the Bible with perseverance. "Read the Bible—read the Bible. Let no religious book take its place; through all my perplexities and distresses, I never read any other book, and I never felt the want of any other. It has been my hourly study, and all my knowledge of the doctrines and all my acquaintance with the experience and realities of religion, have been derived from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion may be useful, but they will not do instead of the simple truth of the Bible." He then spoke of his regret at parting with us. "Nothing convinces me more of the reality of the change within me, than the feelings with which I can contemplate a separation from my family. I now feel so weaned from the earth, my affections so much in heaven, that I can leave you all without a regret. Yet I do not love you less, but God more."

Fear of Death taken away.

I had marked the depression of his spirit when the symptoms of his disease appeared more unfavorable, and I asked him if he had any fear of death now. He answered me with great firmness, "No, not any. I have unshaken confidence in Jesus as a Saviour. He has taken away the sting of death, and for his sake the Father will receive me as his child." I replied, You had, dear Willy, great doubts of your salvation, and many fears of death during some periods of your illness." "Oh! yes, indeed I had! I have been on the verge of despair, and have known its agonies. My pain of body was at times very great, but nothing in comparison with the agonies of my spirit. I struggled on in darkness and in silence. It was known only to myself and God, but I was supported and carried through all, and now I would encourage you, my dearest sister, by telling you what succeeded in my case. I will tell you just what I did. After a season of much doubt and terror, during which I felt as if all was delusion, and I should be cast into hell, I determined to go at once boldly to God, in the name of Christ, and plead the promises which were then before me in the Bible. I fell down upon my knees—I groaned—I wept—I prayed most fervently—I said, Here I am, Lord, a most perishing sinner—my sins are heavy and alarming—I cannot bear them myself—I feel my body decaying—I must soon die, and I dare not appear before Thee, the pure God, as I now am. I read of a Saviour thou hast provided for sinners, and I come to him to be saved from eternal death. I come to the cross of Christ—I cling to it as my only hope. If thou, O Christ, wilt not save me—Jesus! have mercy on me! I persevered thus again and again—I kept on praying in this way—I took nothing with me but a broken heart, and I said, 'Lord! I will not go except thou bless me!' I know I prayed sincerely, and I was heard and answered. I found that promise true, 'Whosoever cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out.' God was good to me. My soul required severe discipline, but he comforted me in his own time. I found Christ able and willing to do all I required—I was enabled to receive him as my complete salvation, and I sometimes had such peace in believing on him—such hours of unspeakable happiness, that the remembrance of it makes up for all this suffering. I never again lost my hope with Christ, though for the moment my disease overpowered me and clouded the past. Now I tell you all this for your encouragement and direction. Seek as I did, and you will find the same pardon for sin, the same peace in death."

Dying Advice to a gay Sister.

He was earnest beyond his strength in conversing with her. He put very plain and close questions, saying, "I must be answered; I must speak plainly; I am afraid, my beloved sister, you do not think enough about religion. I do not see decided proofs of real conversion in you. I have not a sure hope, that if you die as you now are, I shall meet you in heaven. Oh! H——, it is my last request—with my dying breath I am entreating you to seek the salvation of your soul. Suppose you were in my place—in this chair instead of me—waiting for death day by day—could you meet it as I do, my dear sister! do think of death while you are in health. If I had not sought Christ before I was brought so low, I should have no strength or sense to seek him now. I went to Jesus as a poor weak sinner, and found sweet rest, and I am happy now amidst all this suffering." He spoke in a very affectionate manner of the subject nearest her heart. "Your merry peal will soon succeed my death-knell. Take care that the good seed is not choked by the pleasures of life! Seek first the kingdom of God. Remember H——, you have to die. Oh! I cannot leave you in peace, unless I have a good hope that I shall meet you in heaven. If I thought there was one amongst you—oh! I cannot bear that thought!" He continued, "H——, there is nothing so opposed to religion, to the mind of Christ, as levity and trifling. It will keep you back more than anything. Take my solemn warning—I speak from my own experience—you will never be a consistent Christian, and you will never grow in grace, if you indulge in habitual trifling conversation. It is not like the mind of Christ. Your temper is playful and volatile, and Satan may use it as a snare to injure your soul. Piety and levity cannot long dwell in the same heart. One will destroy the other."

Parting Words with his little Sister.

He spoke very touchingly to his youngest sister, who was then a little child. "Would you like to meet poor Willy in heaven, dear C——? Then you must love God. Pray to God to make you love him, and to make you a child. Will you promise me one thing, my dear C——, that you will never go out of your room in the morning till you have read a few verses in the Bible and prayed to God? If you do not pray to God you will not meet poor Willy in heaven. I will give you a verse to think of when I am dead, 'Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.' Say that verse to yourself every night when you lie down."

VICTORIA IN CHURCH.

Her Majesty, while in Scotland, accompanied by Prince Albert, attended divine service in the church of Crathie. Perhaps some of our republican readers may like to know how royalty appears at such times. The annexed paragraph from a British paper represents her as behaving very well, and the people as showing themselves on the whole very good children:—

As proprietors in the parish, of course, a pew in the church has been allotted to them. It is in front of the gallery, and tastefully trimmed with scarlet cloth. The whole edifice had undergone a beneficial purification in anticipation of their presence. The building, which is by no means large, was filled, but not to excess. The congregation was much larger than on ordinary occasions, and comprised a number of strangers, a few of whom had come a considerable distance. The service, as is usual in Scotland, in country districts, took place at 12 o'clock. Precisely at the hour, the royal carriage drove up along a new pathway, that had been made for the purpose, at the western door, by which her majesty was to enter. The vehicle was of a construction akin to the one presented to the Queen by the ex-Sovereign of France—open, with the roof supported by pillars. Those assembled drew aside respectfully, and made way for it; and as the Queen passed all bowed to her. She seemed much delighted, smiled, and bowed her acknowledgements, as did also his royal highness. On entering her seat, her Majesty and the Prince, in accordance with the English form, a practice, by the way, which is highly becoming, and which might with propriety be imitated by Presbyterians, spent a few moments in silent devotion; as did also Sir George Grey, who had been loitering about and conversing with several gentlemen till the arrival of the royal party, with whom he entered, and occupied a pew immediately behind them. The service was marked by the utmost propriety and decorum. A staid propriety and attention pervaded the whole; and we are glad to say, that there was not any rude, unseemly gazing at the pew where the Queen was seated, such as would have annoyed her Majesty.

CONTAGION OF A MOTHER'S FEAR.

First impressions made on the fears of a child are as apt to be enduring as first impressions of any other kind. Hence the mischief of frightful nursery tales. Wirt, in his recollections of his first ten years, thus describes the lasting effect of his childish sympathy with his mother's fear:—

"On the evening that I am speaking of, there was one of the most violent thunderstorms I have ever witnessed. My aunt got down her Bible and began to read aloud. As the storm increased, she read louder and louder. My mother was exceedingly frightened. She was one of the most tender and affectionate of beings, but she had the timidity of her sex in an extreme degree—and, indeed, this storm was enough to appal the stoutest heart. One flash of lightning struck a tree in the yard and ripped off a large splinter, which it drove towards us. My mother shrieked aloud, flew behind the doord and took me with her. My aunt remained firm in her seat, and noticed the peal in no other way than by the increased energy of her voice. This was the first thunderstorm I remember. I never got over my mother's contagious terror until I became a man. Even then, and even yet, I am rendered much more uneasy during a thunderstorm than, I believe, I should have been if my mother had, on that occasion, displayed the firmness of my aunt. I could not have been more than five or six years old when this happened. The incident and its effect on me show the necessity of commanding our fears before our children."

"FROM GREENLAND'S ICY MOUNTAINS."

A very pleasant prayer-meeting was held in the upper saloon of the steamer Hudson on Tuesday evening, by the passengers who had availed themselves of Mr. Merwin's arrangement to attend the meetings of the American Board at Pittsfield. Rev. Dr. De Witt presided, and the exercises were closed with the Missionary Hymn. "As the company again divided into groups," says the Independent, "various topics connected with missions were discussed in conversational circles. A gentleman gave a description of the original manuscript of the Missionary Hymn, which he had seen, in Bishop Heber's hand-writing, in the possession of Dr. Raffles, of Liverpool. The story of its origin is, that just before his embarkation for India, Bishop Heber was engaged to preach a missionary sermon, when the minister of the place told him that the choir had no suitable hymn to sing, and begged the Bishop to write one for them. He sat down at once, and wrote this glorious hymn, of which the first draft was so perfect that there is only one alteration of a word. The line that now reads—

'The heathen in his blindness,' first stood—

'The pagan in his blindness.'

How many thousand missionary meetings have been enlivened, and elevated, and excited to new zeal and hope, by singing this hymn."

AFFECTING.—The Rev. C. Cushing, of Boston, has furnished the Evening Traveler with the following sad account of a sudden death, speedy burial, and solemn funeral, at which he officiated:—"A Protestant woman of good religious character, from the North of Ireland, who had been two years a widow, residing in Wall street in this city, was on the 11th ult. attacked with cholera at 3 o'clock, A. M., died at half-past 8, and was buried by the city officers at 5 on the afternoon of the same day. She left no relatives but two little girls, one aged 14 and the other 8 years. In the absence from the city of Rev. Mr. Winkley, whose meeting she attended, I was called to attend the funeral. I found the two children sitting by the side of the coffin, and as no other individual was present, the desolate room was as silent as the tomb. I offered a short prayer, and at the close of each sentence the children repeated that prayer, word for word. They had been accustomed in that manner to repeat their mother's prayers. They then waited for the privilege of riding on the hearse to accompany the remains of their mother to the place of burial. Awed by the solemnities of the scene, I could not but feel that the prayer offered under such circumstances, and repeated by those orphan children, would be answered graciously."

CONTRIVING TO DO GOOD.—When Jonathan Edwards was a young man, he formed a series of resolutions embodying the principles upon which he intended to act and govern his future conduct and course of life. One of these resolutions was, to be continually endeavoring to find out some new contrivance to promote the glory of God, and the great ends of his own existence and that of his fellow men. Should not such a determination as this exist in the heart of every Christian, and particularly every minister of the gospel? If the men of the world exercise their powers of invention in devising new and efficient methods of advancing their temporal interests, should not those who belong to the kingdom of heaven do the same thing in reference to the spiritual welfare of mankind? For what purpose are the faculties of skill and contrivance given us, but to use them to the best advantage in doing the work of the Lord, "whose we are, and whom we serve?"

IDLENESS.—Nine-tenths of the miseries and vices of mankind proceed from idleness; with men of quick minds, to whom it is especially pernicious, the habit is commonly the fruit of many disappointments and shame, and men fail in their schemes, not so much for want of strength as from ill direction of it. The weakest living creature, by concentrating his powers on a single object, can accomplish something; the strongest, by dispersing his over many, may fail to accomplish anything. The drop, by continual falling, bores its passage through the hardest rock—the hasty torrent rushes over it with hideous uproar, and leaves no trace behind.

Half the noblest passages in poetry are truisms, but these truisms are the great truths of humanity; and he is the true poet who draws them from their fountains in elemental purity and gives us to drink.

A weak mind sinks under prosperity as well as under adversity. A strong and deep mind has two highest tides—when the moon is at the full, and when there is no moon.

A mountain is made of atoms, and friendship of little matters, and, if the atoms hold not together, the mountain is crumbled into dust.

The only way to be permanently safe is to be habitually honest.

DEFECTION OF MINISTERS.

So far as our knowledge extends, the denomination to which we belong has been troubled with very few ministers who have proved a scandal to the cause. In whatever light they may have been viewed as to their learning, and as to what are sometimes called "shining abilities," it is a fact, we believe, that since the denomination of Seventh-day Baptists was first planted in America, (nearly two centuries ago,) there has been but here and there one, who has in any way prejudiced the cause by immoral conduct. As it is not in poor, frail man to keep himself from falling, this preservation of our ministry must be ascribed to the unmerited grace of Him, "whose we are, and whom we serve." Whether it is an honor put upon the cause of the Sabbath,—whether it was God's purpose thus to signalize those who should stand up as witnesses for his holy institution before the world,—it does not become us to say. Certainly, we have no disposition to speak of it in the way of boasting. We contemplate the fact, however, with gratitude to his name.

But who knows how soon we may be called to mourn over some such calamity. "Look diligently," says the Apostle, "lest any root of bitterness springing up, trouble you, and thereby many be defiled; lest there be any fornicator, or profane person." We have generally found, that when a church has been, for a long time, in a state of declension, some "root of bitterness" has sprung up, at last, to mar their peace; some quarrel has arisen between brethren; or some brother, or sister, has been left to commit scandalous outrage, and throw the whole society into affliction. Even while there was the outward appearance of peace, the way was stealthily preparing for trouble. Perhaps, for years, the church had sent up its annual epistle to the Association, saying, "It is a time of coldness with us, but we are at peace among ourselves." Ah, fatal delusion! The next thing we hear, is that they "bite and devour one another." What else could have been expected? They were asleep; and while they slept, the enemy sowed tares. They were "at peace among themselves," it is true, that is, they did not openly quarrel. But as to "loving one another with pure hearts fervently," they did not. Such a holy bond of union cannot exist with those that are lukewarm in the cause of Christ. They get along peaceably as neighbors, but that they love one another as Christians, cannot be said of them.

As with a single church, so with a denomination at large. And after a long season of coldness;—aye, worse than coldness; absolute refusal to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty—we, yes we, may well fear that the bitter curse will fall upon us, as upon Meroz. Some "root of bitterness" will spring up; perhaps some "fornicator or profane person" will curse our ranks. Perhaps some of our ministers will be left to their own weakness, to disgrace themselves and the cause of the Redeemer. We are not gifted with prophecy, to declare infallibly that this will be so; but let each of us begin to say, "Lord, is it I?" It seems to us, as if somthing must befall us very soon, for God has no attribute which can take side with our great want of devotion to his cause. O that it may not be the disgrace of our ministry! "He that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." 1 John 5: 18."

We sometimes feel awfully solemn in view of this subject. We feel solemn in view of our own individnal weakness. We feel solemn in view of the disaster which ministerial defection must, in all cases, bring upon the cause of religion. We feel solemn in view of the hindrance which would be given to the cause of the Sabbath. A Sabbath, keeping minister branded before the world as a reproach to religion!—a minister, who zealously inculcates the whole law as a rule of of duty!—a minister, who has declared, perhaps, a thousand times, that "whoso keepeth the whole law, and yet offends in one point, he is guilty of all!" "Thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself?" Of all things in this world of sin, a hypocritical, world-worshiping, devil-serving minister, among those who stand up as witnesses for God's holy Sabbath, is the most inconsistent. And perhaps the Almighty, clearly foreseeing what a triumph would be shouted by infidels over such an inconsistency, has hitherto mercifully spared us such an inflction. But will He always spare? Precious as the Sabbath is in his sight, and precious as the whole cause of religion is, it may be necessary, as a judgment upon us for our sins, again "to deliver his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand," as in ancient days. "But wo be to that man," or those men, "by whom the offense cometh."

There is, however, a solemn responsibility devolving upon those who can pray, that they remember in their supplications those who sustain the office of ministers. Paul thought it necessary that prayer should be offered for him, and for his coadjutors in the ministry, by the saints; and surely, if it was necessary for him, it is necessary for those who cannot be supposed to have attained any thing like the same strength in piety. Do our brethren pray as earnestly for their ministers as they ought? Do they make it the constant burden of their supplications, that God would make them a godly race of men? If they neglect to pray for this object, the inference is very natural, that their hearts are not much set upon it. If this be so, God will be most likely to give them about such ministers as they are prepared to receive. "And there shall be like people, like priest." The ministry is a blessing to the church, but God sometimes "curses their blessings." When a church wakes up, at the end of a series of months, or years, to find that it has been cursed with a worldly-minded minister, some one more fit to be a horse-jockey, or a brawling politician, than a good soldier of Jesus Christ, it would be well for the members to look back, and see whether they ever really desired any thing better—whether they were ever yet prepared to receive any thing better. We do not mean that they did not sometimes express a lazy wish, that their minister were a pious man; but, did they earnestly pray for it? Did they feel their need of faithful reproofs and counsels to such an extent, as to pray to God to make their minister faithful in giving such reproof and counsels? Did they manifest this desire by doing all in their power to encourage him in the discharge of his duty? When he came into their houses, did they call together their families, bring out the Bible, and ask him to pray with and for them? Did they thus show their desire to be spurred forward in the divine life? Or did they rather seek to draw him into conversation about wheat and merchandize, California and politics, live-stock and cheese-making? Did they, when he began any inquiry about their spiritual state, turn the subject as soon as possible? And did they, when he lodged at their houses, even send him off to bed, without so much as asking him to bow with them in prayer? These are solemn questions; and if, in the great judgment day, it shall appear that the fall of ministers has been owing to, or even helped forward by, such causes, God help those that are guilty.

THE FREE READING-ROOM.

We have received a letter from Dr. Wm. M. Fahnestock, of Bordentown, N. J., expressing his hearty concurrence in the plan of a Sabbatarian Free Reading-Room in New York, and his desire to "encourage the project, not with words, but with substantial aid." Although the letter was not intended for publication, we take the liberty of copying a portion of it, containing suggestions of general and permanent interest. The question relative to the expense of establishing a Reading-Room, cannot be definitely answered at present, but we hope that some approximation to an answer may be made at no distant day.

Isolated as I am, in my position, from fraternal companionship with like spirits, my mind naturally runs into brooding over the desolation of Zion, and into lamentations on the declension of integrity to the plain teachings of the Bible among the professed disciples of the Lord Jesus. Much meditation of this nature makes me, perhaps, more sensibly alive to the evils which beset our little band of valiant soldiers, contending for the unmutilated Word of Truth; and I think that I often realize something of the feelings of Nehemiah, when he went out in the night to view the broken walls of Jerusalem; and while thus contemplating the distracted state of Christendom—distracted by turning from the volume of Inspiration, and forsaking the "land-marks" of the Most High—I feel the sentiment rising higher and higher in my breast, until it becomes almost irrepressible, and I am almost tempted to emulate Peter the Hermit in sounding the Crusade from city to city, and open my dumb mouth and cry aloud to Sabbath-keepers, "Come out, and let us build up Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach."

But I must curb my rising emotions, and simply remark, that I rejoice to find, from recent indications, that our people, Sabbath-keepers, generally, manifest a commendable "mind to work." If we have a "mind to work," we may find an abundance of work before us; which may not only be profitable to our denominational interests, but contribute essentially to our individnal enjoyment, both in this life, and in the life to come; as nothing ministers more to our growth in grace, or promotes our waxing strong in the Lord, than constant engagedness in a good work. As a sluggard forfeits the pleasure of his existence through his innate laziness—his indomitable laziness—so a Christian denomination—children of the heavenly King—heirs to eternal glory—may, through inactivity, lose a rich foretaste of the joys of heaven vouchsafed to faithful disciples, from their their delinquency in putting forth the efforts which are necessary to inherit the blessings promised to the diligent and faithful. Christians slack in duty, possess no real relish for good works, and consequently receive not the plaudit of "well done, good and faithful servants;" because, and only because, they steel themselves, by insensibility—close, hermetically seal all the avenues to their better nature, and thus disqualify themselves from appreciating the soul-ennobling, soul-reviving emotions of self-conscious devotion.

Christian effort and Christian duties are not restricted to any field of labor, nor to any special action, but they are co-extensive with the wants of love, benevolence, and truth, or rather existing error; and we are not released from any efforts, within our power, to promote the glory of the Master, so long as we see any field of labor calculated to advance the Kingdom, unoccupied or uncultivated. The preached word, the missionary and tract operations, are, certainly, our most efficient instrumentalities for advancing the cause of truth; but there are many other departments of labor in the work of love to erring, benighted mortals; and perhaps there is no one, or all together, which may, in some particular instances, operate so beneficially as the one now suggested. Indeed, so favorably am I impressed with the project, that I not only rejoice in the prospect of seeing one established in your city, but look forward to see one opened and sustained in all the principal cities of the Republic, as one of the very best, most efficient means of diffusing effectual light on this important subject.

Now, if our people, Sabbath-keepers, have a "mind to work," and will join hands to supply the materials to build the walls, and bring up the timber to beautify the gates thereof, we shall soon have an instrumentality in the field, more operative among the class we wish to reach, than any thing we have yet instituted. Wishing you God-speed in this enterprise, I desire you to publish an estimate, in the "Recorder," of the probable expense necessary to have it put into immediate operation; not doubting that the denomination will respond without delay, and supply, cheerfully, the requisite aid to give it a proper experiment of doing much good.

AN APPEAL

To the churches and brethren composing the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association.

Dear Brethren,—At your last session, considerable anxiety was expressed for the welfare of our Missionary Operations in general, and a special interest was manifested in behalf of the operations conducted within our own bounds. In order the more effectually to carry out our wishes in this respect, a Committee was chosen, who were to act in the capacity of an "Executive Board," having this business under their special care. A desire was expressed for an arrangement by which the churches might more frequently be informed of the doings of their missionaries and the wants of the mission, and matters of a kindred nature, believing that this would encourage the brethren, and tend to increase their liberality. Accordingly, the Board arranged their business so as to make quarterly reports of their doings, at least so much of them as might be regarded as of general interest. Immediately after their appointment, the Board organized, and proceeded to the canvassing of several fields of missionary labor, and appointing laborers as under all of the circumstances they might think best.

Clarence and vicinity was first considered, and the Association having expressed an opinion concerning this field, the Board thought proper to second the view of the Association, and have been waiting with solicitude in hope that the Church and friends in Clarence would find it in their power to make the effort suggested. But as no communication has been received from them, the Board have nothing farther of a definite character to communicate, expressing, however, the hope, that the Clarence Church will accept of the advice offered, and at once go about the work of obtaining a permanent laborer among them.

Bro. James Bailey was appointed to labor under the patronage of the Board in the same field occupied by him last year. The term of service for which the appointment was made closed on the first Fourthday of the week in October; but as no report has been made to the Board by him concerning his labor, nothing farther can at this time be said.

Bro. John L. Hanson was appointed to labor as a colporteur as opportunity should present. It appears from Bro. Hanson's Report, that most of his time was spent with the 2d and 3d Genesee Churches, in endeavoring to preach to them Christ's Gospel, and in visiting from house to house, encouraging them in the divine life. He represents the state of religion as low in those churches, and gives a painful account of the manner in which the Sabbath is observed by some. Bro. H. has also circulated five thousand seven hundred and four pages of tracts, for which he has received $2 00. The labors of Bro. Hanson have been gratuitously performed. As Bro. H. is to be located for a time to come, the Board have thought it best not to continue him in their service, as his connection with them would be merely nominal. Still it is hoped, that whatever opportunity he may have for circulating tracts will be improved by him.

Bro. Hiram P. Burdick was appointed to his former field of labor in Potter County, Pennsylvania. His report is truly refreshing to the Board, and we doubt not will be equally so to the churches. He has labored seventy-two days; preached thirty-nine sermons; made seventy family visits; and reports fifteen hopeful conversions, ten backsliders hopefully reclaimed, three baptisms, and four have embraced the Sabbath of the Bible. One of this number is a minister of the Free-Will Baptist Church. Bro. Burdick's expenses for this quarter have been two dollars and fifty cents, and his receipts six dollars and thirteen cents, leaving him for his services three dollars and sixty-three cents; and there is not one cent in the treasury with which to meet his demands. Yet, in view of the interest felt in the present religious condition of the field of labor occupied by him, and the confidence the Board have in the zeal, piety, and ability of the churches, they have concluded to return Bro. Burdick to his field for another quarter, and await your decision upon their course.

And now, dear brethren, what shall be done? Here is a most interesting field of labor, one already "white for the harvest." Sinners are asking, like Saul of Tarsus, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and, like the penitent thousands upon the day of Pentecost, "Men and brethren, what must we do?" Others are asking, What is truth? and the long-neglected Sabbath of our God is receiving attention. Your prayers are answered. This is the very state of things you have desired of the Lord, and you have frequently said that you would be willing to give, if you could see a prospect of doing good. That prospect is now before you. "Lift up your eyes; see, the field is white already to the havest!" Again, your missionary is poor, and needs his pay. He has also labored faithfully in this service. He has sacrificed his domestic enjoyments, and whilst you are at home, surrounded by your happy families, he is in a land of strangers. Whilst you labor to increase your wealth and enjoyments, he labors for Christ. Yea, he labors for souls. And now, while God rewards his servant, giving souls for his hire, will you permit your missionary to lack that bread that perishes? or shall his dependent wife and children come to want through your neglect? We trust not. We therefore ask you to send in your contributions immediately, to Bro. David R. Stillman, of Alfred, who is your Treasurer, that the Board may have wherewith to meet the demands against them.

N. V. HULL,
Sec. of Board of S. D. B. W. Ass'n.

Alfred Center, Oct. 8, 1849.

SECRET SOCIETIES—QUESTION ANSWERED.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Permit me to answer the questions propounded by your correspondent, "A member of the Conference," (which appeared in the Recorder of Oct. 11th,) without re-stating the questions, which are somewhat lengthy.

Sir, in answer to your question, permit me, in the first place, to refer you to the fifth resolution passed by the body of which you was a member, in which you will find the following declaration: "That this Conference is conscientiously of the opinion, that Secret Societies are necessarily—in their organization fundamentally, and in their influence practically—adverse to Christianity." Now, sir, among the "Secret Societies" there is a Society known as the "Order of the Sons of Temperance," which, in its "preamble to the Constitution for Subordinate Divisions," uses the following language: "We, whose names are annexed, desirous of forming a Society to shield us from the evils of intemperance, afford mutual assistance in case of sickness, and elevate our characters as men, do pledge ourselves to be governed by the following Constitution and By-Laws." By an examination of said "By-Laws," you will find that they are founded on the "great principles of temperance, benevolence, and brotherly love," (which principles are more particularly enforced in the "Initiatory Ceremony.") And, farther, that a "Society of such sort" has been in existence about seven years, and is composed of reformed inebriates and Washingtonians, Laymen and Ministers, of all denominations, M. D.'s, D. D.'s, LL. D.'s, Representatives in Congress, Senators, Governors, constituting at the present time "an army of total abstainers from all that can intoxicate," of 250,000, ready for service at any time, and in any State of the Union. Such is one of the "Secret Societies" on which the 43d Conference pronounced condemnation.

Now, sir, having answered your questions, permit me to express some surprise, that a "Member of the (43d) Conference" should need any information in regard to a Society on which that enlightened body sat in judgment, and passed condemnation.

I shall be happy to answer any question that I can with propriety as

One of the Initiated.

BIBLES TOO CHEAP.

A sharp controversy, and one which promises to result in some good, has arisen between the British and Foreign Bible Society and the book-binders who do its work. A complaint is made, that the prices allowed are lower than those allowed by the (Episcopal) Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge. The Bible Society's work is done by contract, and the contractors have reduced the wages of the work-people. A public meeting has been held, at which letters were read from several clergymen, and resolutions were passed declaring the Bible Society resoposible "for the system for producing cheap Bibles, which is mainly effected by reducing the wages of female labor to a point considerably below a just remuneration." One of the speakers said that a woman could only fold 150 Bibles in a week, and the wages allowed was only 5s. per 100, yielding 7s. 6d. per week. For gilding Bibles, only 6s. 6d. per 100 was paid, of which the gold cost 5s. Mr. Edwards, a printer, spoke from the gallery. He said:—

"The Bible Society did not hesitate to send ship load after ship load of Bibles to Cuba and other places, to educate the blacks, but they had little thought of the white slaves at home—of the females who were spending their lives and wasting their energies, in folding wet sheets of paper for the miserable pittance they had heard of, in many of whom the nature of the employment had engendered the seeds of disease. It often happened, that religious people, had not the consideration of practical individuals when they entered into contracts. The question with them was, how could they get 100 Bibles bound cheapest? not, what wages would such contracts allow the workmen? That, however, ought to be a consideration with such a society."

The Established Church in Ireland.—Some of the best men in England are opposed to the Established Church in Ireland, and are laboring for its overthrow. It is said that Mr. Roebuck proposes, at the next session of Parliament, to attack that "monster grievance." The Nonconformist urges a concert of all liberal parties upon this reform, and some of the Irish Catholic papers promise their support. One of the latter class, the Cork Examiner, says:—

"We wage no war with Protestants and Protestantism; we merely combat against injustice and oppression. We war against a bad principle, an unfair system, a venerable fraud, a musty tyranny. We do not ask the Protestant to build our church, unless he wish it. Now, we require the same freedom for the Catholic that we would willingly concede to the Protestant. With matters of creed and doctrine we have nothing to do; but with a practical injustice that puts its hands into the pockets of the Catholic in the name of God, and plunders him under the affectation of religion, it is our duty to deal, and to deal sternly. The battle we are ready to fight with all the courtesies of modern warfare, but with all the earnestness of men who fight for a principle, and struggle against robbery and injustice, oppression and degradation."

J. M. Barrett at Liberty.—Much interest has been felt in the fate of J. M. Barrett, who was imprisoned at Spartansburg, South Carolina, on suspicion of having aided to circulate what are called "incendiary publications." By a recent decision, his case has been postponed until the next Court, and in the mean time he is set at liberty in consideration of having furnished the Clerk of the Court with a Certificate of Deposite on one of the Cincinnati Banks for one thousand dollars, which is considered sufficient bail.

The English Wesleyans.—The Independent says that Dr. Jackson, the President of the Wesleyan Conference, has issued a defense of the proceedings which led to the expulsion of four preachers. His pamphlet it described as very large, very bitter, and coarse in its language towards the opposing party. The main defense turns upon the unlimited powers given to the Conference by the famous "Deed of Declaration, enrolled in Chancery." Meetings continue to be held in the large towns, in behalf of the expelled ministers, and large sums are raised for them.

Dr. Achilli.—The Christian Times, Sept. 21, says that M. de Tocqueville has redeemed his pledge, in demanding the release of Dr. Achilli, a Protestant, imprisoded in the Inquisition; but the Roman authorities reply that his imprisonment is on grounds "other than religious." The same paper disbelieves those other grounds; but insists that they shall be investigated "publicly, impartially, immediately;" for that, "to allow a man to be detained in custody on vague charges, in a city occupied by French arms, would be contrary to every idea of justice."

Baptist Educational Matters.—An Educational Convention of the Baptist Denomination of the State of New York was recently held at Albany, to consider the difficulties growing out of the proposition to remove Madison University from Hamilton to Rochester. After a good deal of debate and manœuvering, it was thought best to compromise matters by establishing a College at Rochester, and continuing the Theological Seminary at Hamilton. A proposition to this effect has been formally made to both parties, the acceptance of which is confidently expected.

Baptist Missionary Convention.—The Baptist Missionary Convention of the State of New York met at Albany on the 10th inst. From the Annual Report of the Board, presented on the occasion, it appears that thirty-five churches in the State of New York, and two in Wisconsin, have been aided by the Convention during the year. Several of the churches have enjoyed revivals, and two hundred and thirty-one persons have been baptized. The Report stated, that in the Board, consisting of ninety-five members, there has not been a death during the year. The subject of limiting the field of the Convention's operations to the State of New York and its immediate vicinity, was debated at considerable length, and finally referred to the Board of the Convention and the Board of the Home Mission Society. A resolution was passed, recommending the churches in the State to observe the first Monday in 1850 as a day of fasting and prayer for the conversion of the world.

A "Slave Printer."—Rev. J. B. Pinney, Corresponding Secretary of the New York State Colonization Society, publishes the following paragraph in several of the New York papers. We cheerfully give it a place, simply asking, What right has any man to take seven hundred dollars from this poor negro "towards his own liberty," and still to claim three hundred dollars more?

"Mr. Editor,—Will you invite your readers to a consideration of the case of a slave at the South named Dickinson? He has paid from his own earnings $700 toward his own liberty, and yet owes $300 more. He is a printer by profession; has a family—a wife and two children—who are slaves, but will be manumitted to go with him. He desires earnestly to go to Liberia in the packet which sails Dec. 1st from Baltimore. A little timely aid may thus secure the boon of freedom to four persons, and place a family on the coast of Africa of exactly the kind most needed. We shall be glad to be made the almoner for this slave printer."

Cheap Postage.—The postage reform is spreading throughout Europe. In Austria an extensive improvement has been adopted by the Council of Ministers, and sanctioned by the Emperor. Stamps are introduced after the English fashion. A penny, or three-kreuzer stamp, franks a letter to the distance of forty English miles; beyond that radius six kreuzers are paid, but this is the maximum postage unless the letter exceeds half an ounce. The postage is multiplied according to the weight, taking the half-ounce for the unit of weight. A Convention has been published between Spain and Belgium, by which the future charge of single letters between the two countries is reduced to a single franc.

Missionaries for Burmah.—The Boston Transcript says that a company of missionaries for Burmah, under the patronage of the American Baptist Missionary Union, will sail from that port, in the ship Arab, for Calcutta. The company consists of Rev. H. M. Campbell and H. E. Knapp, with their wives, and Miss H. E. T. Wright, recently appointed Missionaries of the Union. Mrs. D. L. Brayton, of the Mergul Mission, who visited the United States for the benefit of her her health, with her daughter, and two Karen young men, assistants of Rev. J. H. Vinton in the revision of the Karen New Testament, will also acompany them.

Accident last Sabbath.—About two o'clock on Sabbath afternoon last, while the steamer West-Point was on her trial trip down the New York Bay, and nearly opposite Fort Hamilton, the engineer, Mr. Ira King, in endeavoring to look into some portion of the engine, made some misstep, and was struck on the head by the key of the inboard crank, with such force as to cause instant death. Mr. King was about 45 years of age, and a native of Rhode Island.

Liberal Benefactions.—Members of a generons Christian family, says the American Messenger, have recently remitted $350, for the salary of two colporteurs, &c.; and other members of the same family have made donations, in the course of the year, to the amount of about $700, making more than $1,000 from one circle. When intelligence, wealth and piety are thus combined, what blessings do they not confer upon the community?

A Liberal Bachelor.—A Mr. Campbell, of Pittsfield, lately presented a $600 pulpit to the Baptist society of that place. The pastor, the Rev. Mr. Miner, when informed of the generosity of Mr. Campbell, who is a bachelor, promised that he would gratuitously marry him, should his services be called for. Mr. C. replied, that in case of such an event, he would give the Rev. gentleman two pulpits.

A Rival Juggernaut.—The India Times, of July 9, says that Baboo Siboo Kristo Bonerjea, son of Radamadhub Bonerjea, is going to start an opposition Juggernaut at Serampore. The building of the car itself will, it is expected, cost about 4,000 rupees, the temple about 4,000 rupees, the images of Juggernaut and Bolaram, together with their jewelry and ornaments, as also the feast that the Baboo must give to all the Paudits for many miles round, will cost him 11,000 more, exclusive of the endowment of the temple and other necessary expenses, which will, in all likelihood, bring the total expenditure to 50,000 rupees.

Missionary to Europe.—Rev. Ludwig S. Jacoby, under the patronage of the Methodist Missionary Society, sailed from New York last week, in the Hermann. Mr. Jacoby is to reside at Bremen. He is a native of Germany, and has been in clerical service for the past eleven years among the German population of our Western States. His qualifications for the post are of a high order.

The Power of Gold.—Until recently no Jew was allowed to live, or even to sleep, in the Protestant university town of Erlangen, in Germany. Now, however, if a Jew be worth 20,000 florins, and will buy a house in which to dwell, Erlangen tolerates his presence!

The Church in China.—The Bishop of Victoria has, through his agents, Messrs. Phillips, Shaw, and Lowther, arranged for the passage of himself and suite to his Diocese in China, in the ship Sir George Pollock, and will leave England about the end of the present month.

Lucifer a Candidate for Baptism.—Romish priests as well as the laity baptize almost everything. A bishop in France, however, was recently brought to a stand. On the opening of a certain railway, he baptized the iron horses; but was suddenly petrified almost, when he saw one of the monsters, coming up snorting to the font bearing the name of Lucifer! He flatly refused baptism to the engine with that horrid name.

The Difficulty with France.—By the last steamer from Europe, intelligence was received, that the French Government entirely disavows the conduct of M. Poussin, and that M. Bois Le Compt, at present French Minister at Turin, has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington. Of course there will be no farther difficulty, since the trifling matter in dispute can easily be arranged to the satisfaction of both Governments.

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer Niagara arrived at New York on Sixthday last, with Liverpool dates to Oct. 6th, London 5th, Paris 4th, Rome and Vienna 1st.

By far the most important political news by this arrival is the possible and even probable rupture of Russia and Austria with Turkey. It forms the chief topic of discussion in the English and French journals, as well as among all classes, and in its paramount importance, the Roman difficulty as well as all other matters of national importance, appears to have been wholly lost sight of. The most recent accounts from Constantinople state that the Emperor of Russia has made a formal demand, through a special envoy to the Porte, for the surrender of Kossuth, Bem, and other patriots who played a prominent part in the late Hungarian struggle, who have sought refuge at Widda, on the Danube, in the territories of the Sultan. The Turkish Government, with a manliness which cannot be too highly commended, refused to be bullied into a compromise of its independence, and Prince Radzivil, after having ineffectively endeavored to urge the Sultan into a compliance with his demands, has taken an abrupt departure from Constantinople, and Count Titoff, the Russian Minister, has closed all diplomatic relations with the Porte. England and France, through their respective representatives, have prevailed with the Sultan in keeping him firm to his first resolution. Already in England and France cabinet councils have been held to consider these grave circumstances. Not the slightest doubt can be entertained of the result. Should Russia persist in demanding the surrender of these devoted men, a European war is thought to be inevitable.

The Journal des Debats of Thursday, Oct. 4, says: "We are glad to learn that England and France are most cordially united in their determination to support their Ambassadors in the advice given by them to the Porte respecting the extradition of the Hungarian refugees, and a note has been drawn up by these two powers of a most energetic character, which, it is thought, will have considerable weight with the Emperors of Russia and Austria, to whom it is to be presented."

There is no reason to doubt that the best accord prevails between the English and French Cabinets, and it is said that a powerful French and English squadron will be ordered into the Mediterranean forthwith, to be ready for any emergency, pending the issue of this absorbing question.

Austrian politics are of subordinate interest. It is positively asserted, with every probability of the truth of the report, that the fortress of Comorn has surrendered, and thereby an effusion of blood has been avoided.

It was reported at Vienna on the 30th ult. that Görgey, the ex-Dictator of Hungary, had been shot by Count Edmund Zicky, whose brother was executed by Görgey's decree at Cressel.

The suspension of intercourse between France and America caused much sensation in Paris when first announced, but a rumor having gained general belief that England had offered her mediation, that feeling considerably subsided. As soon as the dispute is terminated, M. Marrast or M. Thiers is expected to be sent to Washington in the place of M. Poussin.

The Irish journals are filled with accounts of most sanguinary conflicts between the tenantry and the landlords for the possession of the Corn, and the long cherished feeling of hatred between the occupiers of the soil and the owners have now broken out with a degree of violence which threatens very serious results. Already numerous lives have been lost.

The European Times contains reports of the unfavorable appearance of the potatoes in Ireland. A sudden and very rapid decay, similar to that which occurred in previous years, has taken place in the potatoes of the late plantings. The early sorts have escaped.

Cholera is rapidly disappearing from all parts of England as well as all parts of Europe where it has raged so long and fearfully. The total deaths in England from cholera since the 17th of June last, are stated at upward of 13,000.

News has been received from Sir John Franklin's Expedition. A communication from the Lords of Admiralty, under date of Oct. 4, states that hopes are entertained that the news brought by Capt. Parker, of the True Love, arrived at Hull from Davis Straits, of Sir John Franklin's ship having been seen by the natives as late as March last, beset by the ice in Prince Regent's Inlet, is not without foundation. From the same source reports have been received that Sir John Ross' ships are in the south of Prince Regent's Inlet, and that the vessels of both Expeditions are safe.

Luxuries in California.—Although many of our friends writing from the gold regions complain sadly of a want of the comforts of life, it would seem that they are not entirely destitute of the luxuries, as well as of those embellishments which adorn the parlors of their residences at home. Letters and various other documents have been received from Mr. George E. Tyler, late of Boston, now of the house of Osborn & Bramen, among which were catalogues of the cargo of the ship Rhone, lately arrived from China, embracing some 800 packages, a great proportion of which were fancy articles of Chinese lacquered work, &c., some of very beautiful style and pattern. Mr. Tyler writes that he had held already three days' sale of the cargo; the first amounting to $40,000, the second to $56,000, and the third to $65,000, and there was yet enough left for another day's sale. The prices for which some of the articles were sold, were as follow: Mattresses which cost 75 cents, sold for $11 a $12; lacquered and gilt work tables, $42 a $52; do. card tables, $31; satin damask bed-covers $60 a $70; do. embroidered do. (cost $75,) $132, $141 and $151; satin embroidered aprons, $5,25 each; and other articles in the same proportion. The same catalogue gives the sale of some building lots on Montgomery and California sts., which cost their owner $1,000; they sold for $29,100.

From Hayti.—The Boston Traveler of Oct. 16, says: The Schooner Willis Putnam, Capt. Cook, from Aux Cayes, Sept 21, arrived at this port, this morning, with a cargo of logwood. Capt. Cook reports that the Island remained quiet so far, under the Imperial sway, though there were those who privately prognosticated that its illustrious originator would be a head shorter ere six months were out. Capt. Cook states that when he visited the Island twelve years ago the condition of the poor blacks, though then their situation was far from comfortable, was enviable to their present state; and that during that period, their deterioration in civilization has been deplorable. There are comparatively but few that seriously apply themselves to work for a subsistence, the great majority preferring to beg or steal to keep body and soul together. Several of the inhabitants had obtained patents of nobility from the new Emperor. Some of the happy recipients were rumored to be guiltless of a whole pair of pantaloons or any appearance of shirts to their backs. When Capt. Cook arrived there was said to be not more than forty barrels of flour in the place; bread was also very scarce. The new crop of coffee came in slowly, and was exceedingly hard to be got. This scarcity, coupled with the operations of the monopoly law, is very destructive to American interests upon the Island.

The Rush for California.—The N. Y. Tribune of Oct. 18, says:—Yesterday being the day for the sale of tickets for passage in the two new steamers, to be started from Panama for San Francisco by the Pacific Mail steamship Company, the place of sale, at Howland & Aspinwall's, was the scene of a strife for precedence, unequaled even in the wondrous history of the Golden Crusade. As early as 4 o'clock in the morning some twenty persons were sitting on the steps in most neighborly proximity to the door, ready, like hounds on the leash, for the race upstairs. Before the doors opened, hundreds had collected, and in a minute after the turn of the key every place where a man could hold on, even by the eyelids, was occupied. So great was the pressure, that the balustrades and windows were broken, and each individual, on issuing from the office, gave woeful evidence of the density of the crowd in the shape of caved-in hats and torn and disordered clothing. One of the very earliest of those on the steps in the morning and almost the first man inside, did not get out until noon! Some 500 tickets for the two December steamers were run off as fast as the money could be paid over; but the crowd still clamored for more, and about 100 tickets for the steamer of the first of January were sold by way of dessert to the feast. The prices were, $300 for the Cabin, and $150 for the Steerage."

Loss of the Schooner John A. Sutter.—This vessel, commanded by Capt. Samuel R. Eddy, from Warren, R. I., run ashore on a small rock islet near Tamar Harbor, in the Straits of Magellan, at 8 o'clock at night, on the 26th of June, in a thick snow storm, with the wind blowing a gale from eastward. The schooner immediately bilged and filled with water, and fell off shore, and the officers and crew with much difficulty succeeded in getting from the wreck on to the rock, and saved two barrels of bread, a very little clothing, the square sail, and a boat. The crew remained in this condition on the rock all night, during a continued snow-storm and hard gale, the sea breaking nearly over the rock much of the time, some of the men having their feet and hands frozen. At daylight next morning the wind abated; the crew got on board the wreck, and by cutting through the cabin deck, succeeded in recovering some more of their personal effects and provisions. At 9 A. M. the brig Acadian, of Boston, being in sight, sent a boat off to her for assistance; she immediately came to Tamar Harbor, which is near to the place of the wreck; all hands then got on board of her, and arrived in Callao on the 19th day of August.

Lynch Law in California.—A letter from San Francisco, in the Baltimore Patriot, says: Crimes are punished with dreadful penalties, hanging, shooting, and whipping, cutting off the ears, &c. I am told that a man was the other day convicted of stealing a large quantity of gold, ($8,000) found upon him. He was sentenced to have his head shaved, both ears cut off close to his head, to receive 100 lashes on the bare back, and to leave the place within 16 hours, and California (never to return) within 16 days, with the addition that he be hanged by the neck until he is dead, in case he fails to comply with either of the last two clauses, within the time specified, or in the event of his return. And it is said the sentence, so far as to the shaving, cropping and whipping, has been actually carried into effect.

A Sad Affair.—On Third-day of last week the Coroner of New York held an inquest at 14 Ridge-st. on the body of Margaret Brady, aged 33 years, wife of John Brady, Policeman of the Thirteenth Ward, who came to her death by disease of the heart, brought on by sudden excitement. It appears that her husband was on duty the night previous, and about 3 o'clock while on the corner of one of the streets on his post, three men came up to him and violently assaulted him, beating him severely with a slung shot, injuring him badly. On going home, his wife saw him, and at the sight of his blood and injuries, she fainted, and from the excitement created expired before any medical aid could be obtained. The Jury rendered a verdict according to the above facts.

Earthquake in Massachusetts.—A severe shock of an earthquake was felt in several of the towns in the middle of Middlesex County, on Monday afternoon, between 3 and 4 o'clock. Two very loud and heavy explosions were heard, and the earth and buildings continued to tremble during the moments which elapsed. At Acton, Concord, and other towns, the people ran out of the houses and stores, supposing some terrible explosion of the powder-mill in Sudbury had occurred. At Concord, Acton, Carlisle, Bedford, Lexington, Lincoln, Stow, and probably many other towns, the shocks were distinctly realized, and it was generally supposed to have been the blowing up of some powder-mill. By some persons the shaking was said to resemble that produced by the rolling of something heavy in a room overhead. A similar shaking of the earth was felt in the same locality about a year ago, early in the morning. [Bunker Hill Aurora.

Sufferings of Whalemen.—The whaling bark Jeannot, of Fair Haven, Mass., met with a whale to the south-west of Circus Island, when the men lowered their boats, and succeeded in capturing him, and brought him alongside the ship, Capt. Hosmer still remaining off in his boat. About sunset, she struck another, and while taking him to the ship the boat was capsized, and two men drowned. The balance, four in number, including Capt. Hosmer, lay all night on the bottom of the boat. At daylight next morning, the bark was seen laying, with sails all aback, about three miles distant, heading towards them, and taking in the captured whale—when, contrary to all rules and customs of whaling ships, the mate, instead of cutting adrift from the whale, and having men at the mast-head to look out for the missing boat, continued most of the day in securing the whale he had taken, when he wore ship and stood off from the boat.

Capt. Hosmer and his men were forty-eight hours on the boat before they succeeded in bailing her out and righting her. They then made a sail of the ceiling boards, and stood to the northward in order to get into the rainy latitudes, having no water or provisions in the boat. They were twenty-one days without food, except a dolphin and a booby which they caught; and during the time one of the men died from exhaustion and another fell a victim by casting of lots to be eaten by those who were still left to suffer. At the expiration of twenty-one days they reached the Circus Island, and shortly after were taken off by a transient ship touching there for water, and landed at Payta, whence Capt. Hosmer and his remaining boat's crew embarked on board the ship George Howland bound for New Bedford.

Prices of Telegraphing in England.—The London Times of Sept. 25 contains a statement of the places in England and Scotland at which the Electric Telegraph Company have stations—they are some 50 or 60 in number; also, the rates of telegraphing, which are: for every 20 words, 2 cents per mile for the first 50; 1 cent for the next 50, and for any distance beyond 100 miles, half a cent per mile. These enormous charges are the result of a close monopoly, which America is happily free from, through the competition of various inventors. At London prices this paragraph, sent on the wires from New-York to Albany, would cost upward of Nine Dollars.

California Houses.—A gentleman, an inhabitant of Mazatlan, has had an iron house built for export to San Francisco. It is three stories high, and about 25 by 40 feet in dimension. It will go out complete in every respect excepting the setting up. This house is nearly ready, and so well pleased is the owner with its appearance, that he gave an order for thirty-three iron houses, of various dimensions, to be got ready as soon as possible. His present intention is to buy a vessel, load her with these houses, and take these smaller sizes directly up the Sacramento to the mining district.

A Repulsive Spectacle.—The Chicago Tribune, 25th ult., says:—During the greater part of yesterday a man, with a ball and chain attached to his leg, might have been seen leaning on a spade in the Public Square, surrounded by a curious crowd, with whom, when we were present, he was cracking jokes about the profit the city would realize from his day's work. We learn that he had been fined for drunkenness, and refusing to pay he was set to leveling the ground on the Square. He wouldn't work on compulsion, but contrived to spoil his spade by bending it.

Adventures of a Soldier.—Major Leith was the first to enter the breach in the walls of Mooltan. On that occasion he commanded a storming party. Immediately on entering the breach, his left hand was cut off by one of the enemy, and shortly afterwards a second blow from another cut the left arm half way between the wrist and the elbow. Both of these Sikhs were prostrated by the Major, and after successfully entering the breach, he received a shot in the left shoulder, which so disabled him that, on being carried to the rear, little hope was entertained of his recovery. They were all disappointed, and about a fortnight ago the brave Major arrived at his birth-place, Glenkindie, Scotland, in the enjoyment of perfect health, although the ball has not yet been extracted.

Editorial Certificates.—If subscribers to journals, like church members, in "stopping their paper," were required to produce an editorial certificate before they could subscribe for another, there would be some curious developments—as, for example: We certify, that A. B. stopped his paper because the editor refused to allow him six columns for a personal vindication, which concerned no body but himself. We certify, that C. D. refuses the paper because the editor did not publish the obituary notice of a relative, which was never sent to him, but which he ought to have detected in some of his exchange papers. We certify, that E. F. wishes to transfer his patronage to another paper, because, having taken our paper six years without paying a cent, he felt himself insulted by having a bill sent to him by way of reminder. We certify, that G. H., in his own opinion, is a poet of the first water; but the editor, unfortunately differing from him in opinion, is regarded by him as wholly unqualified for his office. We certify, that I. J. has stopped his paper, because the editor had the temerity to express an opinion on a certain matter without having previously ascertained the opinion of this particular subscriber. Cist's Advertiser says that the Messrs Bogen, of Cincinnati, have cut 10,000 hogs into sausages, and that they weighed two millions of pounds. Those who are of a mathematical turn can tell us how long the whole string would be, allowing an ounce to the inch.

A Captain of a vessel loading coal, went into a merchant's counting room, and requested the loan of a rake. The merchant looking toward his clerks, replied—"I have a number of them, but none, I believe, wish to be hauled over the coals."

Father Ventura.—This bold monk has submitted to the Pope's censures in regard to his Discourse on The Dead of Vienna, published in 1848. He says:—

"I regret and condemn all and every of the doctrines, maxims, expressions, and words that in that writing, or in any other of mine have been found, or may be found, in contradiction to the tenets of the Holy, Apostolic, and Roman Church. Finally, I declare that I hope, with the aid of Divine grace, to die in that holy Church in which I was born and in which I have lived, ready for that object to endure everything and make every sacrifice. Liberal Bequests.—Henry Trowbridge, Esq., an eminent merchant of New Haven, lately deceased, has left the following legacies:

"$5000 to the American Board for Foreign Missions; 5000 to the Home Missionary Society; 2000 to the American Bible Society; $2000 to the Seamen's Friend Society; 2000 to the poor of the first Congregational Society of New Haven; and some others, amounting in all to about $25,000."

SUMMARY.

On the 28th of September, in lat 52, lon 31° 17′, the bark Georgia fell in with the bark Rio, Capt. Cotterel, from Newcastle, Aug. 25, for New York, and took off the captain, officers and crew, and the captain's wife and child, 11 in all. The Rio on the 19th sprung a leak, and on the 20th shipped a sea, which swept the deck of everything. When she was abandoned, her masts were cut away, and she had seven feet of water in her hold. Her crew were mostly deranged, when taken on board the Georgia.

A letter dated New Orleans, Oct. 8, says: Last night was signalized by a most disastrous calamity. Five steamboats were completely destroyed by fire, viz: The Falcon, the Aaron Hart, the North America, the Illinois, and the Marshal Ney. The fire originated on the Falcon, at about 11 1-2 o'clock, and as the wind was blowing rather strong from the North the flames quickly spread to the boats lying alongside.

We learn from the New Albany (Indiana) Ledger, that Robinson, the fellow who has been swindling Postmasters in various parts of the country by passing himself off as a nephew of Maj. Hobbie, First Assistant Postmaster General, and who was detected a short time since by the Postmaster at Evansville, has been tried, found guilty, and sentenced to the Penitentiary for two years.

The Chemung Railroad, to connect the Senaca Lake with the Erie Railroad, will be completed about the 1st of November, when, by the new steamboat Benj. Loder, just launched in Seneca Lake, New York will be in connection with Buffalo by a new, expeditious and cheap route. When the Hudson River is closed, this route will no doubt command all the travel between the two places.

Capt. Brown, of the Clarissa Bell, who cleared a few days since at the Boston Custom-House for Fayal, has made to the Azores, in one vessel, the Harbinger, twenty-four voyages as mate and fifty voyages as captain, beside two as captain in another vessel, making in all seventy-six voyages, without having met with any accident or disaster worth mentioning.

The Rochester American thinks this year's apple crop of Western New-York is almost an entire failure, both in respect to quantity and quality. Orchards that have borne year after year hundreds of bushels of fair, large and sound apples, will this year not produce 50 bushels; and the few there are, are small, wormy and unsound.

A Quebec paper states that fifty respectable workmen left Quebec a few days since for the Western States. The Canadian Independent suggests a public meeting to inquire into the cause of this emigration, and to recommend a remedy. If the people are all going to the United States, may not the country go too?

From accounts published by the City Register, it appears that the number of deaths from cholera in Boston, has been 611, viz: in June 8; July, 52; August, 418; September, 133: Total, 611. Of these 379 were Irish, and 69 of other foreign nations; total foreigners, 448, leaving 104 deaths among the native population.

Dr. Martin, of Hinsdale, N. H., has been fined $75 on three indictments for selling liquor. The Doctor is President of the Hinsdale Sons of Temperance, and has been active in complaining of liquor sellers. He himself sold it as a medicine, but could not escape the law by which he condemned others.

By order of the Minister of Public Instruction, the names of the physicians and medical students in France who have fallen victims to their zeal in treating cholera patients, are to be inserted on a marble tablet in the Duputyren Museum.

A Miss Delany, of Troy, was recently killed by leaping from a carriage while the horses were running. She was one of a party of four. The others remained in the carriage and escaped with a few bruises. Miss D. was much respected.

The Directors of the Public Schools in Pittsburgh have passed a resolution which provides for the establishment of a school for colored children in that city. The school tax derived from the colored inhabitants of the city is to be devoted to the object hereafter.

An anonymous letter was received by a mercantile house of Charleston on the 13th inst. post-marked 'New York, October 10,' containing $150, which the writer states is the amount, with interest, of an error in their account of 1837.

The consumption of Brandy has enormously increased during the present season, the extra quantity cleared in London from July 1 to September 20 being 165,986 gallons, yielding to Government £124,489 more than during the corresponding period of last year.

A letter from Panama, dated Sept. 16, says: "I came here from Cruces in company with five persons, one of whom, Capt. Brayton, of Warren, R. I., has since died. He was much fatigued with the ride over; was 55 years old, and had not a constitution to bear the fatigues of such a ride. Seth Russell, of N. B., has been carried off by the cholera. As near as I can learn, 35 of the Crescent City's passengers of July died here and on the river. I saw many graves on the banks of the Chagres, each marked with a cross."

The other day, a scow canal-boat, the Tisdale of Whitehall, as she reached the current below the Cahoes Falls, was swept down the stream; the horses were drawn into the river and drowned, and the boat went over the dam, having two men aboard. Fortunately she struck the dam obliquely, and was arrested by the apron, the boat sticking bow downward at an angle of 45 degrees. The men were rescued without injury.

The Utica Herald says that as Richard Whitehead was setting out some plum-trees on his lot on Corn Hill, he struck upon a vein of buried watches, eight in number, seven of silver and one of gold. They were considerably injured by contact with the earth, and had the appearance of having been there some time. There is no clue as yet to where they came from or who they belong to. In the gold watch was written in pencil the name of "David Russell." The watches are all old-fashioned.

Hon. Leonard White died at Haverhill, Mass., on the 10th inst., at the age of 82. Mr. White was the classmate and friend of John Quincy Adams. He was for a great many years Town Clerk and Treasurer, and represented his town in the Legislature, and his district in Congress from 1811 to 1813. At this period the Merrimack Bank was incorporated, and he became its first Cashier, which office he held with unsullied reputation for a quarter of a century.

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Chas. B. Stuart;

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Nelson J. Beach; and

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Isaac N. Comstock;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District, in the place of Samuel Jones, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next;

Also, a Senator for the Third Senate District, in the place of William Hall;

Also, a Senator for the Fourth Senate District, in the place of John L. Lawrence;

Also, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, in the place of Samuel Frost; and

Also, a Senator of the Sixth Senate District, in the place of William Samuel Johnson;

All whose terms of service expire on the last day of December next.

The following officers are also to be elected for said City and County:

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Michael Ulshoeffer;

A Judge of the Superior Court, in the place of Aaron Vanderpool;

Sixteen Members of Assembly;

A Sheriff, in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;

A City and County Clerk, in the place of James Conner; and

A Coroner, in the place of William A. Walters;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

[The Electors throughout the State are also to vote for or against the adoption of an act entitled "An act Establishing Free Schools throughout the State," passed March 26, 1849.] Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

Sheriff's Office, New York, July 21, 1849.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, Sheriff.

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the Election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. COTTON MANUFACTURES OF NEW ENGLAND.

From a recent tour through the New England States, says a correspondent of the New York Herald, we found out the secret of Yankee prosperity. It is universal, incessant, persevering, calculating, well-directed labor. Work has done it all. With a natural capital of rocks, and harbors, and forests, and waterfalls, industry has lined the valleys with factories, the hills with cottages and schools, the plains and peninsulas with cities and villages, has penetrated the country in every direction with railroads, and has whitened all the seas with the sails of Yankee ships freighted with Yankes notions.

With a view of exhibiting a feature of the industry of Massachusetts, the pride of all the Yankee states, we submit some statistics of her cotton manufactures. And, first as to a most important particular—the amount of cotton consumed annually within the limits of that State.

The following is an account of the annual consumption of cotton :—

By the forty mills at Lowell,	65,000 bales.
From the reports and estimates of other factories in the State at Newburyport, Salem, Fall River, Nantucket, Pawtucket, Fitchburg, Taunton, Lancaster, and a hundred other localities,	68,000 bales.
Total,	133,000 bales.

as the consumption of the raw material of cotton annually, in Massachusetts. The Lowell mills are of the largest extent—those of the Merrimack Company employing 1600 females, 645 males, using up 79,000 pounds of raw cotton weekly, and turning out, dyed and printed, 300,000 yards of cotton goods. The working up of these 128,000 bales, directly employs in the mills an aggregate force of 30,000 operatives, and gives incidental employment, in machinery, oil, wood, glue, starch, dye stuffs, soap, provisions, transportation, &c., &c., to perhaps 30,000 more, in other branches of industry—so that, independently of the force employed in the cotton culture, the mills of Massachusetts, in the cotton manufacture, give employment to at least 60,000 people.

Assuming that the cotton delivered at the mills costs on an average ten cents a pound, we have an expenditure for the raw material of $5,000,000. Allowing the manufactured article of a pound of cotton to bring twenty cents, as delivered from the mills, we have doubled the value of raw material, by labor, or advanced its value to $11,000,000.

The cotton goods manufactured in the Massachusetts mills are, sheetings, shirtings, calicoes, checks, drillings, ginghams, counterpanes, cotton flannel, candlewick, thread, cotton carpeting, &c.

The gingham manufactory of Lancaster employs a capital of $1,000,000, 20,000 spindles, and 550 looms, turning out 850,000 yards per annum.

The cotton duck factory at Rockport consumes 2000 bales of raw cotton, and turns out 1,253,000 yards of duck per annum.

The Suffolk company, at Lowell, turns out 5,720,000 yards of drillings per annum.

In Connecticut there are 137 cotton mills, consuming yearly 13,319,170 pounds of cotton, and manufacturing 33,431,985 yards of cloth, 1,872,863 pounds of yarn, 70,000 dozen spools of thread, 608,547 pounds batting, 30,000 dozen sheets pelisse wadding, 47,817 yards cotton flannel. The amount of capital invested is $3,312,450. There are 2,312 male, and 3,050 females employed in this business.

In Vermont the capital employed in cotton business does not probahly exceed $150,000. Her manufactures are chiefly confined to woolen and mixed woolen goods, a large portion of the raw material being furnished by the farmers of the State.

Rhode Island is a heavy manufacturing State. She has within her limited territory 163 cotton mills, consuming annually equal to 56,000 bales of cotton, and manufacturing equal to 70,000,000 yards of cloth.

New Hampshire has of late years entered largely into the cetton business. She has $12,000,000 of capital invested in the business, and consumes probably not far from 60,000 bales of cotton per annum.

In Maine, there are about a dozen factories, having an aggregate capital of about $2,5000,000. The annual consumption of cotton is about 1700 bales.

The aggregate consumption of cotton in New England, is estimated at about 237,800 bales annually. This is about one-ninth of the entire cotton crop of the South. We have reason to believe that the business is yet in its infancy. The time may yet come when nearly the entire cotton crop will be required by the manufacturers of the United States.

THE SIMOON OF THE DESERT.

Mr. Buckingham, in one of his letters, gives an interesting account of the simoon of the desert. He states that from the great insecurity of persons and property, there is little traveling except in caravans. These frequently comprise 40,000 camels, attended by thirty or forty persons. Flying horsemen, scouring in full speed the surrounding country, secure them from sudden attack, but the chief danger they have to encounter is the hot blast of the desert. Its approach is tokened by a lurid stream in the heavens, such as may sometimes be seen in American sun-sets. It is a sign well understood by the natives, and they prepare for it immediately. It comes like the heated air from a fiery furnace, suddenly opened, producing fainting and lassitude; and, soon increasing in violence, it raises the soft sand clouds, penetrating the eyes, nose, and mouth, and insinuating itself beneath the garments. The camels are halted by the sound of a bugle, or some other well-known signal, and arranged in lines of a hundred or thousand, each with their backs turned to the quarter from whence the simoon is expected, and beneath the shelter thus afforded the men prostrate themselves upon the ground. The drifting sand, opposed in its course, rises in a little while to the camel's back, and begins to pour down on the other side. Now must they again bestir themselves, if they would not be buried where they lie. Although the atmosphere is thick with the yellow sand, producing darkness so total that one cannot see an extended hand—and darkness too that can be felt—a new position is to be taken, a new line of camels formed, and the same operation gone through with. This is often necessary to be done many times, until, reduced to perfect helplessness by exhaustion, they sink and die, and are buried beneath the sand. The groans of the women, and the blended cries of men and beasts, help to make the scene awful beyond description. One of these simoons, to which Mr. Buckingham was exposed, lasted 18 hours; and of a caravan of 20,000 persons returning from a pilgrimage to Mecca, to the shrine of Mahomet, which was overtaken by this destroying blast, only eighteen escaped alive to tell the tale.

THE MORMON CITY OF THE SALT LAKE.

I shall never forget the first sight of this valley. It shall ever remain on my mind as the most beautiful spectacle I ever beheld. The Great Salt Lake lies toward the north. The Utah Lake lies sixty miles to the south The valley is watered by the Jordan, Webber, and Beaver rivers, with several creeks. The whole valley is surrounded by snow-capped mountains, forming a complete basin. The land is very rich, producing wheat and corn in abundance, but there is no wood for 15 miles. The whole valley is occupied by the Mormons, who build their houses entirely of sun-dried bricks. Their city occupies more ground than Pittsburg, but each man has a large piece of ground around his dwelling. The bridges are all good, the streets and roads wide, and the fences very regular. There are about 10,000 Mormons here. They say that they will welcome to their society any good citizen, no matter what his religion may be.

They are building a church of stone, which is already one story high, and will be a fine building. They assemble every Sunday morning under a large shed. The Society is governed by a President, the twelve, and the seventy. The President and the twelve occupy the pulpit, and do all the preaching. I went this morning, when the bell rang, to church, where I saw a large assemblage, some dressed quite fashionably, and all clean and neat. A brass band first played a lively tune, and then the clerk rose and read several notices.

One man had lost his pocket-book—another had had his garden destroyed by cattle breaking into it. He then read off the names of persons to whom letters in the post-office were addressed, and several other items of that kind. He then announced that on next Tuesday they would have an anniversary feast, as it was the day of the month on which they arrived at their present snug quarters. He stated that the city would be roused early in the morning by the firing of cannon and the music of the brass band. A procession would then be formed, which would march out of town, and at 2 o'clock dinner would be served. The emigrants were all invited to attend.

They are very strict in the administration of justice. One of their number stole a pair of boots from an emigrant. He was sentenced to pay four times their value, and fined $50, and was compelled to work fifty days on the public roads. One of the men was sentenced to death for borrowing some property from a neighbor and selling it; but finally, owing to the intercession of his family, his sentence was commuted to banishment. When they first arrived they were very much troubled by some Indians, who killed their cattle and stole from them. They sent to remonstrate with them, and the Indians replied that their President was an old woman, and they would not mind him. They then sent out a company of soldiers, and killed a few of them, since which time they have not been again annoyed.

DEATH OF A RICH BANKER.

On Tuesday morning, Christopher Bullen, Esq., of the banking firm of Leyland, Bullen & Co., died at his residence near Liverpool. Mr, Bullen was probably one of the wealthiest men in Europe, for he has, it is confidently stated, left behind him cash to the amount of £5,000,000 or £7,000,000. Although so very rich he was parsimonious to an extreme degree. He resided in the house of his uncle, Mr. Leyland, the founder of the bank; but although a comparatively small mansion, he occupied only two or three apartments, and allowed the remainder to fall into decay, so much so that the parlors and drawing-rooms were tenanted by sparrows, swallows, and bats, the unglazed windows affording them free ingress and egress. He saw no company, courted no society, and indulged only in one taste—the purchase of pictures. His paintings are numerous, but he never hung them up, never exposed them, and they now remain as they did during his life-time piled up with their faces turned to the wall. For several years his health had been bad, and some time ago he paid a visit to Malta, Smyrna, &c., and returned greatly improved in constitution; but the expense distressed him, and it was only by a threat of legal proceedings that he was induced to pay the physician, who accompanied him, £700. Some time ago, a merchant in difficulties was lamenting to him the state of his finances, when he observed, "You are happier, much happier, than I am. You have got no money, but you have got good health: I have plenty of money, but I have bad health. I wish I could exchange with you."

IMPROVED MUSKET.

An improvement has been made in the musket in Prussia. The musket has no lock, and is loaded at the stock end of the barrel. The ball is long and cone-shaped, rounded at the big end. The barrel is slightly rifled, but the grooves are perfectly straight and not spiral as in the American gun. The ball is consequently thrown a much greater distance, none of the force of the powder being wasted in giving it a useless rotary motion. The common charge is one half of that used in the old percussion gun, and is said to carry the ball to its mark nine hundred yards. None of the powder is wasted, the fire being communicated from the side of the barrel, and not from the breach, effected by an ingenious contrivance. The part of the cartridge next the ball is filled with an explosive substance similar to that in a percussion cap. This is made to explode by the contact of a piece of steel about the length of an eightpenny nail, which passes from the outside of the barrel through the cartridge. The gun is called the "nail firer." It can be discharged by a common soldier eight times in a minute, and need not be taken from the shoulder to be reloaded. The best soldier cannot discharge the percussion gun more than three or four times in a minute, and in battle an officer cannot count on more than one discharge in that time.

HARD FIGHT WITH A POLAR BEAR.

It has before been stated, that the crew of a British fishing vessel had killed on the Labrador coast an enormous White Polar Bear, which was conveyed to Halifax, and there stuffed. Yesterday, says the Boston Transcript, his bearship arrived in this city in the brig Boston, his captors designing to exhibit or sell the monster, as might best conduce to their profit. We learn from Mr. David Dixon, one of the chief actors in the battle with his Polar Majesty, the following particulars of the fight:—

The vessel to which the crew in question belonged, was the Lord Exmouth, of Halifax. The scene was the verge of Labrador, near Greenland. Two of the crew of the Lord Exmouth were cruising in a boat, when they discovered the bear upon an Island. They immediately returned to the vessel, took in six others of the crew, and eight muskets, with which they returned to the vicinity of the Island. Upon approaching within gun shot, the bear perceived and came towards them. The first discharge wounded him in several places, but did not in the least check his approach. Finally, however, after receiving quite a number of balls in his body, he turned and slowly retreated, making his attackers shudder by the fierceness of his howling.

It was then proposed by Dixon, that they should land upon the Island, in order to consummate the victory. To this the majority of the crew demurred from fear. Three of the crew, however, including Dixon, landed, having armed themselves with two loaded guns apiece. The bear, as soon as he saw them upon land, turned about and began to approach, when six more balls were put into his body, without apparently checking his approach, before, however, he got near enough to harm them, Mr. Dixon succeeded in loading another gun. At this moment the bear presented his side, which he had not before done, and a bullet was lodged in his throat, which caused the animal to fall. It was more than half an hour, however, before they dared approach, as every minute the bear would, by a desperate effort, get upon his feet with the intention of reaching them. After it was deemed safe, they ventured near, and found him to be dead. He was with considerable labor taken to the vessel, and found to be sixteen feet long and to weigh 2200 pounds. Five hundred pounds of fat was taken from him in Halifax, and it was found that sixteen balls had lodged in his body. The contest lasted for an hour and a half, and the roars of the infuriated animal might have been heard for many miles.

A BURMAN BOY IN THE WATCH-HOUSE.

On Wednesday night, a lad aged about 14 years, who gave his name as George Francis, applied at the Centre Watch-House for shelter, under the following circumstances. He stated that he was born in Maulmain, Burmah, his father being an English soldier, and his mother a native of the country. About four years ago his mother died, and his father, on marrying again, gave him to an uncle in Java, with whom he resided until about eight months ago, when the uncle also died. He was then taken on board an American barque and brought to this port. After being kept on board for a week, he was told that he must take care of himself. While wandering about the streets he attracted the notice of a charitable person, who gave him shelter and partial employment until Wednesday, when he was again homeless. He walked the streets until the shades of night obliged him to seek the best shelter at hand—the Watch-House. He was taken to the Missionary Rooms, where his story was ascertained to be correct. He had attended Dr. Judson's school, and gave life sketches of the Doctor and his deceased lady. He is an intelligent, active boy, can talk in three languages, writes well, and gives interesting descriptions of the scenes and countries through which he has passed. Unless some charitable person cares for him, his refuge must be in the poor-house.

[Boston Traveler,

RAISING THE WIND.

Human ingenuity is always pregnant with devices to raise the wind when too lazy to work. The rogue Autolycus in the "Winter's Tale," cried out lustily for help, and then picked the pocket of the clown, who, like the Samaritan, came to assist him. The latest phase of this skillful roguery is told by the Cincinati Nonpareil, as having been played off there lately:—

A fellow goes on board of a steamer preparing to leave, when the passengers are on board, takes his seat amongst them, and is supposed to be a traveler himself. Soon he complains of the toothache. The pain gradually increases in intensity, the face of the suffering man is distorted with agony, the passengers sympathize with him, good-hearted lady passengers fumble their trunks for camphor, toothache drops, &c., which they offer, assuring the ailing man that they are specifics, and will cure him. They afford no relief whatever. From a dull pain it has grown acute and sharp, until the fellow fairly dances. Now is the time the confederate appears. A small mahogany box is opened, and a few drops of liquid upon a piece of cotton is inserted in the aching tooth. The pain ceases instantly, the healed man is profuse in his expressions of gratitude, and purchases two or three vials of the inestimable toothache drops. The other vaunts his liquid and soon effects a sale of the contents of his box. The two confederates meet afterwards and divide the spoils.

PROVISION FOR A WIDOW.—It will be remembered that a short time since the train of cars on the Philadelphia road ran off the track near Princeton, N. J., killing three persons, among whom was Mr. William Conover, the head carpenter in the employ of the Delaware and Raritan Canal Company. From the Trenton State Gazette we learn that in consideration of the long and faithful services of Mr. Conover, the railway and canal companies, in a joint board of the directors, have settled an annuity of $300 per annum upon his widow, besides releasing her house from a mortgage of $1000.

OIL SPRINGS.—A correspondent of the Fort Smith (Ark.) Herald, under date of Chickasaw Nation, Aug. 11, 1849, says:—

"Long before this, I contemplated visiting the Oil Springs, which I spoke of in my last, but rain and floods have prevented me, and I am unable to give you either a description of them or any analysis of their waters, except from hearsay. They are situated in this nation, about twenty-five miles in a North-west direction from Port Washita, and about three miles from it, on a stream of beautiful clear water, that has a fall, or successive falls, of near ninety feet. The oil exudes from the rock or cliff overhanging these falls in drops of the size of a goose-quill, having the taste, smell, and consistency of British oil. It has been told me that this oil and the water with which it mingles, has, by drinking and rubbing externally, effected some of the most astonishing cures of chronic rheumatism and mercurial affections that have ever been known. Persons have been carried there doubled up with disease or emaciated to skeletons, coming away, in a very short time, cured perfectly, with a new lease on dear life. In the vicinity of the Oil Spring resides a band of Caddoes and also a small band of Keichis. They are denominated wild or prairie Indians; neither tribe is over scrupulous about the appropriation of other people's property, particularly in horses; they are therefore troublesome neighbors, and not desirable acquaintances. Time, the great improver, will soon oblige these people to remove, and civilization will take up its abode at these waters, when their value will be duly appreciated by afflicted humanity."

A WOLF STORY.—A correspondent of the Boston Post, writing from Meredith Bridge, N. H., says:—

Fifty years ago these mountains were famous as the resort of bears and wolves, and the neighboring farmers were often troubled by the depredations of the latter ferocious animals. A man by the name of Folsom, who then lived at the foot of Mount Belnap, was aroused one night by what he supposed to be a fight between a neighbor's dog and his own; but on going out to part them he found himself face to face with a large wolf that, in attempting to carry off one of his pigs, had been attacked by the faithful watch dog. Folsom, physically speaking, was a very powerful man; but a fight with a 'ravenous wolf,' entirely weaponless as he was, with nothing but his bare hands, seemed rather a desperate chance, whatever might have been his muscular strength: but there was no backing out. Like Captain Elderberry at the sham fight, he must either "conquer or die"—and although it was a desperate struggle, he did conquer. Grasping the wolf by the throat with his left hand, he held him as firmly as in a vice, and it is said that he actually mauled him to death with his right fist, receiving for the exploit a bounty of thirty dollars from the town. The man, I am told, is still living at an advanced age, and known, from that time to this, by the cognomen of "Wolf Folsom."

IMPROVEMENT IN GUN CASTING.—A new method has been resorted to at the Cannon Foundry, near Pittsburg, for the production of guns. Instead of bringing them from the mould solid, and afterwards boring them, they are cast with the proper bore; the bore being carefully prepared so as to enclose a circle of cold water, which it receives and discharges in a continuous current, during the process of cooling, the object, probably, being to chill the inner surface more rapidly than the outer, and thereby give to it a greater density and strength. The plan is the suggestion of Lieut. Rodman, and two guns—one cast on the old and the other on the new plan—having been subjected to the usual test, the first exploded on the 84th, and the latter on the 255th round. This shows a great superiority over the common mode of making cannon, and if future experiments substantiate this successful one, Lieut. Rodman's invention will come into general use.

IRON STOREHOUSE FOR CALIFORNIA.—Messrs. Reany, Neafie & Co., of Kensington, have been engaged in manufacturing an iron Warehouse for the Messrs. Aspinwall. The dimensions are 50 feet long, 40 wide, and two and a half stories, or 35 feet high at the apex of the roof. There are four doors, one on each side and end, and 36 windows. The iron plates to form the sides are pierced for the rivets, fitted and marked and numbered, so that, on arriving at the place of destination, the whole can be put up in a very short space of time. At each corner, there are cast iron columns, of the proper patterns, and studs of the same material are placed on either side of the windows and doors of both stories, to which the iron plates will be riveted. The roof will be formed of galvanized iron, the sheets of which will be fitted, so that there will be but little trouble in doing this portion of the work on arriving out. The whole weight of the edifice, as estimated, will not be more than 30,000 pounds.

DO NOT RELY ON APPEARANCES.—We were informed yesterday, says the N. O. Picayune, by a person who stated it as a fact, that on the landing of the steamship Falcon, an individual came on shore without hat, coat or boots. After looking around him for some time, with a free and easy, independent kind of an air, he called to a drayman and requested him to take charge of a pair of saddle-bags, which were on board the vessel, and convey them to Hewlett's. With some hesitation the drayman complied with his request, but on attempting to lift the saddle-bags, he found he was unable to do so without assistance. The fact was, that they contained $40,000 in gold, which the coatless, hatless and bootless man had brought with him from California.

CHOLERA—Important Microscopical Investigation.—Dr. Brittan, lecturer on anatomy and physiology at the Bristol Medical School, in a series of investigations, undertaken in conjunction with Mr. J. G. Swayne, has observed the constant occurrence of certain peculiar bodies, hitherto undescribed, as characteristic constituents of cholera evacuations, and by a further series of experiments he has succeeded in demonstrating the important discovery of similar bodies in the atmosphere, &c., of districts infected with cholera.

Variety.

There is a man in Cincinnati, who is quite sane in every point but one; he fancies he can understand the hog language, and insists that he has even heard them concocting plans to take the city. He has repeatedly called at the Mayor's office and surprised him by the earnest and serious manner in which he made the communication, as he had known the singular being to have once been a worthy and respectable citizen. This man owned property near these hog-pens, and his business being of a public nature, it suffered in consequence of its vicinity to an offensive nuisance. Inquiry and subsequent facts prove that the annoyance so worked upon his weak mind as to entirely derange his reason.

It is a singular fact, says the Medical Times, that steel, dipped in the juice of the nettle, becomes flexible. Dr. Thornton, who has made the medicinal properties of wild plants his peculiar study, states that lint, dipped in nettle juice and put up the nostril, has been known to stay the bleeding of the nose when all other remedies failed, and adds, that 14 or 15 of the seeds, ground into powder, and taken daily, will cure the swelling of the neck, known by the name of goitre, without in any way injuring the general habit.

The London Patent Journal says, that M. Perinet, ex-Professor of the Hospital Militaire d'Instruction, has succeeded in preserving water in a sweet state, by placing a kilogramme and a half of black oxide of manganese in each cask of water containing 250 litres. He has kept this water for seven years in the same barrels, and exposed them to various temperatures; at the end of that time, he found it as limpid, free from smell, and of as good quality as at the beginning of the experiment. A 'kilogramme' is about 2 1-4 lbs—a 'litre' 2 1-2 pints.

Mr. R. O. Gurley, of Redding, Conn., has invented a beautiful and very unique machine for sharpening and setting saws of every description. No file nor hammer is used in the operation, but by the simple working of a toggle joint lever, the saw is sharpened and set at the same time. This machine is simple, cheap, and can sharpen five saws faster than one can be sharpened by any way at present in use for that purpose, and what is better, any person can, with a minute's instruction, sharpen the saw with the utmost correcness.

M. Vavin, who was appointed by the French Assembly to arrange the accounts of the ex-King, Louis Philippe, has terminated his labors. The landed property of the King is estimated at $41,666,000, producing only $83,300 per annum. His debts amount to about $5,000,000. The King has desired that each of his creditors shall receive a sum on account, and further that several of his most extensive estates should be sold for the payment of his debts.

In the course of a speech made by Lord Palmerston, on the affairs of Hungary, he gave expression to the following truth, which, when universally understood and acted upon, will revolutionize the world:—"It may be asked, what are opinions against armies. Why, my answer is, that opinions are stronger than armies. If they are founded in truth and justice, they will in the end prevail against the bayonets of infantry and 'the fire of artillery.'"

The mines of California have baffled all science, and rendered the application of philosophy entirely nugatory. Geologists and practical scientific men in the mines, have invariably been beaten by unskilled men, soldiers and sailors, and the like. The simple secret is, that gold has been thrown promiscuonsly by volcanic power, and distributed along the magin of streams, and the river beds, by mountain torrents, and it is the hard-working and lucky man who may restore it.

The Baton Rogue (La.) Advocate states that recently fire was discovered issuing from the ground in the lower part of the town, and that for the space of twenty or thirty feet square it appeared to be in a state of entire combustion. A sulphurous smell arose from it, and water, though applied freely, did not extinguish it. Ashes were at last used with success, but subsequent examination showed very little, if any, trace on the ground of the action of fire.

The great enterprise of connecting Philadelphia with St. Louis by railroad, is progressing favorably. Another link of 27 miles, in Ohio, has been put under contract, making, with the 23 contracted for in July, 57 miles now under contaact at that end. The contracts thus far have been made below the estimates of the Engineers. The distance by railroad from Pittsburgh to St. Louis will be 650 miles, or about one-half the distance by the rivers.

Radetzka, the Austrian conqueror of Italy, and the ablest of the Austrian generals, is eighty three years old. He is a Bohemian by birth, and of noble family, his title being Joseph Count Radetsky, of Radetz. He entered the Austrian army in 1784, and has followed the trade of war over 60 years. A man of extreme mental and physical vigor, it seems almost impossible that his convictions should so long remain in favor of despotism.

The Journal of Commerce is informed that a medical gentleman, of high standing in his profession, invariably prescribes ice, and ice only, for his patients, in dysentery, and in most cases with success. The ice is to be pounded small enough to swallow it, and the patient is to swallow a small quantity of it every three or four minutes, until the disease ceases.

A man who apparently had his leg crushed between two railroad cars, the other day, was seen to withdraw it, and hobbled off, with the use of a cane. After the expenditure of a vast amount of sympathy, by his fellow-passengers, it was ascertained that the unfortunate leg was a wooden one!

An English journal mentions that the family of Oliver Cromwell has just become extinct in the person of Mrs. Russell, daughter of the late Mr. Oliver Cromwell, the biographer of the Protector, from whom he descended in the direct line.

Our safety as eulogists lies among our commendations of the dead.

Great men lose somewhat of their greatness by being near us; ordinary men gain much.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches o learning and the higher refinements of education Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on th Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation o Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

THE AMERICAN PRISONERS IN JAPAN.

The United States man-of-war Preble recently visited the Islands of Japan, for the purpose of rescuing several American sailors who were there held as prisoners. A narrative of the sufferings of the men was compiled for the Chinese Repository from their depositions, and subsequently published in the Providence Journal. The following account of it, which we find in the Christian Watchman and Reflector, will give our readers an idea of the suspicion with which the Japanese look upon foreigners.

It was about the 5th of June, 1848, when three boats, containing sailors who had deserted their ship on account of ill treatment, landed for food and water on the coast of Yesso. Being refused, they put to sea again, and landed further north. Sheds were built for them and food given them, but a screen was put up and guarded by soldiers, to prevent their going into or seeing the adjoining country. "These soldiers," says the narrative, "were armed with swords and matchlocks, and their superiors were cased in mail and Japaned helmets or hats made of paper, and resembling broad-brimmed quaker hats; the men carried the match for their matchlocks at their sides."

Generously supplied with rice, on the 8th, the next day after they had landed, they went to sea and cruised down the coast. They perceived that the country everywhere was aroused. Finally, invited ashore, where mats were prepared for them, they were told that they might stay until the wind was fair to take them off. On attempting to leave in their boats, however, the next day, they found they were prisoners. They were told that officers wished to see them, that their boats were too frail for safety, and that, in twenty days, a vessel would be at their disposal. Their luggage was taken ashore and ticketed. "Five days thereafter," says tha narrative, "they were again removed to a prison, and so ridiculously afraid were the Japanese of foreigners looking at their possessions, that these fifteen unarmed sailors were conducted to their lodging through a file of armed soldiers lining both sides of the street."

At the end of the twenty days, they being all the time under guard and restrained from walking about, no vessel appeared. Another twenty days passed, and no vessel. It was now near the last of July, and they were informed that they would be kept until the next January. Their own boats were refused them. Two of the number attempted to escape, but were captured in the first village they entered for food, and were taken back. A while after, "on the occurrence of a quarrel, the guard nailed Bull into a grated crib by himself for ten days; the cage was too low for him to stand up, and when he hallooed to his comrades, violating the orders of his keepers not to speak, he was jammed at with a stick to compel him to be quiet; for four days out of these ten he was unable to eat."

During this time, two others attempted to escape, but were retaken on the coast, brought back, and caged with Bull. Here they remained twenty days, all the time fed through a hole just large enough to admit a cup. One of them was taken out once, and thrown on the ground. "Standing on him," says the narrative, "the Japanese bound his arms, and then raised him up and secured him to a post, where they beat him with a bight of a rope over his face and head: after which he was returned to his cage, at the intercession of his incensed companions, who endeavored to break out."

As the narrative grows interesting, we shall let it speak more at length for itself. Here is one extract:—

About the 10th of August, the men were all removed on board a junk, the three just mentioned being put into a cage between decks, only 5 feet high, 6 feet long, and 4 feet broad; the other twelve men were stowed in a second cage, 12 by 10 feet square, and high enough to stand up in. In these cribs they were kept during the passage to Nagasaki, where they arrived about September 1st; they made every objection to going ashore, and asked for their own boats, that they might try to reach China in them. Moreama, the Government interpreter, among other falsehoods, told them they should be carefully taken care of ashore, and in six weeks forwarded to Batavia in a Dutch ship. One could have a little more patience with a people like the Japanese, if to their cruelty in carrying out regulations which they suppose necessary for their national safety, they did not add such gratuitous mendacity to delude the unfortunates in their power. The men were questioned on board of the junk, and then carried to the "town house of Nagasaki," as they called it, in kago or chairs; as each man entered the door, he was compelled to step on a crucifix in the ground, and if he showed any dislike to tread on the sacred emblem, a Japanese attendant on each side pulled him back, or lifted him up, until both feet rested on it. McCoy was told that if any of the men had refused to go through this ceremony, he would have been put into an iron house, from which death would be his only exit. Boyd was pulled from one side to the other, as he showed some dexterity at dodging it, until he was forcibly fixed by his guard upon it. When in the town house they were made to squat down, and shortly a hissing sound announced the governor's approach. They told him in brief that they were shipwrecked Americans; but as it was now dark, the examination soon closed, and they were carried to a temple about a mile from the town, where they were lodged in a room surrounded by a fence 30 feet high, beyond which was a wall 8 or 10 feet high; their guard lodged, under the same roof, separated from them by a grating. These accomodations were not so bad and straight as the cages and junk.

In a day or two, they were again taken to the town house and questioned more particularly. Two of the prisoners had by this time learned Japanese enough to detect the misintrepretations of their answers. The examination continued during the next two days, when the Opperhoofd was present, and put them questions. He asked one of them what they came into the Japan seas for. The answer was, that they came in pursuit of whales. He asked if that was their only object, and if they did not come to spy out the country. They assured him they did not. He then asked if they ever ate whales, and other foolish questions. They were sent back to prison, being told they were spies come for no other purpose than to examine the country.

Six weeks passed, when the Opperhoofd told them permission for them to go had not yet come from Yeddo, but that a Dutch ship should wait for them twenty-five days outside the harbor. He kindly sent them coffee, sugar, wine, &c., and a piece of cloth for Bull. The prisoners, now well nigh discouraged, requested the Opperhoofd to make known their case to some American consul, if possible.

Time passed, and no relief came. McCoy escaped, traveled all night, hid himself in the bushes during the next day, and then made for the beach, but was re-captured, carried back to his prison, and questioned as to his object in spying out the land. We quote again:—

"He was put in stocks, and tied to the grating during the night, and the next day carried to the town house to undergo another examination, where the question as to his being a spy was again asked; though he told his keepers his only desire was to get aboard of the Dutch ship. He was taken thence to the common prison in the heart of the town, once the site of a church, and kept there by himself about three weeks. McCoy had by this time acquired so much knowledge of Japanese as to be able to talk with the people and his guard on most common subjects; but they were too carefully watched themselves to be free to tell him anything of importance. At the end of three weeks, thinking the Dutch ship had sailed, he despaired of ever getting away, and refused to take his food. His guard told him he must eat, for that doubtless the Emperor would give permission when he "thought good" for them to depart; and the Governor himself sent an officer to inquire the reason of his abstinence. On the fourth day (November 16,) he was taken to the town house in a kago, rather faint from his long fast, where he again saw his companions, and met Mr. Levyssohn. This gentleman informed them all that permission for their departure had not yet come, and that the ship had already waited five days beyond the twenty-five; he added that he had written to the American Consul at Batavia, and endeavored to cheer up the spirits of the disheartened men by telling them they were not among savages, and that there was no cause for fear, if release was long deferred. He also obtained a promise from the Japanese, that if McCoy behaved quietly he should be restored to his shipmates; which was done four days after."

Another month passed. An attempt at escape was made by burning through the floor of the prison, and digging under the board fence. Only three succeeded in getting out before the guard detected them. McCoy, Boyd and Bull took to the thickets behind the town, and went southwesterly towards the sea-shore. They reached it about 2 o'clock in the morning. The barking of a dog turned them from their course, so that day-light came before they could reach some boats they saw in a cove at a distance. They hid in the bushes during the day, and started for the shore in the night. They were now ravenous with hunger. They saw a peasant, and asked for something to eat. He invited them into his hut, set food before them, and went straitway for the police. They were pinioned at the table, and sent back to their old quarters. Here they were fettered in large stocks, McCoy's weighing about 300 lbs., and laid out in the yard all night. In the morning, wet and stiff with dew, they and all their companions were taken to the town house. "While proceeding thither," continues the narrative, "they imprecated the vengeance of their country upon their tormenters—who tauntingly replied,—'If any officers of your country come here, we will serve them as we did the American Commodore last year, who was knocked down at Yeddo by a soldier; if the Americans took no notice of that, why should they look after you, who are only poor sailors? You are here now, and cannot help yourselves. If your ships once come here, the priests will blow them to pieces.'"

After examination, the Governor said he was more convinced than ever that they were spies, and sent them all to prison, confining them in two small cages, which were enclosed in a larger one. That holding McCoy, Boyd, and Martin, was 18 by 8 feet square, and the other, holding all the rest, was 18 by 12, the two being about six feet apart. Both were offensive, full of vermin, exposed to the weather, and with nothing but a small hole to crawl through in getting in. "Lousy mats and a wash-stand" were the only furniture.

It was now the middle of December. One of the unfortunate men, a Hawaiian, hung himself in despair. His companions were not permitted to attend his burial, being scoffingly rejected. It was very cold. Snow and rain beat through the cages. No bedding, not even their own clothing, was allowed the prisoners. Ezra Goldthwait was taken ill about Christmas. He became delirious, with swelled, cracked, parched tongue, pain in the stomach, and frothing at the mouth. He had evidently been poisoned, and the doctor's prescriptions, full of suspicion, only augmented the malady. His only protection all through his illness was a thin shirt and trowsers. His keeper even refused him his own blanket, although the snow beat upon him as he lay dying in his foul and noisome cage. He died at last, January 24th, the Japanese New Year. His surviving companions were scoffingly refused permission to attend his funeral, as they had been that of the Hawaiian. Waters was attacked in the same way, but refused the doctor's prescriptions, and so got well. His guards told him one day that his coffin was made, his grave dug, and the day appointed for his burial!

Their food was now rice and sweet potatoes for breakfast, rice and occasionally a few ounces of fish for dinner, and rice with boiled sea-weed for supper. Tea was their drink. Their captivity of course became monotonous and irksome. Their only book was the Bible, and that they dared not read, fearing it would be taken from them. "A Japanese culprit," says the narrative, "was decapitated near their cage one day, but as only one could look out of the hole at a time McCoy alone saw a lad running by the door with a head in his hand; the guards to scare them intimated strongly that such might be their fate, but Martin says he cared very little about the threat. McCoy did most of the talking and had become rather intimate with one of the guards, who, as a great secret, told him there was another American in prison in Nagasaki."

The day of deliverance was now close at hand. On the 17th of April, 1849, more than ten months after they were first captured, a single gun was heard in the distance. This indicated the approach of a vessel. The forts soon gave the alarm with their guns, and the country was aroused. The prisoners commenced cheering in the fullness of their joy. The guard was cautioned not to tell the prisoners of the vessel's arrival, as one of them overheard, but that the forts were only scaling their guns. On the 21st, they learned that the vessel was an American man-of-war come for them, but that they would have to wait 40 or 50 days for an answer to come from Yedo. This was a terrible blow.

On the 24th, several high officers visited the prison; on the 26th, having given up all their clothes and bedding, the prisoners were carried to the town-house, where they met M'Donald, who had been long imprisoned in another island, though with less hardship and cruel treatment. They were all taken to Desima, where, says the narrative, "they were furnished with an excellent dinner—a banquet to them after fare of sea-weed, rice and fish—and allowed to amuse themselves by walking about the factory grounds, while the boat was getting ready. On taking leave, they returned their thanks to Mr. Levysshon, for his kindness to them, which indeed was shown in so many ways, and at so many times, as to call for their acknowledgements and that of all their countrymen."

McDonald's narrative is brief. He was cruising along a large island, when he landed and was captured on the 2d of July, 1848. He was taken to a town called Soya, on the island of Yesso, about 25 miles distant. He remained here a fortnight, and was then taken to Matsmai, where he arrived, after a passage of 15 days, on the 6th of September. This place, though not on the map, is supposed to be in the north-eastern part of Yesso. He was not allowed to go ashore, nor to speak with any of the people, but was otherwise treated kindly. He left Matsmai on the 1st of October, and reached Nagasaki on the 17th, when he was imprisoned in the "temple." He was taken to the town house twice, and made to go through ceremonies similar to those already mentioned. The image, in front of the door, on which he and the others were ordered to step, he says is the "Devil of Japan." It is about a foot wide, and represented, as well as he could see, a rude picture of the virgin and child—a Catholic image, of course, for which the Japanese have a most deadly contempt. On asking for his Bible, his keeper told him "not to speak of the Bible in Japan, as it was not a good book." One of the questions put to him at the town house was, if he believed there was a God in heaven. He replied, "Yes, I believe in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." He was kept imprisoned in Nagasaki about six months. As he was a tolerable scholar, he was permitted to spend much of his time in teaching a few natives the English language—a good indication, and one that shows the Japanese not to be altogether insensible to what is useful, even if it do conflict with their usual policy. McDonald's narrative concludes as follows:

"The arrival of the Preble caused no little excitement among the government people, and the next morning (April 18th) his guard showed him a list of the troops which had come into town in consequence, to the number of 3504 men, making, with the ordinary garrison of 650, and those previously arrived, nearly 6000 troops, besides their followers—an extraordinary force. The day before his liberation, he was requested to give the relative rank of the commander of the Preble, for the information of his keepers, which he did by counting in the order of succession from the highest chief in the United States. "First," he says, "I gave the people, (which they could not comprehend,) then the President, Secretary of the Navy, Commodore, Captain and Commander; this rank was so high as apparently to excite their surprise." His information probably led to the change in the officer who went aboard the Preble the day of her departure."

JOHN ROGERS' FAMILY PUT IN THE SHADE.—We are informed by one who has just returned from the White mountains, that while on his journey from Portland to Conway, the driver stopped the stage to show the travelers a rare sight. In front of a little cottage near by were eight rosy children, who, on seeing the stage before the door, cried out to those in the house, "to come out and get some cakes and pennies," when out rushed eleven other children of the two parents, who soon made their appearance in the interesting group. The oldest child, as our informant was told by his father, was only seventeen years of age.

A GOOD SERMON.

It should be brief; if lengthy, it will steep
Our hearts in apathy, our eyes in sleep;
The dull will yawn, the chapel-lounger dose,
Attention flag, and memory's portals close.

It should be warm—a living altar-coal,
To melt the icy heart, and charm the soul;
A lifeless, dull harangue, however read,
Will never rouse the soul or raise the dead.

It should be simple, practical and clear;
No fine-spun theory to please the ear;
No curious lay, to tickle lettered pride,
And leave the poor and plain edunified.

It should be tender and affectionate,
As his warm theme who wept lost Salem's fate;
The fire law, with words of love allayed,
Will sweetly warm, and awfully persuade.

It should be manly, just and rational,
Wisely conceived, and well expressed, withal,
Not stuffed with silly notions, apt to stain
A sacred desk, and show a muddy brain.

It should possess a well-adapted grace
To situation, audience, time, and place;
A sermon formed for scholars, statesmen, lords,
With peasants and mechanics ill accords.

It should with evangelic beauties bloom,
Like Paul's at Corinth, Athens, or at Rome;
Let some Epictetus and Sterne esteem;
A bleeding Jesus is the Gospel theme!

It should be mixed with many an ardent prayer
To reach the heart, and fix and fasten there;
When God and man are mutually addressed,
God grants a blessing, man is truly blessed.

It should be closely, well-applied, at last,
To make the moral nail securely fast;
"Thou art the man!" and thou alone, wilt make
A Felix tremble, and a David quake.

AN INTERESTING INCIDENT.

An incident of the Cholera occurred in Bangor a few days since, which for several reasons we think worth recording. Among the households which had been entered and stricken by the fatal disease, was that of Mr. Hangley, a worthy Irishman, who has long been employed by the Commissioner of Streets. His wife, a warm-hearted, motherly woman, devotedly attached to children, and self-sacrificing to promote their welfare and happiness, was taken with the Cholera and died and was buried on Thursday, Sept. 20th. Next a lovely little daughter, seven years of age, was taken sick, and she too died, and her body was laid out and her limbs adjusted in the embrace of the King of Terrors. The father applied to Alderman Wingate for a coffin, but for some cause it could not be had immediately, and its delivery was postponed for an hour or two; during this time Mr. Hangley returned home, when the supposed dead child stretched forth her arms, with the exclamation, "Oh, Father! I have been to Heaven, and it is a beautiful place."

After the surprise and the excitement of the girl had subsided, she gave a relation of what she had seen, as she expressed it, "in Heaven."

She saw her mother in Heaven, and she was taking care of little children, many of whom she called by name, and among them she said were four children of Uncle Hangley, and three children of Uncle Casey's. "Aunt Lynch is not there now, but she will be to-morrow; and on Sunday I shall go back again."

"But," said an elder sister, "it cannot be so, dearest, for there are but two of Uncle Casey's children dead."

"Yes, I saw three of them in Heaven, and dear mother was taking care of them. All were dressed in white, and all were very happy, and the children playing. Oh! it was beautiful there; and I shall go there again next Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock."

Mr. Hangley immediately informed Mr. Wingate that his daughter was not dead, when he, in company with Dr. Morrison, visited the house, and the little girl related substantially the same story. It seems, too, that shortly after this relation of the little girl of what she had seen and heard in Heaven, a message came from Mr. Casey, in Carmel, giving information of the death of another child, and inviting them to attend the funeral.

Of the four children of her Uncle Hangley, two died in Bangor, and two were drowned on their passage from Ireland.

We called on Saturday to see and talk with this little girl, but she was very feeble, and just then in a drowse, and we would not allow her to be disturbed. She is said to have a very thoughtful and serious countenance, and to be a very interesting child. She had no wish to live, but preferred returning to her mother. The father and sister are seriously, but very happily impressed with the relations of this sweet child, and joyfully believe the story she tells. Their house is a pattern of neatness, and they all possess hearts overflowing with affection, and are sincerely happy on account of their heavenly messenger.

"I was sorry," said Mr. H. to Dr. Morrison, in the honest, truthful simplicity of his heart, "when my good wife died, but I'm not now, but only wish to be with her." The elder sisters, too, live in joyful hope of meeting at length, and they care not how soon, if it be God's time, their dear mother in heaven, where she has been seen by their angel sister, who has been permitted to return to the earth and make the fact known to them.

Since the above was published, there have been a great many inquiries respecting this little girl, some of which we will now answer.

Although at the time of the seeming death of this child it was supposed that her Aunt Lynch was dangerously ill, she was alive, not having the cholera, but was attacked with dysentery. But she died the next day as stated.

On Sunday afternoon, Mr. Daniel Warren, a very worthy religious man, who has been much among the cholera patients, and feeling, perhaps, a little moved by curiosity, called to see the little girl, and addressed her cheerfully, and told her that she appeared better and would soon be well, and get out in a day or two.

'But I'm going to mother again at 4 o'clock,' she quietly and softly said.

'When? to-morrow?'

'No, to-day'

Mr. Warren endeavored to turn her attention to hopeful prospects of recovery; but the little sufferer was fast sinking away—the death rattle was heard, and she soon ceased to breath, her pulse stopped, and the fixedness of death was impressed on her beautiful countenance. She was dead.

Mr. Warren looked at the town clock in the distance, from the window, for there was no clock in the house, and it was 4 o'clock.

While pondering upon, to him, the singular coincidence in this case, and about half an hour had passed, new signs of life appeared, and again the spirit of the sweet girl returned. She asked for water, and said she was tired, and sunk away into a quiet sleep.

Since then she has been gradually recovering, but her eldest sister, who watched her so tenderly, and who would so willingly have accompanied her blessed mother in heaven, was the next taken with the cholera, and the following day died and was buried.

The father of this girl is ignorant, yet a fine specimen of a pure, warm heart, with all the unsophisticated simplicity and truthfulness of nature. He is poor. He had a large family; and he says that for the whole season he had but 2 lbs. of butter in his house, and they only had meat twice. They had lived almost wholly upon bread and tea.

"There were many of them," he said, "and his own hands must earn their living, and by prudence a barrel of flour would last them four weeks, and he must do what he could for himself, and the children, and they all were quite happy. The little boys had by their labor picked up the boards out of which his dwelling had been constructed, and he hoped, after a time, to have it all their own. Perhaps a more united, loving and contented family, where all were willing to do and suffer for each other, cannot be found. Such are the simple facts in the case, which we leave, for the present, without comment or attempted explanation.

MISSIONARY SACRIFICES.

When the Rev. Mr. V——, of the Church Missionary Society, received his instructions before the Committee, at the Church Missionary House, he manifested such a lively disposition, and expressed himself in so impressive and affecting a manner, that a gentleman present followed him out of the room, feeling desirous to obtain some information from him respecting his family. He asked, "Have you a father living?" Mr. V—— replied, "I have." "Is your mother also alive?" He answered, "Yes." "Have you any brothers and sisters?" The answer was, "There are ten of us in the family." The next question was a very natural one:—"Did they give you up willingly?" Mr. V—— replied, he trusted that he could say they did, adding, "On the morning that I left home, we all met round the domestic altar. My father, in prayer, commended me to the guidance, and keeping, and blessing of our covenant God; and, when we arose from our knees, I believe that one sentiment pervaded every breast. I believe that one and all could say, 'We love you, our son, our brother, most tenderly; but we all love Jesus Christ far more, and are very thankful that one of our number is called to the high privilege of making known His unsearchable riches to the heathen."

When the Rev. Mr. W——, of the same Society, had fully determined to go forth as a missionary, he could not make up his mind to tell his aged father of what he was going to do, as he knew it would cost him so much to part with him. He did tell his sister, and he met with this reply: "My dear brother, I have often prayed the Lord of the harvest to raise up laborers, and to send them forth into his harvest; but I have never prayed, I never can pray, that he may send you."

A short time before his departure, he put into the hand of the same friend to whom he had mentioned the words of his beloved sister, a letter, which he had just received from his father, in answer to the one in which he had made known to him, for the first time, his intention of going as a missionary to India. In the beginning of the letter were very strong expressions of affection, on the part of the father for his son, and then went on to say, in these simple and touching terms, "If the Lord hath need of you among the heathen, I dare not oppose your going forth among them, for I know what he has done for me. He gave his adorable Son, not merely to live for me, but to die as an atonement for my sin." And he bade his son go forth, with a father's blessing on his head; declaring that, as long as he lived, he would not fail to supplicate the God of all grace to be with his child, and to prosper the work of his hands.

A day or two before he sailed, in a letter dated Deal, we have this description of his departure from his father's house: "Painful, most painful, it was, to tear myself away from my much loved and very precious home. I could not bear the pain of leave-taking; rising early, I secretly withdrew." Through a half-open door, at the early dawn, the son stood gazing upon his aged father as he slept, and then quitted the house, undiscovered, as he trusted, by any member of his beloved family. But a faithful servant-girl, who had been, as he says, in "happy days gone by, a pupil in my Sunday school, (and God had blessed my counsels to her,) saw me, and she, poor girl, hung upon me like a sister, and would not be pacified without sobbing out her tearful farewell. As to myself," he added, "my nerves, which have sometimes been braced up to immovable firmness, utterly gave way, and I wept as I had never wept before. But I have not lost my best friend. Our Master, faithful and true, who suffers me to draw nigh to him, apportions my strength to my day, and will not leave me nor forsake me, as I trust, till he has made me more than a conqueror, through himself who loveth me."

This devoted missionary never returned to his native land, and to his happy home. His mortal remains lie buried beneath the burning sands of India. He died of jungle fever, after ten days of severe suffering. The enemy of souls strove hard to shake his faith, but, for some hours previous to his departure, he was permitted to enjoy the sweetest peace of mind; and, in the firm faith and hope of everlasting life, through the sole merits of his Redeemer, he entered into his rest.

THE SISTERS.

The following account of a scene in the slave market of Constantinople is taken from a work entitled "Wayfaring Sketches."

"A most interesting group presented itself before us; two young female slaves, both with most pleasing countenances, stood together, closely embraced, the arm of one closely round the neck of the other; their attitude, as well as the strong likeness between them, pointed them out as sisters. By their side was an African slave-dealer, in whose furious countenance it seemed impossible to discern a trace of human feeling. He was armed with a large, heavy stick, with which he drove them to and fro, literally like a herd of animals. Three or four Turks were discussing, with tolerable animation, the price of one of the women; but the bargain had been struck just before we came in, and one of the party, a stout, good-looking man, was paying down the money. When this was completed, with an imperious movement of his hand he motioned to his newly-purchased slave to follow him. It was the youngest and most timid of the two sisters whom he had selected. Nothing could be more painful than to watch the intense, the terrified anxiety, with which both had followed the progress of the sale; and now it was concluded, and they knew that the moment of separation was arrived, she whose fate had been sealed, disengaged herself, and turning round, placed a firm grasp, and gazed into her eyes. Not words, nor tears, could have expressed one-half of the mute, unutterable despair that dwelt in that long, heart-rending gaze. It was hard to say which was the most eloquent of misery; but the Turk was impatient; he clapped his hands together. This was a well-known signal. A slight tremor shook the frame of the young slave; her arms fell powerless at her side, and she turned to follow her master. The voiceless but agonizing farewell was over. In another moment we could distinguish her slender figure threading its way through the crowd, in company with other slaves belonging to the Turk. Her sister had hid herself behind her companion, and now sat on the ground, her head sunk upon her folded arms."

And just such scenes may be witnessed in our own free land, ten thousand times in a year.

ANSWER TO A CHALLENGE.

The eccentric H. H. Breckenridge, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, when a young man, was challenged to fight a duel by an English officer, whom he answered as follows:—

"I have two objections to this duel matter; the one is, lest I should hurt you, and the other, lest you should hurt me. I do not see any good it would be to put a ball through your body. I could make no use of you when dead for any ordinary purpose, as I would a rabbit or a turkey. I am no cannibal, to feed on the flesh of men. Why, then, shoot down a human creature, of whom I could make no use? A buffalo would make better meat; for though your flesh might be young and tender, yet it wants the firmness and consistency which take and retain salt. At any rate, it would not do for a long sea voyage.

"You might make a good barbacue, it is true, being of the nature of a raccoon or opossum; but people are not in the habit of barbacuing any thing that is human now. As to your hide, it is not worth taking off, being little better than a two year old calf.

"So much for you. As for myself, I do not like to stand in the way of any thing that is hurtful. I am under the impression that you might hurt me. This being the case, I think it most advisable to stay at a distance. If you want to try your pistols, take some object, a tree, or a barn-door about my dimensions. I you hit that, send me word, and I will acknowledge that, if I had been in the same place, you might have hit me."

JUPITER AND THE SHEEP.

The sheep was doomed to suffer much from all the animals. She came to Jupiter, and prayed him to lighten her misery. Jupiter appeared willing, and said to the sheep, "I see, indeed, my good creature, I have made thee too defenseless. Now choose in what way I may best remedy this defect. Shall I furnish thy mouth with terrible teeth, and thy feet with claws?"

"Ah, no," said the sheep, "I do not wish to have any thing in common with the beasts of prey."

"Or," continued Jupiter, "shall I infuse poison into thy spittle?"

"Alas!" replied the sheep, "the poisonous serpents are so hated."

"What, then, shall I do? I will plant horns in thy forehead, and give strength to thy neck."

"Not so, kind father. I might be disposed to butt like the he-goat."

"And yet," said Jupiter, "thou must thyself be able to injure others, if others are to be aware of injuring thee."

"Must I?" sighed the sheep. "Oh, then, kind father, let me be as I am. For the ability to injure will excite, I fear, the desire. And it is better to suffer wrong than to do wrong."

Jupiter blessed the good sheep, and from that time forth she forgot to complain.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 1, 1849.

"NOT THE JEWISH BUT THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH."

Such is the title of a Sermon, preached somewhere in Wisconsin, by M. Bennett, a copy of which has been placed in our hands. We know nothing of the author, having never heard of him before; but we are willing to say, that he has managed the argument for the first day of the week with all the ability the subject admits of; it requires a great deal. We have been requested to give a review of this production; and we shall attempt it, although it will occupy more room than we like to spare, besides subjecting us to the necessity of repeating what we have written scores of times.

The author takes the ground, that there is a distinction between the sabbatic institution and the day on which we are required to observe it. From this position it would, of course, follow, that God "blessed and sanctified," not the day, but the institution. But what saith the Scripture? "God blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." Exod. 20: 11. In the original Hebrew it is still more emphatic—"God blessed the DAY of the rest, or Sabbath." And it is worthy of note, that that which God directly enjoins in the fourth commandment, is that men should remember and keep holy, not the sabbatic institution, but the Sabbath day, (the day of the rest.) It is clear, therefore, that the fourth commandment enjoins the observance of a DAY—of that particular day which God sanctified. It does not give man a license to sanctify one for himself, and then enjoin him to keep that holy. The only point remaining to be determined is, What day of the week did God sanctify? The answer is one which none but an infidel can deny. It was the seventh or last day of the first week of time. This is positively asserted by Moses in Gen. 2: 3. The reason of his sanctifying it was "because that in it [in that very same day] he had rested from all his work." It was, therefore, God's restday, or God's Sabbath day. And, at the risk of being charged with tautology, we say again, and wish it to be distinctly noted, that what the fourth commandment enjoins is the keeping holy of God's Sabbath day. Not that the seventh day of the first week of time is always to be kept holy, for that would be impossible. None but Adam and Eve ever kept that day. But the injunction is that God's Sabbath day should be remembered, that is, commemorated, in its weekly return.

The idea that the fourth commandment looks rather to the institution of the Sabbath, than to the day on which it is to be observed, though advocated by a host of divinity doctors, was got up for no other purpose but to justify men in their wicked departures from God's law. They talk of the institution of the sabbatic rest. Well, who ever heard of one taking rest, and yet not consuming any portion of time in doing so? How is such a thing possible? Can it even be conceived of? How then can the fourth commandment enjoin the observance of a sabbatic rest, without sanctioning some portion of time as lawful to be observed for the purpose? The thing is utterly impossible. Hence the only question is, whether the commandment leaves every man to select the time for himself, or whether it also appoints the time. What we have said shows that the time is specifically appointed. As a wise legislator, God would appoint the time, if for no other reason than to secure uniformity. It would be a great evil if men should disagree in regard to the time of observing a festival that occurred only once a year. The all-wise God was, therefore, careful to designate the exact times for the annual observances of the Jews. How much greater would be the confusion, if men should disagree about the time of a festival occurring so often as every seven days. But God had another and very important reason for selecting the day of his own rest as the proper time for men to sabbatize, as we shall see hereafter.

But let us proceed with our author. He argues that the Sabbath is not a positive, but a moral duty:—

> "That any enlightened Christian could believe the precept, enjoining the Sabbath, to be positive and not moral, is to me unaccountable. For, 1st. It is in the Decalogue. 2d. It is of general application, if it has any at all. Is it not inconsistent to believe, that He who is infinite in wisdom could err? Would it not be a great error to intrench a positive and temporary precept in the midst of those which are confessedly moral and indestructible?"

The author here takes for granted, that because a precept is positive, it must necessarily be temporary. We are not of this way of thinking. A precept may be both positive and perpetual. If so, we do not see that it would be "a great error to intrench it in the midst of those precepts which are confessedly moral and indestructible." Our opinion is briefly this, that a positive precept is just as enduring and indestructible as the system to which it belongs, or of which it makes a part. For instance, Baptism and the Lord's Supper are both positive institutions. The system to which they belong is the gospel dispensation; they will, therefore, continue to be binding as long as the gospel dispensation continues. They cannot be set aside one moment sooner; for "as oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show forth the Lord's death TILL HE COME." Till the second coming of Christ, therefore, they must continue in force. Again, the ordinance of the red-heifer, the law concerning the scape-goat, the burnt offerings, the sin offerings, and the numerous institutions of the Levitical service, were all positive institutions. But it was impossible that they should be set aside, or done away, till the Mosaic Economy—the system to which they belonged—was ended. They were necessarily as lasting as the system of which they made a part. Now, does the Bible furnish us with no other system of religion, besides Judaism and Christianity? Judaism and Christianity both originated in the need which man, by reason of his apostacy, had of a Saviour. The one was a foreshadowing of the Saviour; the other an exhibition of him as having actually come to bring redemption to his people. But previous to the apostacy, and therefore previous to any need which man had of a Saviour, he was under a system of religion, "by which he, and all his posterity, were bound to personal, exact, entire, and perpetual obedience." This system was the Moral Law, "which, after his fall, continued to be a perfect rule of righteousness; and, as such, was delivered by God upon Mount Sinai in ten commandments, and written on two tables." To this system belongs the Sabbath. Now, in our opinion, it was no greater error to "intrench" a positive precept in the midst of this system, than it was to intrench Baptism and the Supper in the midst of Christianity, or the law of burnt sacrifices in the midst of Judaism. So far from being an error, it was, in our opinion, consummate wisdom. For the design of a positive institution is to promote more perfect conformity to the system of which it makes a part. The design of Baptism and the Supper is to promote more perfect conformity to Christianity. The design of the positive rites of the Levitical Economy was to promote more perfect conformity to that system. And, by parity of reasoning, the design of the Sabbath is to promote more perfect conformity to the Moral Law. God acted wisely, therefore, when he intrenched this positive precept "in the midst of those which are confessedly moral and indestructible." It is not a temporary precept; it will continue to endure as long as the system shall last of which it makes a part. And how long will that be? "Verily, I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Matt. 5: 18.

Now let us see how the author proves that the Sabbath is a moral, rather than a positive institution. He finds some fault with the various definitions which have been given of a positive precept, and then gives one himself. "A positive precept," says he, "imposes a duty on intelligent creatures, who, irrespective of the precept, have no moral interest in attending to such duty." After a few examples illustrative of the correctness of his definition, he says:—

> "A moral precept requires a duty of intelligent creatures, who irrespective of the precept have a moral interest in attending to such duty.
>
> "No man can neglect to love God and his neighbor, to be kind to strangers, to be chaste, candid, truthful, honest, and benevolent, towards all, without sustaining moral injury. The neglect will induce greater distraction and perversion of his moral nature, and hence he will be more miserable in himself, and the agent of misery to others. No people, as history in the case shows, can plunge into the dark and ominous shadows of idolatry, without dwarfing, perverting, ruining, their moral natures. And we shall see that if a moral precept requires duties which we have a moral interest in attending to, that requiring a sabbatic rest is moral and applicable to all our race.
>
> "Are our kind sympathies and better affections excited and strengthened, by often consulting and laboring together for some great interest, common to all? The Sabbath and its duties bring us thus together. Are habits of cleanliness, civility, and general good manners, induced by frequent happy, but grave and venerable assemblies? From Sabbath to Sabbath such assemblies convene to join in the imposing worship of Almighty God. Do man and beast require frequent respite from wasting toil? For this the Sabbath is mercifully provided. Does the poor dependent, sinking under the heavy hand of his grasping employer, require frequent and 'sweet release?' The Sabbath is a rest to all. Are we covetous and earth-tending in our minds; moving with greater momentum, as we have been longer without interruption in this downward tendency? The Sabbath continually interposes a barrier to the gathering force of this death stream, rolls back the tide of perverted affections, restores us to quiet self-control, and prepares us to make a better estimate of all our interests, temporal and eternal.
> "Finally, is it expedient and necessary for us, as subjects of the divine government, often to perform such acts as are practical, public and abiding acknowledgements of allegiance to the King Immortal? A community simultaneously breaking away from worldly avocations, dismissing secular care, desisting from their ardent pursuit of cherished interests, as if all were arrested by the power of Divinity, is such acknowledgment with an emphasis and energy that arrests and controls the headlong course of a revolted world. Surely, then, it must promote the moral interests of all men in all ages, to observe the holy Sabbath. And if the command to keep the Sabbath holy, were not in the decalogue, or had it not been written on stone, by the finger of God, yet it would, from the nature of things, be moral and applicable to every man."

Now, what wretchedly loose reasoning all this is! Who doubts that we have a moral interest in cultivating "habits of cleanliness, civility, and general good manners?" Who doubts that we have a moral interest in assembling together for "the imposing worship of Almighty God?" Who doubts that we have a moral interest in granting to man and beast "frequent respite from wasting toil?" Who doubts that we have a moral interest in having some check opposed to the "covetous and earth-tending" disposition of our hearts? Who doubts that it is "expedient and necessary for us, as subjects of the divine government, often to perform such acts as are practical, public, and abiding acknowledgments of allegiance to the King Immortal?" And who doubts that we have a moral interest in attending to all these things, irrespective of any precept enjoining them? But have we a moral interest in getting up a Sabbath—a regular hebdomadal season of rest—for the purpose of attending to these duties, irrespective of any precept enjoining it? That is the question. Are not these duties binding, irrespective of any sabbatic rest? Is it not our duty to cultivate civility and good behavior at all times? Ought not the covetous and earth-tending disposition of our hearts to be held in check daily? Ought not the labors of man and beast to be tempered and moderated every day, so that the rest of the night will fully restore their energies, without the necessity of every seventh day in addition? And what though the Sabbath secures an opportunity of attending to the public worship of Almighty God? Is it certain that we have any moral interest in attending to this every seventh day, any more than in setting apart some portion of every day for the same purpose? Now it strikes us that Mr. Bennett has fallen into the mistaken notion, that the Sabbath itself is a moral institution, simply because the performance of some moral duties in connection with it, is necessary to secure the full benefit of it. And we are not sure but we could utterly explode the distinction between moral and positive institutions in this way. Let us see. The Lord's Supper affords opportunity for serious self-examination. It calls for the exercise of repentance in view of our sins. It excites the heart to a grateful contemptation of the goodness of God. It requires a diligent cleansing of ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, that we may approach the ordinance with clean hands. And have we not a moral interest in attending to all these things, irrespective of any precept commanding them? Ergo, according to the logic of Mr. B., the Lord's Supper is a moral, and not a positive institution.

That the Sabbath serves the benefit of "the poor dependent, sinking under the heavy hand of his grasping employer," by granting him "frequent and sweet release," we have no doubt. The God-breathed humanity of the institution is sufficiently obvious to every one. But that the exhausted energies of the laboring man would not be just as effectually recruited by a different arrangement, is far from being obvious to our minds. If he should work but eight hours a day, instead of ten, we do not see but what the system would wear as long as it would by working ten hours, and resting one entire day in every seven. In fact, he would be the gainer of four hours' rest by the exchange. And if such an arrangement would serve the purposes of his nature equally well, what moral interest can he have in observing a day of rest, irrespective of the precept which enjoins it? To say the very least, there is room for debate, whether he has not a greater moral interest in moderating and shortening the time of his toils every day. And if there is thus room for debate, it is not a very sagacious conclusion which our author comes to, "that if the command to keep the Sabbath holy were not in the decalogue, yet it would, from the nature of things, be applicable to every man."

So in regard to the spiritual wants of our nature. If two hours spent in devotion every day, would serve to keep the soul in communion with God just as well as twelve hours on the Sabbath, we see not what moral interest man would have in keeping the Sabbath, irrespective of the precept which enjoins it. And that the daily sequestration of so much time would answer the purpose, is true, for aught we can see to the contrary. It is true, that when we come to look at the practical working of these two arrangements, we shall find the difference to be vastly in favor of the Sabbath. But then it may be argued—and very justly for aught we can discover—that this difference in favor of the Sabbath obtains, not because the setting apart of one day in seven is, in the nature of things, better adapted to man, but rather because he does not occupy his time every day wisely and rightly. All the inference that can be drawn, therefore, from the practical working of the two different arrangements is, that man has a moral interest, irrespective of any precept enjoining it, in occupying his time every day in a wiser and better manner than he does; and that he ought, consequently, to spend less time each day in labor, and more in devotion. To infer the necessity of going on in the same beaten track, and of keeping a day of rest once a week to correct the evil, is not warranted by any rules of logic with which we are acquainted.

The London Post-Office and the Sunday.—We learn from English papers, that the agitation against opening the London Post-Office on Sundays for the transmission of letters through the metropolis, continues to be vehement and unabated. It is believed, however, that the post-office authorities will persevere in the present practice, in spite of the opposition. One curious fact has been brought to light by the discussion of the subject, which is, that the Archbishop of Canterbury, with many other high functionaries, now enjoys the privilege of obtaining his letters on Sunday. How difficult it is to secure uniformity and consistency in observing a day for the Sabbath, which has no divine saction, but stands solely upon human authority.

MINUTES

OF THE TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SOUTH-WESTERN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

The South-Western Association met at the Seventh-day Baptist Meeting-House on Lost Creek, in Harrison Co., Va., on the 11th day of October, 1849, at 11 o'clock A. M. Bro. Samuel D. Davis preached the opening discourse, from John 17: 20, 21. After sermon, the preacher called upon the Association to organize, which was immediately done by appointing Eld. Peter Davis, Moderator of the meeting, Bro. Wm. F. Randolph, Clerk, and Bro. Jacob Davis, Assistant Clerk. These officers having taken their places, after reading the Constitution, the church letters were called for, and visiting brethren were invited to a seat in the Association, and to take part in its deliberations. The Moderator was authorized to appoint the Standing Committees for the session, and the following were appointed accordingly:—

On Preaching—Eli Bond, Wm. Kennedy.

On the State of Religion—Eli Vanhorn, Lodowick H. Davis.

On Resolutions—Levi Bond, George Ford, Jesse J. Davis.

Wm. F. Randolph was appointed Corresponding Secretary, and Isaac F. Randolph, Treasurer.

The minutes having been read and approved, the Association adjourned to meet at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning. Prayer by S. D. Davis.

Sitxh-day Morning—The Association met pursuant to adjournment, when the meeting was opened with prayer by the Moderator.

Bro. James Simpson, from Ohio, appeared, and after taking a seat in the meeting, the church letters were read, from which the following statistics were taken:—

Lost Creek, Va.—S. D. Davis, licentiate; Abel Bond, Wm. Kennedy, deacons; Thos. B. Bond, Jacob Davis, Clerks. Added 5, dismissed 9, deceased 1; total 61. Constituted 1805. Communion 2d Sabbath in March, and once in three months. Messengers—S. D. Davis, Wm. F. Randolph, Jesse M. Davis, Levi Bond, Jr. Post-office address, Lost Creek, Va.

New Salem, Va.—Peter Davis, pastor; Lodowick H. Davis, deacon; Jesse J. Davis, Wm. B. Davis, clerks. Added 16, (within the last two years,) deceased 1; total 84. Constituted 1745. Communion 3d Sabbath in February, and once in three months. Messengers present, J. J. Davis, Jeptha F. Randolph, S. H. Davis, George Ford. Post-office address, New Salem, Va.

Hughes' River, South Fork, Va.—No returns.

Hughes' River, North Fork, Va.—No returns.

Northampton, O.—Eld. S. Babcock, pastor; S. Lippincott, Jr., deacon; A. D. S. Ayers, clerk; Lemon Lippincott, licentiate. Excluded 1, dismissed 4; total 28. Communion 3d Sabbath in March, and once in three months. Constituted 1837. Post-office address, Northampton, O.

Port Jefferson, O.—No returns.

Sciota, O.—No returns.

Jackson, O.—S. Babcock, pastor; Maxson Babcock, Calvin Davis, licentiates; John Forsyth, Jacob D. Maxson, deacons; Eli Forsyth, clerk. Added 4, deceased 2, rejected 2; total 33. Communion 3d Sabbath in November, and once in three months. Post-office, Pratt, O.

Stokes, O.—Joshua Hill, pastor; Job Vanhorn, deacon; James Simpson, clerk. Added 7, deceased 1; total 29. Constituted 1842. Communion 1st Sabbath in June, and once in three months. Messenger—James Simpson. Post-office address, Muchanippie, O.

The Moderator wishing to be exempt from the duties of that office, on account of age and ill health, was permitted to resign, and James Simpson was appointed in his place.

Adjourned to meet at the call of the Moderator.

Afternoon Session—At 3 o'clock the Association met at the call of the Moderator. The Treasurer reported that the agent of the Jackson Church had put $12 50 in his hands; that he had paid out some by order of the Committee, and that a balance of $2 50 was yet in his hands. He also reported, that the agent at Jackson had obtained subscriptions amounting to $20, yet unpaid; also that $19 was subscribed at Hampton, $13 of which sum is in the hands of the agent; also $4 58 on a former subscription; and the agent at Jefferson had $6 in his hands. The agent at Stokes reported that about $10 was collected there, and the agent at Lost Creek reported upwards of $30 subscribed, $26 45 of which was in his hands.

Whereas, we learn by letter from some of the churches in Ohio, that they desire a division of this Association, making the Ohio River the dividing line, therefore Resolved, That the matter be continued until the next session of this body, and that all the churches comprising the same be requested to report their views on the subject at the next session.

John Forsyth, Ezekiel P. Stout, and Job Vanhorn, were appointed the Executive Committee for the ensuing year.

The Report on the State of Religion was handed in, read, adopted, and ordered to be recorded.

Report on the State of Religion.

The Committee on the State of Religion respectfully report, that five churches have communicated by letter with this Association. It is gratifying to report that those churches are in union and peace among themselves, and that during the last year some additions have been made. We are glad also to report, that there appears to be an anxious desire in those churches reported for the advancement of the Redeemer's cause in the world, and for the divine influence of the Holy Spirit among themselves, that they may become more perfect in the knowledge of the blessed Redeemer and his kingdom in the world. Of those churches not represented, we are unable to give any particular account; but so far as we have any knowledge, we believe they are enjoying peace and union. We acknowledge the goodness and mercy of God for his preservative care over us, and for the reviving seasons we have had during the past year, praying that God would direct us continually, according to his holy will.

Eli Vanhorn,
Lodowick H. Davis, } Com.

Ordered, that we adjourn to meet at Bro. Levi Bond's to-morrow evening. Prayer by Eld. P. Davis.

Sabbath Evening—Met agreeable to adjournment. Prayer by Eld. P. Davis.

On missions, a report was received from the Executive Committee, showing that Benjamin Clement had labored a few weeks among the churches in Ohio, and showing farther, that the Committee had corresponded with Eld. Azor Estee, of Petersburg, N. Y., requesting him to engage in missionary labor within the bounds of this Association, and that Eld. Estee had agreed to engage in the mission, and made his arrangements accordingly, and was ready to come on and occupy the field; and whereas it appears, from the report of the Treasurer and church agents, that some $90 or more is already subscribed and part collected for the encouragement of the mission, therefore Resolved, That we employ a missionary for the ensuing year, and that we seriously call upon all the members of our churches to coöperate heart and hand with the Association to carry out these measures; that Eld. Azor Estee be our Missionary; also that our Corresponding Secretary write to Eld. Estee, requesting him to come into the field immediately, under the previous arrangement and future supervision of the Executive Committee; and also that the Secretary write immediately to the Executive Committee, informing them of their late appointment, and forwarding to them a copy of this resolution.

The following brethren were appointed church agents for soliciting and collecting funds for the support of the mission:—Northampton, Joel Babcock; Port Jefferson, Eli Ailes; Jackson, John Forsyth; Sciota, Richard Clark; Stokes, James Simpson; Salem, Lodowick H. Davis; Lost Creek, Levi Bond, Jr.; Hughes' River, Jesse M. Lowther.

The Lost Creek Church requested the ordination of Bro. Samuel D. Davis to the work of the Gospel ministry, but there being only one ordained minister in attendance, and he choosing rather to have assistance in the work, it was deferred in hopes of missionary assistance soon.

The Committee on Resolutions recommended the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we renewedly recommend the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society and all its missions, also the American Sabbath Tract Society with its operations, to the support of all the members of our churches, believing that their objects and labors should be remembered in our prayers continually, and that our prayers ought to be accompanied with contributions according to our abilities for the same objects.

The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, and the Sabbath Recorder, were also recommended to the confidence and patronage of the churches and members of this denomination.

Eld. Azor Estee was appointed to preach the introductory sermon at the next anniversary, and Bro. Maxson Babcock his alternate.

After instructing the Secretaries to revise the minutes, and respectfully solicit their publication in the Sabbath Recorder, the Association adjourned to meet with the Jackson Church, Shelby Co., O., on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October, 1850. Concluding prayer by Bro. George J. Davis.

THE NATIONAL COMMON SCHOOL CONVENTION.

A National Convention of the Friends of Universal Education was held in Philadelphia on the 17th, 18th, and 19th days of October. The number of delegates in attendance was quite large, and the discussions were full of interest. One of the topics considered was the territorial or civil division of the States for school purposes. Another was "School Architecture, including the location, size, modes of ventilation, warming, seating, &c., of buildings intended for educational purposes." The subject of School Attendance, including the schoolage of children, and the best modes of securing the regular and punctual attendance of children at school, was also debated. The delegates from the different States were called upon to give an account of the condition and prospects of the schools in the several sections from which they came, and the difficulties which stand in the way of their progress—an exercise which brought to light much valuable information, difficult to be obtained in any other way. A resolution was adopted, directing a Memorial to be addressed to Congress, asking the establishment of a bureau in the Home Department for the collection of educational information from all the States of the Union. It was resolved to hold a Convention in Philadelphia in 1850, on the 4th Wednesday in August, to appoint a Committee of Five to make arrangements for the meeting of that Convention, and to appoint a Committee of Five to draft a plan for the organization of a National Association.

The net gain of the Baptist Churches in the United States, during the last year, is, according to the Baptist Almanac, 18,057.

☞ We solicit the attention of our readers, particularly those residing within the bounds of the Empire State, to the following just and timely remarks by the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune.

VOTE FOR FREE SCHOOLS.

The Legal Voters of our State are to determine by their ballots on the first Tuesday of next month whether their Common Schools shall or shall not be FREE to all children seeking instruction therein, as they already are in this City, in Poughkeepsie, and we believe in most of the cities and in some of the larger villages througnout the State. At present, these Schools are supported partly by State funds, partly by a tax on property, and partly by assessments on each scholar, known as 'rate bills.' Insignificant as the sums charged in rate-bills may seem, they yet bear very hard on many a poor laboring man with a large family of children. Five or six dollars a year are often charged in rate-bills against a man whose entire earnings, though he work hard and steadily, fall short of $200 a year; and out of this pittance he has to pay the rent of his dwelling and feed and clothe a family of seven or eight persons. The case is even worse with many a poor widow, left destitute with three or four children to support by needlework, at which she cannot earn thirty cents per day, though she does her best. It is all she can do to clothe her children so that she is not ashamed to send them to school; to pay for their schooling, even partially, is beyond her ability. Now it is true they might go and be sneered at as paupers if she could not and did not pay; but she cannot forget the time when she held her head as high as her neighbors, and it is hard to own herself a pauper while health and hope remain. So she keeps her children at home, intending to teach them herself, but famine and rent crowd her from hour to hour, and their lessons are few, hurried and meager indeed. So the boys grow up untaught in the streets, exposed to every contamination and initiated into every vice, while the girls learn too little to fit them for the sphere in which their mother once moved and too much (from her) to content themselves in a humbler; and the result is too often their ruin.

The education of children is a duty of their parents when they are able, but it is a duty of the community whether all the parents are able or not. Not for his own sake merely or mainly, but for the sake of the whole, should every child be educated. A single ignorant person is a source of peril and evil to the commonwealth. That person properly educated, might have invented something, evolved some idea, for want of which the development and progress of the whole race may be arrested for half a century. Not only as the duty of all but for the benefit of all, we insist that the education of every child in the community shall be regarded and provided for by the action and at the cost of all, and we entreat every elector who wishes well to his kind to suffer nothing to deter him from attending the polls at the ensuing election, and there depositing his ballot in favor of Free Schools.

Begg on the Sabbath.—Our series of articles on the subject of the Sabbath, from the pen of James A. Begg, of Glasgow, terminated rather abruptly in the middle of Chapter X., where he was treating of the argument for a change of the day from the Resurrection of Christ. A letter from Mr. Begg informs us, that this abrupt termination was occasioned by difficulties in his own mind relative to the various accounts of the Resurrection. Having now investigated the whole subject, and seeing his way somewhat more clearly, he has resolved to publish that chapter in Scotland, at the same time that he sends the remainder of it for publication in the Recorder. His work, "to be published (D. V.) October 15, 1849," is entitled, "Examination of the Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ; proving that the practice of the Church in substituting the First Day of the Week for the appointed Seventh Day, is unsanctioned by the New Testament Scriptures." We shall resume the subject at an early day.

The German Sabbath-Keepers of Pennsylvania.—A letter from Samuel Snowberger, dated Snowhill, Oct. 20th, says: "In company with a number of our members, I have just returned from Bedford County, where a meeting and Sacrament was held on Sabbath, the 13th inst., in a new and elegantly-finished meeting house there. A Conference was held on Firstday, Oct, 14th, to consider the propriety of again making application to the Legislature for Sabbath protection. The measure was unanimously agreed upon, and brethren Christian King, Geo. Specht, and John Monn, were appointed to make the necessary arrangements. A committee was also appointed to get a Hymn Book printed, in two volumes, English and German."

A Church Question.—At the session of the Presbyterian Church, at Greenfield, Ohio, last summer, Mr. Wm. Roan was suspended from communion with the Church on account of his being an Odd-Fellow. He appealed from this decision to the Cincinnati Synod, which lately sat at Springfield. After a lengthy discussion, in which the whole ground of secret orders was gone over, the appeal was sustained, and Mr. Roan restored to his church rights.

Departure of Missionaries.—Messrs. Bradley, Silsby, and Lane, with their wives, destined for the American Missionary Association's Mission at Bangkok, in the kingdom of Siam, sailed from New York last week, in the brig Ernania. Religious services were held on board before starting.

The Anti-Sectarian Convention, a notice of which we published several weeks ago, was held at Peterboro, N. Y., on the 10th and 11th days of October. Through the attention of a member, we have been furnished with a copy of the Resolutions, Address, &c., adopted by the Convention, which will appear in the Recorder of next week.

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The Mail Steamship Europa has arrived since our last, bringing dates seven days later from all parts of Europe. The following summary of the news, which we clip from the Chronotype, embraces every thing of importance.

FRANCE.—In consequence of the illness of M. Falloux, the discussion in the Assembly on the Italian question, and the affairs of the River Plate, together with the American and Turkish disputes, have been postponed. A bill demanding a credit of 15 millions of francs for the completion of the Louvre, has occupied the attention of the House, and has been passed by a large majority. Gen. Rostolan refuses to stay at Rome, and Gen. De Hautpaul, has been chosen to suppy his place. The loss experienced by the foreign commerce of France, in consequence of the revolutions of February, is estimated at 599 millions of francs. The other items of news are quite uninteresting.

ROME.—The Pope is reported to be under apprehensions of a plot to assassinate him at Rome, and has therefore expressed a wish to remain in Naples during the winter. His announcement that the public and private debts of the republican government will be respected, has increased his popularity at Rome. A single French regiment is to occupy the castle of St. Angelo, and the Pope's Spanish guards are to keep the city. The French prefect of police has assisted some sixty ex-deputies of the republican assembly to escape to France, in anticipation of the Cardinal government coming into full power when the state of siege of the city shall be raised. Garibaldi had intended to take refuge in the United States, but having been offered the command of the Monte Videan forces by the envoy of that republic in Paris, it is believed he will accept it.

TURKEY AND RUSSIA.—There is nothing decisive in regard to the relations of these countries. The reply of the Emperor of Russia was looked for at Constantinople on the 10th or 12th of October. Apprehending war, the Porte was exceedingly impatient to learn the effect produced upon the Cabinets of France and England. A large fleet of steamers was collecting in the Bosphorus, and 100,000 men were undergoing active drill around the capital.

There were serious apprehensions that the Greeks in some of the Pachalies that are only partly Turkish would take the occasion of a war to revolt, being incited to such a course by Russian emissaries, members of the Greek Church, among them.

Overtures had been made to the Hungarian refugees to embrace the Mohammedan faith, and Bem had accepted them, though Kossuth, Dembinski, Guyon, Zamoisky and others swore that nothing should induce them to apostatize.

Lord Palmerston has placed the British Mediterranean fleet at the disposal of Sir Stratford Canning, and it has sailed for the Dardanelles. There is no doubt but both England and France will support Turkey on the question of extradition.

AUSTRIA.—Previous accounts of the honorable surrender of Comorn have been confirmed. The report of Gorgey's assassination is discredited. Kossuth's mother, Gen. Guyon's wife, and other Hungarian ladies of distinction, are kept close prisoners by the Austrians. The small fry of Hungarian refugees now residing at Widden are said to have asked leave to return to their own country, and it is likely that the request will be granted.

SARDINIA.—Reports are rife of a formidable conspiracy having been discovered in Piedmont, the conspirators calculating on the sympathy of the French army of the Alps.

GERMAN EMIGRANTS.

The recent political revolutions in Europe have driven to this country a large number of persons whose loss will be deeply felt there. and who might be made very valuable here. Many of them have come, however, empty-handed, and will need to be encouraged and assisted for a while, till they learn the ways of this new world. The following examples, taken from the note-book of Rev. C. H. Doering, a German Missionary in this city, show the character and condition of some of the emigrants who have lately arrived.

One gentleman arrived here a few months ago, having occupied in Germany a high station, similar to that of a Supreme Judge. He has a wife with five children, and no means for their support. His wife, being thrown from a state of affluence into the deepest poverty, took it so to heart that she became deranged, and is now in the Lunatic Asylum.

Another, of literary fame in his own country, on account of the political movements in Germany, had to leave, and he arrived here, hoping by his literary labors to support his family, consisting of wife, mother-in-law, and three children; but so far he has failed, and his wife, on account of their situation, seem, also to be on the brink of despair.

A merchant from the southern part of Germany, being there in good circumstances, involved in those political movements, had to flee, to escape arrest; and now, without means for the support of his wife and one child, they are from early in the morning till late in the evening picking wool, earning perhaps eighteen and three quarters to twenty cents a day.

Another, from the northern part of Germany, keeping there a Post-Office, and acting as agent for insurance offices, was ruined by the revolutionary movements. He came here with a wife and three children, and finding no other employment, he makes match-boxes, receiving eight cents for twelve dozen; and how much, at this rate, he is able to earn may be easily imagined. His wife, a few days ago, came to me, entreating me, with tears in her eyes, for help. They had brought all that they could possibly spare to the pawnbroker; nothing was left but their beds, and on account of the approaching winter, and the poor little children, she entreated me to save them.

Another young couple, both having seen better days, slept the whole of the past winter on a straw bed, with a single thin quilt for covering, and only one pillow for both to lay their heads upon. They were without bedstead, table, chairs or stove, that which they had being borrowed and taken away again by the owner, and they would be so now if some aid had not been provided for them.

A DELAWARE SLAVE LAW.

At a session of the Sussex County Court, recently held in Georgetown, a case of extreme hardship was decided, under a law which is a disgrace to the State of Delaware. It is thus stated by the Wilmington "Blue Hen's Chicken":—

Collins vs. Bilderback.—Action against a steamboat Captain for carrying a slave out of the State. The plaintiff's wife went from Lewes to Philadelphia in defendant's steamboat, carrying with her a daughter and a little negro girl or slave about six years old. It appeared that the Captain knew the girl was a slave, but being with her mistress, he took her out of the State, and she escaped. It turned out that the wife was leaving her husband, and carried the girl off without her husband's consent.

The Court said the law was exceedingly strict against persons carrying slaves out of the State by water, and must necessarily be so to afford any protection. It makes the Captain liable to a penalty of $500, whether he knows the negro to be a slave or not, or whether he knows him to be a runaway or not. If he takes a negro out of the State, he runs all risks if the negro turns out to be a slave—nothing will excuse him but authority of the master either expressed or implied, and such authority may be implied, from the presence of the master, or, in case of a little servant girl, even from the presence of the mistress, unless the Captain knew it was against the will of the master. A witness proved that Capt. Bilderback said he knew all the circumstances of the case, and the Jury gave a verdict for $500.

The Salem (N. J.) Standard gives the following as the facts in the case:—

Several years since, (1846 we believe,) Capt. Charles Bilderback was in command of the steamboat "Portsmouth," on the line between Philadelphia and Lewistown. It was customary at the latter place to receive passengers on board by means of a small boat plying to and from the shore, the owner of which charging ten cents per head for his trouble. One morning the boat came off with a respectable-looking white woman, accompanied by a small negro girl, who she professed was her servant. After the steamer had been some time under way, the Captain's attention was drawn to the child, and on proper inquiry he learned that she was a slave. His intention was now to put her ashore, but upon taking the advice of a gentleman of the bar on board, and of a Judge of the Court, he learned that under the circumstances he had nothing to fear—that the girl was brought off by her mistress without his knowledge or consent, and that no harm could ensue. After the lapse of a long period, (and probably not until the decision in a similar case against Capt. Vandergrift was known,) the husband of the woman and owner of the slave commenced a suit against Capt. B. for damages. The latter gave his attention to the matter, and after a visit to Sussex County, at an expense of $60, he was informed by his attorney that he need trouble himself no farther about it, as the charges could not be sustained. Capt. B. however appealed, and it is hoped that the higher Court will so consider the honor of the State and the ends of justice as to reverse the decision. Capt. B. is entirely unable to meet the demand imposed by the revengeful sentence, and if it is not reversed, he can hereafter visit the State of Delaware only at the risk of incarceration in her jails.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN NOT LOST.

From the New London Chronicle, Oct. 18th.

Capt. Chapel, of the bark McLellan, of this port, from Davis's Straits, furnishes information which will be read with interest in the United States, and indeed in every part of the world.

About the 1st of August, while the McLellan laid in Pond's Bay, lat. 74, lon. 72, the natives of the coast came on board the Chieftain, an English whaleman, and gave information by signs that two large ships were then lying in Prince Regent's Inlet, and had been there fast in the ice for four seasons; and being asked with regard to those on board, whether they were dead or alive, they replied in the same way that the crews were not "asleep," (that is, not dead,) but were all well. This information was considered by the Englishman and by Capt. Chapel, as indicating that the ships of Sir John Franklin were clearly meant.

The Englishman landed at Cape Hay, some distance from Pond's Bay, a quantity of coal and provisions with which his ship was furnished by the British Government for the use of the long missing ships, if they should chance to come there, as they would be obliged to do on their return to England. This is certainly the latest news from that quarter, and there is a possibility, perhaps a probability, that the commander of the unfortunate expedition and his crews are still alive. Heaven send that it may be so!

ADVICE OF AN EXPERIENCED GOLD-DIGGER.—S. S. Osgood, the artist, has been digging gold in California for some time past, with better than ordinary luck. The N. Y. Tribune has a long letter from him, under date of August 30th, which closes as follows:—

"From all I can learn—but it is a hard thing to get at the truth—the general average is not more than $7 o[illegible]8 per day. I know that that was the case up where I have been, and I had been about up and down the river with my eyes open—but few of the stories of thousands being gathered in a short time are fabulous. I have known old sailors and runaway soldiers say that they had taken out $2,000 and $3,000 in a few days, but were not able to pay for what they ate, and I have often sifted these stories to get the truth. Think twice before you come here. At present there is much sickness at the mines; the water is warm, and has considerable decayed vegetable matter in it. The bilious fever, fever and ague, and severe diarrhea and the dysentery, are the prevalent diseases. At Sacramento, it is said to be exceedingly sickly."

SAD DEATH.—A Boston paper has the following particulars relative to the death of Frederick Strickland, son of Thomas Strickland, Bart., of England, while ascending Mount Washington, in New Hampshire:—

Though strongly urged to the contrary, Mr. S. left Crawford's Notch House to ascend Mt. Washington, in company with a friend and a guide. Upon reaching Mt. Pleasant and finding snow, the other gentleman and the guide returned, taking Strickland's horse, who, in spite of their entreaties, resolved to pursue the journey on foot, and come down the bridle path, and stop at Fabyan's Mt. Washington House, whither his baggage had been sent. The next morning Crawford went over to Fabyan's, and finding the stranger had not been there, they started in pursuit of him. They found his track and followed it till night, but only picked up a portion of his clothes. The next day he was found dead. It seems he had lost the track, and probably became insane in his wanderings, as his pantaloons and drawers were found in a hole in Ammonoosuck brook, and his legs and body were badly bruised. The deceased was about thirty years old, heir to large estates, and had been traveling several months in this country, with a younger brother, who returned to England from Boston a fortnight ago. He had letters to Bostonians, and before going to the White Hills had been stopping at the Tremont House. Mr. Horace Fabyan had the corpse buried in such a manner as to be disinterred if his friends shall request.

THE GREENLAND WHALE FISHERY.—The bark McLellan, recently arrived at New London from Baffin's Bay, is the only vessel ever employed in the Greenland whale fishery, from the United States. This is the fourth year she has been employed in this fishery, making a profitable voyage every year, being absent only six or seven months. This year she narrowly escaped destruction, by being jammed in the ice. She was so severely injured that she leaked so as to be kept afloat only by the incessant work of nearly all hands at the pumps, and by means of two large metallic pumps obtained by Capt. C. from the wreck of the English ship crushed and totally lost just ahead of him. The leak was, however, partially remedied by thumbed sails under the bow, though she continued to leak badly until her arrival home, and was only kept above water by continual and unceasing labor at the pumps, till she reached the dock, which indeed is still obliged to be continued as she lies at the wharf. The two English ships, Superior and Lady Jane, were both lost very near the McLellan. Two of the crew of the lost ships arrived in her. They are natives of the Shetland Islands. [Newburyport Herald.

A MOURNFUL END.—One day last week the body of a well-dressed man was found on the grounds of the Cypress Hills Cemetery, back of Brooklyn, dead, and to all appearance having been so for several days. The face and head had been eaten by birds or insects, so that recognition from the features will be more than doubtful. Dr. Ball held an inquest. It was evident that he had committed suicide, a pistol being found in his right hand, and a bullet-hole in his head. He had on a black frock coat, green cassimere pants, plaid silk double-breasted vest, calf-skin boots, muslin shirt, linen bosom, Canton flannel undershirt and drawers, red-spotted silk handkerchief, plain gold ring on the little finger of his right hand. He had in his pocket a ticket of the L. I. Railroad Co. to the Race Course, Sept. 25. The supposition at once arises, that he had been gambling at the races, lost all his money, and took this desperate mode of ending his troubles.

THE HAWAIIAN GOVERNMENT, desirous to negotiate (as we learn from the Boston Traveler) a treaty with the United States on a fair and equitable basis, and also to secure the modification of the objectionable clauses in the French and English treaties, by which the King's independence is still trammeled, has very recently forwarded here a commission to James J. Jarves, Esq., of Boston, as Special Commissioner to Washington, London, and Paris, with a request that he should act for them on these and other points. We have not learned whether Mr. Jarves will accept the commission in full, but we understand he proceeds shortly to Washington. Mr. J. resided long at the Islands, and enjoyed intimate relationship with the Government while there, and has perfect familiarity with the political, civil, and social condition of the country.

BLEEDING AT THE NOSE.—Dr. Samuel R. Smith, of Tompkinsville, Staten Island, New York, communicates to the Boston Medical Journal a method of stopping bleedings at the nose, which he learned of an old ship-master. His process is to roll up a piece of paper and place it under the upper lip. Dr. Smith stopped bleeding which had continued four days, by tying a knot in a bandage and applying it on the upper lip, and tying the bandage round the head. The rationale of this treatment is, that pressure at the point mentioned compresses the artery furnishing the blood.

A VETERAN GONE.—Capt. Stephen Brigham, one of the heroes of Bunker Hill, died in Vernon, Oneida County, N. Y., on the 11th inst. He was in the 96th year of his age. Capt. H. was born in Worcester County, Mass., May 13, 1754. On the morning after the Battle of Lexington, he left home with nothing but a miserable old musket, and joined the army near Boston as a volunteer. Soon after he enlisted for one year as a private soldier. He fought at Bunker Hill, and was not far from the spot where Warren fell. He drew a pension from Government. In early life he made a profession of religion, and with his wife formed a part of the small number of thirteen persons who constituted the first religious society in Western New York.

Speaking of the annexation of Canada to the United States, the Kingston British Whig says:—"During a recent absence from home, the editor passed through a dozen vilages in Upper Canada; the sole topic of conversation among all classes and parties was annexation. Nay, in the good city of Kingston, loyal old Kingston—the stronghold of Conservatism par excellence—nine-tenths of the people are Annexationists; and if any practical benefit could arise from signing any manifesto, they would cheerfully do it."

SUMMARY.

The Woodstock (Va.) Legion says that Mr. Jos. Furrell a few days ago exhibited a snake which he had killed, with two perfect heads. It is about nine inches in length, and both necks are about an inch long. It is believed to be a viper. When it attempted to bite, it would strike with the head on the opposite side from the object at which it would strike; for instance, if an attack were made from the left, it would strike with the right head.

Mr. Macready appeared at the Haymarket Theater, London, on Monday, Oct. 8, in Macbeth. He was received by a dense audience with a tempest of applause, all parties, according to the Times, being resolved "that the honors they bestowed should stand in marked contrast to the indignities offered on the other side of the Atlantic."

A case has occurred in Cincinnati, of a sane woman being confined in a mad house. An order was obtained from a judge falsely, and the woman, M. F. Neede, immured upon it. The keeper, however, before she had been in his possession a day, discovered that she had been made a victim of, and that she was not insane. He immediately had steps taken to try her case, when she was found perfectly sane, and released.

A man named Isaac Hobbs, and his wife, were arrested in Louisville last week for counterfeiting. The house in which they were found contained about half a peck of counterfeit dimes and twenty-five and fifty cent pieces, the machinery for melting the metal and the dies for the dimes and quarters. The counterfeits were exceedingly well executed, and calculated to deceive the most cautious.

The grand wire suspension bridge across the Ohio at Wheeling, was completed last week, and Mr. Ellet the distinguished architect rode across it for the first time. The experiment proved entirely successful. A large concourse of persons were assembled upon either side of the river to witness the apparently hazardous feat.

At the last session of the Canada Legislature, the House of Assembly addressed the Governor-General, requesting that the public business might be transacted two years at Toronto and two at Quebec—the Parliament sitting half the time in each of those cities. Lord Elgin has complied with this request, and the public offices and their occupants are by this time on their way to Upper Canada.

The Liberia Packet will sail from Norfolk for Liberia about Dec. 1. A vessel will sail from Savannah the first day of February next, if nothing unforseen prevents. We shall send, says Mr. McLane, a vessel from New Orleans, to accommodate the emigrants in the South-Western States, as soon as our funds will justify.

Mr. Hezekiah Crawford, an overseer on a plantation near Shrieveport, La., was recently murdered by a slave woman who poisoned his coffee, which she confessed immediately upon being apprehended, and implicated a negro man on the plantation in the deed, both of whom were to be tried on the 11th.

The St. Louis Reveille says that a full rigged schooner has been built at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, and transported thence across the country forty miles to Galena, where she was launched. She sails direct for San Francisco, via Chagres and Panama, the design being to draw her on trucks across the Isthmus. She will reach St. Louis about the middle of November.

Judge Seward, father of Gov. Seward, has left by will $10,000 to Caroline C. Canfield, his grand-daughter, and ordered all his real estate to be sold, and the proceeds to be divided equally between his twenty children and grand children.

We learn from the Philadelphia Bulletin that the total amount of California gold, received in Philadelphia up to the present time, is about $3,100,000, and that the whole amount now at the Mint will be coined in about three weeks.

In New York, one day last week, a young woman residing on the corner of Twenty-Second-st. and Third-avenue, while coming down stairs with a large earthen dish in her hands, fell and broke the dish, and at the same time struck her neck upon a piece of the broken crockery, which cut her throat in such a manner that before medical aid could be procured she bled to death.

A correspondent from Licking Co. Ohio, writes to the N. Y. Tribune, that at the late Agricultural Fair there, Gen. Thomas W. Wilson took the premium for the best crop of Corn, the product of which, per acre, was 184 bushels. His farm is large, comprising some 400 acres, and the General is considered one of the best of Ohio farmers, which is saying a great deal. There were several competitors, none of whom produced less than 100 bushels to the acre.

A horrible scene occurred at the burning of the jail of Jackson county, Mississippi, on the night of the 30th ult. Before the fire was discovered, it had so extended as to render it impossible to save a runaway slave who was confined in one of the cells. Efforts were made to break the iron bars of the window, but they proved ineffectual, and the poor fellow perished in the flames, uttering the most piercing cries.

Mr. Winchester Willis—son of Rev. Lemuel Willis, a Universalist clergyman formerly of Cambridgeport—who enlisted in the Mexican war, has been to the California mines, and having secured some $40,000, recently made his father a present of $7,000, and sent for a brother to join him, who started immediately.

Rev. Mr. Dore of Ireland, sailed for home last week, to return soon with a large number of his countrymen, for whom he has purchased twenty thousand acres of land in Cattaraugus county in this State. Two dollars per acre was paid for the tract, which will be immediately occupied.

Abbas Pasha, the young viceroy of Egypt, employs his time chiefly on religious ceremonies, and the care of his dogs, horses, and pigeons. He is building a new town north of Cairo, called Abbassiyeh, where he compels all his chief officers to build palaces.

Thompson's Bank Note Reporter of Oct. 10 says the Dutchess County Bank, which was at Poughkeepsie, is wound up. The Dutchess County Bank, now in existence, is at Amenia; and its notes are 5-8 discount.

Over a hundred Irish immigrants left New York one day last week for their native land. They did not meet with the success they had expected here, and after some six weeks sojourn bade adieu to the Republic and went back to Royalty.

Rev. Cyprian Rust, a Baptist minister at Colchester, has become a convert to the Church of England. He has entirely withdrawn from his old congregation, and is preparing for holy orders under the bishops.

The Pacific Railway proposition is exciting a good deal of attention in the best-informed circles in Washington, and there is no room for doubt but what it will act a very conspicuous part in the deliberations of the next Congress.

A man named Stickleman, who had robbed the mail at Staunton, Va., was recently arrested in Ohio and taken to Staunton, where he was convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary at Washington.

Four prisoners charged with coining, made their escape from the Jail in Columbus, Ohio, on the 13th, by means of a skeleton key, which they had manufactured from one of the stoves in their department.

The American Female Guardian Society has now in charge 100 boys and girls, under nine years of age, and funds are greatly needed by the managers.

The two house-breakers who broke into the dwelling of Hon. Daniel Webster, were sentenced at Concord to eight years' service in the State Prison.

The money collected on behalf of Father Mathew, amounted at the last report to $1,106. The sum proposed to be raised is $30,000.

Mrs. Lydia Jane Pierson is announced in the Lancaster County Literary Gazette and Farmer, as shortly to take possession of the editorial chair of that journal.

Rev. Dr. Wayland has consented to withdraw for the present his resignation of the presidency of Brown University.

About thirty more of the bodies from the wreck of the Brig St. John have been washed ashore and buried at Cohasset.

A correspondent of the London Times estimates the yield of California this year at forty millions of dollars.

In a libel suit recently at Newark, Ohio, a plaintiff recovered the heavy damages of $3,500.

Cassius M. Clay has entirely recovered from the wounds he received in his late fight.

The Governor of Maryland has appointed the 29th of November as a day of Thanksgiving and prayer.

Miscellaneous.

"ALL THINGS ARE CHANGING."

All things are changing. Look on the skies!
Bright with their purple and crimson dyes—
On the ark of light as he sinks to rest,
'Midst the gorgeous clouds of the blushing West—
Oh, change rules there with imperious sway,
For e'en while we gaze, all fade away.

All things are changing. Look on the flowers,
The radiant children of summer hours,
In matchless splendor they bud and bloom,
And the air is fill'd with their rich perfume;
Then to the influence of decay.
They yield their splendor, and die away.

All things are changing. Look on the child!
Like the forest's young fawn he is bounding wild,
With his ruddy cheek and eye of mirth;
The fairest and happiest thing on earth;
A few short years, and a furrowed brow
Will mar the beauty that decks him now.

All things are changing. Look on the world!
When Spring's young graces are just unfurl'd—
When her velvet robe of emerald hue,
A contrast forms to the sky's deep blue;
'Tis passing fair, but the bright tints fade,
Ere summer deepens the woodland shade.

All things are changing. Look on the friend,
Whose love we once thought could never end—
Ne'er didst thou dream of the altered look
Of that heart, to thee a 'sealed book;'
Oh, no! it vowed to be true to thee,
But like all else, it can changeful be.

All things are changing; yet, murmur not.
We should grow fond of our earthly lot
If the ties of earth were never riven,
To fix our thoughts on a home in heaven;
But now with pleasure we contemplate
The future bliss of a changeless state.

From the Vermont State Agriculturist.

CULTURE OF CRANBERRIES.

The cranberry (oxycoccus macrocarpus) is a native of Vermont. It is found in many swamps and wet places, among the rushes and other plants generally occupying such grounds. It naturally prefers the soil and moisture of marshy districts, and is usually raised upon such; but instances are on record where it has been successfully grown on dry upland, and with a great improvement in the quality of the fruit. It is surprising that so little attention has been paid in our State to this very profitable crop. Cranberries, when once well set, require no care or culture; while they occupy most advantageously lands unfit for any other useful plant; yield from 125 to 400 bushels per acre; and command a ready market at an average of $2 per bushel, with only the expense of gathering. This latter operation is now performed by rakes, so that, at a low estimate, an acre of cranberries may be made to produce more in solid cash than 6 acres of good corn.

We have received a communication from Mr. Abiezer Alger, of Bridgewater, Mass., in answer to some inquiries in regard to the cranberry; the substance of which, together with such information as we can glean from other sources, we lay before our readers. Mr. Alger has taken several premiums for his crops of cranberries, from Massachusetts societies, and lives in a district where their cultivation is successfully carried on. He says: "The fall of the year is the best time to set out the vines. The soil (bog meadow) needs no preparation beyond a covering of sand about two inches deep. Take them up with the soil in which they grow, and set them out, two or three feet apart. After one or two years they will spread themselves over the whole ground, and will require no hoeing. I never knew an instance of their running out after they are once well set. It is beneficial to keep the water on them from December till about the first of April, and after that time to keep it level with the surface of the ground, so as to keep the roots moist during the first part of the season. If there should be a frost when the cranberries are in blossom, or before they begin to ripen in the fall, it will destroy the crop. You will probably have a few cranberries the second or perhaps not until the third year after planting."

A writer in the Massachusetts Plowman relates an experiment in planting cranberries from the swamps, on good corn ground, in hills far enough apart to admit the cultivator and clean hoeing. The transplanting was done early in spring; they bloomed about midsummer, and bore fruit the same year. The fruit was large and handsome, and many of the hills bore a pint of berries.

An article in the Cultivator for 1846, states that Sullivan Bates, of Bellingham, Mass., raises cranberries in great abundance by transplanting them from low grounds to high. He plants them in drills twenty inches apart, (does he plant roots or seeds?) and seven inches in the drill. His success was complete. He gathered from one acre about four hundred bushels of cranberries in one season. The soil must be such as will not bake. The superiority of upland cultivation has also been attested to by others.

The editor of the American Agriculturist says that Mr. William Hall, of Norway, Me., sowed the berries in the spring, on the snow, in a boggy piece of land about three rods square. The seed took well, rooted out the weeds, and produced accordingly.

The extract following is from the Farmer's Dictionary:—

"The oxycoccus macrocarpus is readily cultivated by transplanting in spring the cranberry sods, or selecting plants and transferring them to a lighter soil, rather moist. The runners can be layered, or seed sown in the spring. They grow rapidly, covering nearly every thing, and are but little subject to the attacks of insects. The plants are set about 18 inches apart, in rows, and kept clean at first. The yield increases for several years, and becomes as great as 400 bushels per acre in five years, although 200 are a good average. The fruit is gathered by rakes, which seem to prune the plant at the same time. When the berries are intended for keeping, they should be rolled over a gently inclined plane of wood, to remove such as are soft and rotten. They keep well for a year in tight casks filled with water, and headed close. The fresh fruit commands $1 50 per bushel in New York."

From these accounts it seems to be certain, that although the natural soil of the canberry is the swamp, and great crops have been grown on such lands; yet it has been successfully cultivated on uplands, and with an evident improvement in the quality of the fruit. As the product is large, with but little outlay, it is well worth the attention of our agriculturists, especially when they may have a tract of land which cannot, without great expense, be made fit for any other crop. Doubtless there are many others of our native berries, such as the whortleberry, the blackberry, and the raspberry, which would repay cultivation; and if some one else does not anticipate us, we shall probably try them at a future day. We hope, at all events, that our farmers will try the cranberry; it offers great inducements to the cultivator.

THE LAW OF KINDNESS ILLUSTRATED.

The Philadelphia Inquirer relates the following touching incident of recent occurrence:—

Only a few days since, an aged citizen of Philadelphia was waited upon by a stranger, who asked to have a few moments' conversation with him in private. The opportunity was afforded with great cheerfulness. The western merchant—for such, in fact, he was—was ushered into the parlor of the Philadelphian, when something like the following conversation took place:

"You seem to have forgotten me, Mr. H.?"

"I have an indistinct recollection of having seen you before, and the tone of your voice is not unfamiliar; but beyond this my memory fails."

"My name is Charles B——, and twenty years ago I was an inmate of a Philadelphia prison, of which you were a frequent, a benevolent, a kind-hearted visitor."

"I remember, I remember," said the other, brightening, smiling, and grasping the hand of the stranger; "you look so well, have improved so greatly, that I hope, nay, I feel satisfied, that all has gone right with you."

A tear trembled in the eye of the other at so cordial and kindly a recognition; his voice failed for a moment—but then rallying again, he proceeded to tell his story. At the age of fifteen he was a neglected orphan, and with fine natural talents, a cheerful disposition, and a good heart, he was thrown into the society of the vile and dissolute, in one of the most wretched sections of Philadelphia county. There, in connection with several other lads, equally deserted or misled, he committed a, was arrested for, and convicted of, petty theft.

While in prison he was visited again and again by the Philadelphia philanthropist, who succeeded not only in eradicating the vicious views he had imbibed, but in showing him the folly of vice and the certainty of its punishment, and inspiring him with a determination to act correctly the moment he should be released. The visitor was satisfied with his sincerity, and gradually took a deep interest in his case. At the expiration of his sentence, he provided him with means, and having stated all the facts in a confidential manner to a friend in the West, obtained him a situation in a flourishing city of that section of the Union. The youth was overwhelmed with gratitude. He had found a friend for the first time in his brief career. His course from that moment was onward. He speedily won the confidence of his employer, on whose death, ten years thereafter, he succeeded to a large share in his business.

"I am now," he said, "an equal partner in the reputable and prosperous house of —— & Co., of ——, and I have visited Philadelphia, not only on business, but with the object of seeking out and returning my heart-warm acknowledgments to my early, my ever-cherished, my often-remembered benefactor."

The old merchant wept with joy at such a reform, and acknowledged that this single incident had repaid him for the hours and days and weeks he had devoted, always prayerfully, to the blessed cause of kindness and prison reform.

NEW YORK OMNIBUSES.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Post furnishes the following interesting statistics of public vehicles:—

We have 376 licensed omnibuses now running, owned by some dozen or more different proprietors. Each omnibus costs, new, $550, making their aggregate cost $206,800. Each omnibus earns, on an average, $10 a day, and $3,000 a year. The whole earn $3,760 per day, and $1,128,000 a year. Their expenses are always rated at $5 each, per day, and $1,500 a year, making the aggregate cost of the whole $564,000 a year. The profit, therefore, of each omnibus to its proprietor, is $5 a day and $1,500 a year; and the nett profit of all the omnibuses in this city is $564,000. To earn $10 a day, each carriage must make 8 trips; some make 9, but 8 is the usual number, down and back, with an average of 10 fares each way. This would make, for each omnibus, 160 fares or passengers per day, and 48,000 per year. At the same rate the whole 376 should carry 60,160 passengers daily, and 18,048,000 yearly. Thus you will perceive the number who daily take a ride in an omnibus, exceeds the largest vote ever polled by both parties at any election in this city; and the number who ride yearly, is nearly equal to the entire population of the United States in 1840.

The average length of each route is 3 1-2 miles, making the length of a trip down and back 7 miles. We go down 4 times in the forenoon and 4 times in the afternoon, which is equivalent to 56 miles a day, and 16,800 miles a year for each omnibus and driver, and 6,316,800 miles for the whole. A man riding up and down daily 2 miles each way travels 600 miles for $37 50 in the course of a year. There are 6 horses worked on each omnibus daily; on all 2,256. The distance traveled by each horse, therefore, daily, is about 19 miles. There is but one driver to an omnibus—376 in all. They receive $1 per day, wages, which is about $300 a year. Each omnibus pays a license to the City of $20 a year, from which a revenue accrues annually of $7,520.

EXPAND THE CHEST.

Those in easy circumstances, or who pursue sedentary employments within doors, generally use their lungs but little, breathe but little air into the chest, and thus, independently of positions, contract a wretched, narrow, small chest, and lay the foundation for the loss of health and beauty. All this can be perfectly obviated by a little attention to the manner of breathing. Recollect the lungs are like a bladder in their structure, and can be stretched to double their ordinary size with perfect safety, giving a noble chest and immunity from consumption. The agent required is the common air we breathe, supposing, however, that no obstacle exist, external to the chest, such as tying it around with stays, or tight dressing, or having shoulders lie upon it. On rising from the bed in the morning, place yourself in an erect posture, with your chest thrown back, and shoulders entirely off the chest; now inhale or suck in all the air you can, so as to fill the chest to the very bottom of it, so that no more air can be got in: now hold your breath, and throw your arms off behind, holding your breath as long as possible. Repeat these breaths as many times as you please. Done in a cold room is much better, because the air is much denser, and will act much more powerfully in expanding the chest. Exercising the chest in this manner, it will become very flexible and expansible, and will enlarge the capacity of the lungs.

Hamburgh Tunnel.—The Great Tunnel at New Hamburgh, connected with the Hudson River Railroad, is nearly completed. It is a gigantic work, measuring 830 feet in length; at the south end is a cut 500 feet long, 30 feet wide, and 50 feet deep, all through the solid rock before reaching the tunnel, which is 19 feet high and 24 feet wide. Through the tunnel the passage is gloomy enough to represent the most dangerous regions, darkness being relieved only by the light of candles, and through two shafts sunk to it, one 70 feet in depth, the other 56, through which a glimpse of daylight may be obtained, but on emerging at the north end, one other deep cut is found, nearly as formidable as that at the south, being 200 feet long and 70 deep, making the entire deep cutting through the rock, all inclusive, no less than 1,530 feet. One who has not seen the work, can form no conception of its magnitude, and it may be put down as one of the greatest curiosities in this part of the country. There are 400 men employed on this great work, under the supervision of Messrs. Ward, Wells & Co., the contractors. Six thousand kegs of powder, of 25 lbs. each, have been used for blasting, in fourteen months, and nine blacksmith's shops are constantly occupied with repairing the tools, &c. The work goes on night and day, with great expedition. [Evening Post.

Shelly in Boyhood.—Shelley was tall for his age, slightly and delicately built, and rather narrow chested, with a complexion fair and ruddy, a face rather long than oval. His features, not regularly handsome, were set off by a profusion of silky brown hair, that curled naturally. The expression of his countenance was one of exceeding sweetness and innocence. His blue eyes were very large and prominent, considered by phrenologists to indicate a great aptitude for verbal memory. They were at times, when he was abstracted, as he often was in contemplation, dull, and as it were insensible to external objects; at others, they flashed with the fire of intelligence. His voice was soft and low, but broken in its tones when any thing much interested him, harsh, immodulated; and this peculiarity he never lost. As is recorded of Thompson, he was naturally calm; but when he heard of or read of some flagrant act of injustice, oppression or cruelty, then, indeed, the sharpest marks of horror and indignation were visible in his countenance.

A Wife in Trouble.—"Pray tell me, my dear, what is the cause of those tears?"

"Oh! such a disgrace!"

"What—what is it, my dear? Don't keep me in suspense."

"Why, I have opened one of your letters, supposing it addressed to myself. Certainly it looked more like a Mrs. than a Mr."

"Is that all? What harm can there be in a wife's opening her husband's letters?"

"No harm in the thing itself. But the contents! Such a disgrace!"

"What! has any one dared to write me a letter unfit to be read by my wife?"

"Oh! no. It is couched in the most chaste and gentlemanly language. But the contents! the contents!"

Here the wife buried her face in her handkerchief, and commenced sobbing aloud, while the husband eagerly caught up the letter that had been the means of nearly breaking his wife's heart. It was a bill from the printer for nine years' subscription!

The Polar Plant.—A curious production of the western prairies is a plant which has the extraordinary faculty of pointing, compass-like, North and South. Its botanical name is Silphium Laciniatum. The cause of its polarity is yet to be discovered. A careful analysis, by the use of the most delicate tests, gave no trace in it of the magnetic oxide of iron, or of any compound of iron. Maj. Alvord, who has carefully examined this plant, conjectures that the polarity may be due to electric currents, as the plant is full of resinous matter, so as sometimes to be called the "Resin Weed."

Lawyers in California.—From one of Capt. Tobin's letters for the Delta, dated at Tobago, we extract the following: Of nearly two thousand passengers now between Chagres and Panama, about six hundred are lawyers, and four hundred go out with the expectation of being returned to Congress, or the Legislature, at least; seventeen are electioneering for the gubernatorial chair, and twenty-one embryo senators are already calculating the savings to be made on the mileage allowed by Uncle Sam from San Francisco to Washington and back.

Antiquity.—A lawyer and doctor were discussing the antiquity of their respective professions, and each cited authority to prove his the most ancient.

"Mine," said the disciple of Lycurgus, "commenced almost with the world's era. Cain slew his brother Abel, and that was a criminal case in common law!"

"True," said the son of Esculapius, "but my profession is coeval with the creation itself. Old mother Eve was made of a rib taken from Adam's body, and that was a surgical operation!"

Death of an Author.—Edgar A. Poe died suddenly at Baltimore, on the 8th inst. Mr. Poe, says the Sun, was one of the most original and remarkable literary men this country has produced. Like Coleridge, he was both a poet and metaphysician; and but for the misplacement of a noble mind in a frail body, he would have taken the highest niche in the temple of authorship. Early blasted in bright prospects, he became reckless, and making a friend of wine, at last fell its victim. His fate is a double warning as to what genius can and what it may accomplish.

Burr-Stones in Georgia.—In Burke County, in the State of Georgia, a large quarry, embracing an area of 17,000 acres, has been discovered; and a company named the La Fayette Burr Mill Stone Co., has been formed to work it and furnish American mill stones equal to the French burr. The principal office of this company is in Savannah. About 1,000 sets of stones have already been put up, and are now in operation, and some of them along side of the French, where in every instance they have equaled, and a little more, the very best French burrs. We have contrasted them in every way with French burrs, from which, without knowing that the one came from France and the other from Georgia, no person could point out a difference. Those who have used the Georgia stone prefer it for a more enduring fine sharpness, and in that case it is more economical to use. From what we have seen of the Georgia stone, and heard about it from the most respectable sources, respecting its practical results, we are confident that the quarry must be of immense value. Zinc Paint.—The white oxide of zinc is made by the New Jersey Company directly from the ore, and of superior quality, being free from sulphur and arsenic, of a pure white, and blends harmoniously with oils. It appears that it is used to some extent in France, where it was first introduced by Mr. Le Claire, a house painter in Paris, who, having witnessed the ravages which white lead made among the workmen, was induced to devote his time to the discovery of a substitute. His researches resulted in the introduction of the "White Oxide of Zinc"—an article which has none of the poisonous properties of lead, being whiter than lead, reflecting the light instead of absorbing it, and retaining its purity for many years. It is not subject to the action of sulphuric gases.

The Oldest Woman in the World.—The Savannah Republican notices the death of Lauriana Thower, who died in Scriven county, aged, so far as known, one hundred and thirty-three years! She removed from Virginia to Georgia before the Revolutionary War. All her children were born before the Revolution. Her youngest daughter is between seventy and eighty years old. She has grandchildren quite aged, and great-grandchildren over thirty. She always enjoyed good health; her sight was perfect until within a few years, and her mind and memory good. She was probably the oldest woman in the world.

Self-Lighting Segars.—Those who indulge in the habit of smoking, may be interested to learn, that a patent has been taken out in England, by Mr. Jarvis Palmer, of Camberwell, in the County of Surrey, for making self-igniting segars, without any offensive odor. Take 18 parts, by weight, of charcoal, 32 parts of salt prunella, 8 parts of Venetian red, 10 parts cascarilla bark, 1 part oxmuriate of potash, and 14 parts of water, in which is dissolved some gum arabic, or glue will answer. When this is in a fluid state, round pine splinters are dipped two or three times in it, dried, and the dipped part broken off and inserted in the ends of segars. The segars thus furnished are lighted by simply rubbing the nib against any suitable substance, such as a hard wall.

Profits of Mining.—One of the California adventurers, writing from San Francisco, under date of Sept. 1, says: At the mines no two men do alike; but as a general thing they average from $5 to $15 per day over expenses. Some do not make a dollar, while others often make thousands. Not more than one out of twenty diggers makes over $12 a day over expenses; and not more than one in ten makes over $10 per day clear. The mines will, I have no doubt, give employment to 100,000 diggers at an average of $5 per day for 10 or 15 years to come. There are a set of rascally speculators here who are sending home the most extravagant stories of the mines, just to increase the excitement, that they may be able to sell off their lots and build up their new towns.

A Runaway Match.—A marriage was lately celebrated in the parlor of the Mansion House, at Frankfort, Ky., between a runaway couple (a Mr. Noland and Miss Redman) from Fayette, which created some interest, and was attended by the President of the Convention, several officers of state, and other distinguishables. The bridegroom was a middle-aged gentleman of respectable standing, and the bride a beautiful girl of not more than seventeen summers. The only opposition to the marriage was on the part of the bride's mother, who was inexorable. The father was not only willing to the nuptials, but actually stole the girl off from the old woman, and accompanied the lovers in their flight.

City Grave Yards.—The burials in London average above 50,000 per annum. It is deemed that it takes above 20 years to reduce a corpse to harmless dust. There are therefore half-a-million of human bodies in all stages of the progress of putrefaction. It is held dangerous to inter more than 136 bodies to the acre per annum; but most of the parochial graveyards greatly exceed that allowance! In New Bunhill Fields the interments are 2,323 to the acre in a year! In St. John's Clerkenwell, they are 2,073! Seven others which are named in the papers, average 1582. This nuisance is maintained solely for the fees which the ministers of the Established Church derive from burials.

Result of Imagination.—We mentioned, a few days ago, that an Irish woman called at the City Marshal's office, and asked for a piece of the rope with which a man hung himself on a wharf near Charlestown bridge, for the purpose, as she said, of curing the King's Evil. The rope was given her, and she kept it tied round her body for a space of three days. The rope was returned by the woman's husband, who stated that his wife had entirely recovered, and that the troublesome humor had entirely disappeared. [Boston Courier.

It has been remarked in London, that no death nor case of cholera had occurred in any of the gas manufactories. It is presumed, therefore, that the coal gas is destructive of the poison in the atmosphere, which produces cholera.

Ship Building in New York.—The Commercial concludes a detailed account of shipping now in course of completion in the yards of this city, with the following summary:—

There are under construction, and receiving their engines and machinery, the following sail and steam vessels:—

5 steamers of 3,000 tons each, tons,	15,000
1 of 2,200 tons	2,200
1 of 600 tons	600
1 of 400 tons	400
4 steamboats, say	600
11 ships of say 1,200 tons each	13,200
1 bark of say 600 tons	600
1 schooner of say 150 tons	150
25 vessels. Amount of tonnage	32,750

Repairing and rebuilding: 3 Ocean steamers, 1 ship.

Upon almost all these vessels as many hands are employed as can conveniently and advantageously work upon them, and the business would appear to be as prosperous as active.

A PUZZLE FOR A FOREIGNER.

Wife, make me some dumplings of dough,
They're better than meal for my cough;
Pray let them be boiled till hot through,
And not till they're heavy or tough.

Now I must be off to the plough,
And the boys, when they've had enough,
Must keep the flies off with a bough,
While the old man drinks at the trough.

Variety.

The value of the annual consumption of ivory in Sheffield, England, is about £30,000, and about five hundred persons are employed in working it up for trade. The number of tusks to make up the weight consumed in Sheffield (about one hundred and eighty tons, is 45,000. According to this the number of elephants killed every year is 22,500; but supposing that some tusks are cast and some animals die, it may be fairly estimated that 19,000 are killed for the purpose. This is a matter which is not generally known, it being a prevalent opinion that the tusks used for ivory are such as are cast by the elephants when alive.

A London correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, states that Prince Albert has originated the scheme (for next year) of a grand Exhibition of the Arts and Manufactures of the World, in London. Already some of the principal firms in this country have been consulted, and have expressed their desire to co-operate. Prizes—some £5,000—are to be distributed to the skillful of all nations, by the hand of the Queen of England. The show is to be on an unparalelled scale, and a temporary building in Hyde Park is spoken of as its theatre.

The Cincinnati Nonpareil says that a machine is in operation for making brick which feeds itself, and delivers the brick without hands, and presses them so hard that they are ready to be laid into the kiln when they come from the mould, and one machine will turn out 25,000 per day. The clay is better mixed, and makes better brick than those made in the usual way.

Mr. Buchanan has presented to the National Institute, at Washington, a coat of mail, consisting of breast, back and helmet. They were captured in one of the battles of the Mexican war. The helmet bears evidence of several severe sabre cuts, and a blow as from a musket. The weight of the three articles is 26 pounds. Also, the coat of a Mexican lancer, taken at the storming of Monterey.

The following is the copy of a will left by a man who chose to be his own lawyer:—"This is the last will and testament of me, John Thomas. I give all my things to my relations, to be divided among them the best way they can. N. B.—If anybody kicks up a row, or makes any fuss about it, he isn't to have anything. Signed by me,

There is a very honest chap in Boston who wishes to sell his horse. His advertisement runs in this wise:—"For sale, a brown horse, with a Roman nose, in good health, and very fond of traveling—having run away four times during the last week."

The Great Barrington Courier of last week, acknowledges the receipt, from Mr. Plowden Stevens, of N. Marlborough, of a tomato, of his own raising, weighing two and one quarter pounds, and measuring eighteen inches in circumference! Who can beat this?

An Irish tailor, making a gentleman's coat and vest too small, was ordered to take them home and let them out. Some days after, the gentleman inquiring for them, was told that his garments happening to fit a countryman of his, he had let them out at a shilling a week!

The Newark Sentinel received a delicious specimen of peaches taken from a grafted wild horse plum tree. One peach is ten inches in circumference. This is the second year the graft has produced peaches.

Save all your bean stalks and pods. They make superior fodder for sheep. They are not only highly nutricious, but sanitary in their effects. One tun of bean haulm is worth more, and will go further in wintering a flock of sheep, than two tuns of the best English hay.

We see it stated in some of the journals, that in England every 5th person is a drunkard, every 208th a prisoner, and every 700th in a Lunatic Hospital. The two latter classes principally came to their present condition by having belonged to the former or drinking class.

The following maxim of genuine Christian philosophy is attributed to Abd-el-Kader:—"The other world is as to this like the east and the west. We cannot approach the one without turning away from the other."

An inmate of a mad house, being asked what brought him there, replied: "A mere quibble of words, sir. I said everybody was mad, and everybody said I was, and the majority carried it."

Apples for winter use should be picked before the frost is severe. The action of this principle greatly deteriorates their keeping qualities, and produces a tendency to rot early, besides injuring their flavor.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes. Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

"NINE COMMANDMENTS."

Not long since, I purchased a book of an agent of the "American Tract Society," entitled, "Thoughts on Popery," written by William Nevins, D. D., "late pastor of a church in Baltimore." In this book the author holds up to public view many of the errors of the Catholic Church, in a clear and faithful manner quite peculiar to himself. I read the book with interest, and believe it calculated to do good. But I confess I felt mortified, as a Protestant, when I read his article under the above caption. The following scriptures, and the like, kept running through my mind: "Physician, heal thyself,"—"And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou thyself shalt escape the judgments of God?" In this article the Doctor charges the Catholics with "basely going into the holy of holies, opening the ark of the covenant, taking out the tables of stone, and obliterating one of the commands which the divine finger wrote on it." This is a very grave charge, and if true must throw upon the offenders a responsibility too great for erring mortals. Although the Doctor has worked himself into a passion of horror and disgust, yet he, and the Tract Society who have endorsed his sentiments by publishing his book, are in my humble opinion no less guilty than are the Catholics. It is true, that they have not left any of the commandments out of the Decalogue; but what better have they done? While they print them all, they disregard one of them, and trample it under foot every week they live. At the same time, they charge those who do regard it with "heresy," and reject from their churches any who, from among themselves, attempt to keep it, and that frequently without giving the accused the privilege of self-defense. They cry out, "Away with him, for it is not fit that he should live." They hold it in disfellowship. They shut their pulpits against a defense of the fourth commandment. They exclude its defense from their so-called "Sabbath Conventions." They charge its friends with disorder, if they attempt its defense in their Conventions, and put them down by cries of "order, order," all over the house, until disorder every where reigns. They stigmatize its advocates as Judaisers, and call the fourth commandment Judaism. They heap these and the like epithets on both it and its friends, and are studiously laboring to get it legislated out of existence by forcing another commandment, made by men, upon the people in its place. Thus they "make void the command of God" both by their precepts and "traditions." They do, to all intents and purposes, blot out one of "God's holy commands." They make it a mere shadow in its best days, and number it among the things of "bondage, that neither we nor our fathers were able to bear,"—A MERE DEAD LETTER, that is only to be named with reproach when speaking of its obligatory character. And every where they cry against its friends, "These men do exceedingly trouble our city, teaching customs that are not lawful to be observed, being Christians." If this is its character—if it is not to be obeyed—it is not a command; it may once have been, but it is not NOW. This same Tract Society has published books and tracts, affirming that the fourth commandment is abolished. What better off, then, are the Doctor and the Society, than the Catholics in this respect? All their talk against the Catholics on this subject is like "spitting against the wind."

But they say, perhaps, that they do not teach that the commandment is abolished, only as it relates to the day. Well, that alters the case, to be sure—only one half of the command abolished! I am not sure, after all, but they will come out ahead of the Catholics. The Catholics have but "nine commands," and they have nine and a half. They are, therefore, half a command ahead, unless they allow the one the Catholics divided to be two, which they think they cannot do, for, they say, "two halves only make one whole." Half a command—"how that sounds!" But let us see. "Sin is a transgression of the law." "Where there is no law, there is no transgression." So, where there is a half of a commandment, there can be only a half of a sin. This is a new lesson in theology. But as these men believe in "investigation," let us go on. "The wages of sin is death." The wages of a half sin must be a half death. The sinner goes to hell; but what must be done with the poor half-sinner, who is not quite fit for heaven, nor yet bad enough for hell? If it were not for one thing, we might send him to purgatory; but that would be too much like the Catholics—we cannot bear that thought. We might send him, with his half sin, to heaven; but that is going half way over to Universalism, and that will not do. What must be done? This is a case that should be referred to the "court of errors."

I think it would be well for Protestants to be a little careful how they meddle with the eyes of Catholics, until they have got the beams out of their own eyes. Then they might know better how to manage the case. The Doctor says, that if the Catholics 'would confess for this once that they have been wrong, he would drop the matter, and say no more about it.' But I should like to have him and the Tract Society go a little farther, and forsake; for it is somewhere written, "He that confesseth and forsaketh, shall find mercy." Mercy is what is needed in this case. Protestants make themselves look quite awkward in the view of the Catholics, when they talk in such strains of abhorrence about their "leaving out one of the commands," while they at the same time admit that "the Fathers put in the place of the Sabbath the day we call Sunday;" and to deny it, is only to make themselves look more ridiculous in their eyes, and add offense to offense. SCOTT, N. Y., Oct. 17, 1849.

ANTI-SECTARIAN CONVENTION.

This Convention was held Oct. 10th and 11th in the Presbyterian Church in Peterboro, N. Y.

W. W. CHAPMAN, of Chenango, was President.

Z. BROCKETT, of Herkimer, was Vice President.

J. COPELAND, of Madison, and S. R. WARD, of Cortland, and A. PRYNE, of Onondaga, were Secretaries.

The Business Committee consisted of GERRIT SMITH, of Madison, and ABRAM PRYNE, of Onondaga, and Eld. SCOTT, of St. Lawrence. They presented to the Convention the following six Resolutions, Address, and Letter. The Resolutions and Address were adopted. The Letter was approved of and ordered to be printed, and the Resolution contained in it was adopted.

Resolutions.

1st. Resolved, That the Christian church of a place is God-made, and not man-made; comprising all the Christians, and none but the Christians, of such place.

2d. Resolved, That to select a church from the Christian brotherhood of a place, is to reject the church, as God tenders it, and to make, in its stead, a sectarian church.

3d. Resolved, That in determining whether a given person of our locality shall be received into our church-fellowship, the only pertinent question is, not whether he agrees or disagrees with us in his faith and practice, nor whether he honors or violates certain requirements of Christianity; but, simply whether, in our judgment, he is a Christian.

4th. Resolved, That every rightly-conducted church is a simple and thorough democracy; subject to no other ecclesiastical authority than its own, acknowledging the equal right of all its members to exercise their respective gifts in the worshiping assembly; and choosing for its pastor, whom it will, among the "ordained" or "unordained," the "licensed" or "unlicensed."

5th. Resolved, That a small share of the wealth, which even in a single generation, sectarian rivalry wastes in its undue multiplication of pastors and in its undue multiplication and costliness of houses of worship, would, in the hands of a united church, suffice to bless the whole world with a faithfully preached gospel.

6th. Resolved, That as the right to practice medicine consists in the ability to practice it, and as the right to practice law consists in the ability to practice it; so, also, does the right to preach the gospel, instead of being derived from "apostolic succession," or "ordination," or "license," consist simply and solely in the ability to preach it.

Address of the Anti-Sectarian Convention, held in Peterboro, N. Y. Oct. 10th and 11th, 1849.

In that memorable prayer, offered by the Lord Jesus Christ, on the eve of his return to heaven from the scene of his earthly services and sufferings and sorrows, is the petition, "THAT THE WORLD MAY BELIEVE THAT THOU HAST SENT ME." But, notwithstanding this petition, that the world might believe, that Christ is "the sent of God," and that Christianity is not an imposture; and, notwithstanding more than eighteen centuries have passed away since it was uttered, the world is still perishing in unbelief. Not a third of its inhabitants are even nominal Christians—and, compared with the number of nominal Christians, how very few are the real Christians!

Why remains this prayer so long unanswered? The reason is at hand. Christians refuse to do that which must be done ere it can be answered. They refuse to be "one." They are taught on the Saviour's authority, that should they consent to be "one," the world would thereby be converted to God. Nevertheless, they refuse to be "one," and thereby the world remains estranged from God. They are willing that Christians of the same opinions should be "one"—that Christians holding the same views in respect to baptism and the Sabbath, in respect to this doctrine, or that rite, should be of one church-fellowship and one church-sect. But to conform to the Saviour's prayer, that they all, however diverse from each other in their faith, may, nevertheless, be "one"—that they all, however diverse from each other in their practice, may, nevertheless, be "one"—to conform to such a prayer, even though it be the Saviour's prayer, they are entirely unwilling.

Upon this world, which is so wicked, and wretched, and ruined, by reason of its intemperance, and licentiousness, and slavery, and wars, and numberless other crimes—which is, in short, so "dead in trespasses and sins"—Christians do, indeed, look with pity. To redeem and bless it, they would not only "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," but they would, also, make endeavors, more or less earnest, to bring their respective denominations into a state of friendly communication with each other. All this, however, is insufficient. The Saviour's remedy for the wickedness, wretchedness, and ruin of the world still remains indispensable. Would that it might be applied! But, inasmuch as the oneness of Christians is this remedy, Christians will not apply it—for they are in the bondage of their sectarian education, and will, therefore, not consent to be one.

What, then, can be done, that this world may be recovered from its rebellion and ruin? The power of sectarian education must be broken; and they, who have been its subjects, must come] truly and deeply to belive, that Christians are all one—are all members of the mystical body, of which Christ is the Head, and that this body is, as the Scriptures repeatedly teach, the church. Having such belief, they will no sooner think of separating themselves into sects and different fellowships, than of tearing asunder the members of their natural bodies.

Christians, will you not consent to put forth a mighty effort to disenthrall yourselves from sectarianism? We are well aware that your religious training and your concern for your reputation and other personal interests will counsel you to the contrary. We are well aware, that to dare to stand forth against the sects is to dare to lose caste and the means of livelihood, and to suffer great odium and innumerable persecutions. Nevertheless, by all that is precious in the blood of Jesus Christ, and in the souls for whom that atoning blood was shed, we beseech you to put forth a mighty effort to disenthrall yourselves from sectarianism. Delay not to repudiate your sectarian names. Delay not to open the arms of your church-fellowship as wide as Christ opens his, and to receive all whom you believe he receives. You believe that he looks upon the Christians of a place to be the church of such place. Look upon them, then, in this light yourselves. Fear not that because of their mutual differences, all the Christians of a place can not remain in the same church-fellowship. They must remain in it. The gospel makes no provision for their separation into various church-fellowships. In whatever event such separation takes place, and whatever the excuses, which are offered for it, it is satan, and not God, who prompts it. No difficulty—no impossibility even—in agreeing upon a pastor, or upon the forms of worship, or upon aught else pertaining to church relations, can exonerate the Christians of a place from their obligation to assemble together, and to recognize each other as fellow church members. No dissimilarities can be allowed to part those from each other who are one in marriage. Much less can any dissimilarities be allowed to part those from each other who are one in Christ.

That sectarianism will come to a speedy end we dare not hope. Intemperance, licentiousness, slavery, war, are all strongholds of satan. But in sectarianism he has a far stronger hold than in any of these. In these, he musters but the wicked to fight for him. In sectarianism, however, he musters the righteous also. Of all the abominations of earth, none is so much sanctified by the favor and support of the righteous as sectarianism; and, hence, none is so difficult to be overthrown. But there is power with God to overthrow every sin; and to that power would we, in faith, humility, and prayer, betake ourselves for the overthrow of sectarianism; and we would, moreover, summon all to do likewise, who believe with us, that the division of Christians into sects does more than all things else to relieve the conscience of the wicked, to render ineffectual the word of God, and to delay the salvation of the world.

But, though we may not hope that so soon as in our day sectarianism will be driven back to the pit, whence it sprung, we, nevertheless, feel sure that our day is not too soon in which to begin to drive it back. Hence it is, that we have inscribed upon our banner, and with the purpose, God helping us, of keeping it inscribed there, "THE CHRISTIANS OF A PLACE ARE THE CHURCH OF SUCH PLACE." The great truth contained in this motto, will yet be apprehended and acknowledged by all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. May God hasten the blessed time!

Letter from Gerrit Smith to the Anti-Sectarian Convention, held in Peterboro, Oct. 10th and 11th, 1849.

DEAR BRETHREN:—You believe both in the necessity and fact of a divine revelation. You believe that short-sighted and ignorant man needs divine guidance, and that he has it in the Bible. Like other Protestants, you subscribe to the doctrine, that the Bible is, in all matters of religion, the whole rule of faith and practice. But, like them, do you not also practically repudiate this doctrine?

Whilst I rejoice in your freedom from sectarianism, I am afflicted with the apprehension that many, if not, indeed, most of you, admit authorities in your religion, which are entitled to no place there. How large a share of Protestants are ever ready to go to Church History to settle controverted questions! (We of course mean by Church History, other than Bible Church History.) How often, for instance, do they quote from this uninspired source to justify the practice of infant-baptism and of baptismal sprinkling and affusion, and the practice of observing Sunday as the Sabbath, and the practice of dividing Christians into sects? We are not denying that these practices are authorized by the Bible. Possibly they are—all of them. But, whether they are, or are not, there is no liberty to go away from the Bible to find authorities for them—no liberty to seek it in Church History, or any where else than in the Bible. To take such liberty, is to be guilty of virtually adding to God's words, at the risk of incurring God's plagues.

You dread Popery. But, brethren, can we be safe either from Catholic or Protestant popery, or from impairing the power and beauty of Christianity, at any, or even every point, until we sternly and steadfastly insist that in spiritual things, the Bible shall be exclusive authority? Right here—here in the assumed partnership of Church History with the Bible, or rather in the overshadowing of the Bible by Church History—is the great origin of the corruption of Christianity. She had never been corrupted from her simplicity, and had never been made to minister to sectarianism, and had never been made to cover the greatest crimes and abominations, had the Bible been left to be her only textbook, and the only decisive evidence of her character and claims. Moreover, an exclusively Bible Christianity had, long ago, spread her triumphs over the whole earth.

Pardon me, brethren, for asking you to adopt the following Resolution:—

"Resolved, That inasmuch as the Bible is exclusive authority in religion, it is in the light of the Bible only, and not partly in the light of Church History, or any thing else, that we are to decide what must be our religious beliefs and practices, and, that having so decided—whether it be in respect to sectarianism, baptism, the Sabbath, or any other doctrine or duty of Christianity—we must, as for the life of our souls, and at whatever expense to the inferior and transient life, faithfully abide by, and scrupulously carry out, our decisions."

Such a Resolution, coming from such a body, can not fail to do good. And how peculiarly proper it is, that such a Resolution should come from such a body! You are met to oppose sectarianism; and how can you oppose it more successfully than by taking your stand in behalf of a purely Bible Christianity!

Never, in our country, so much as at the present time, has the inspiration of the Bible been called in question. On the right hand and on the left, it is sought to supplant it with human authorities. How needful, therefore, that every friend of this God-given Book should contend, that the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, shall be authority in religion!

Fraternally yours,
GERRIT SMITH.

"I CAME FOR WAR, I GO FOR PEACE."

In April of thirty-six, a student left the walls of college and went to McKean County, in Pennsylvania, to visit an aged mother. This is one of the new and sparsely inhabited counties of that wealthy State. Its inhabitants are subjected to many physical and many more spiritual privations. Few churches and still fewer of God's ministers were there. The surrounding destitution stirred the spirit of our young friend, and in accordance with the wishes of several pious persons, he commenced in a small school-room a series of religious meetings. A deep religious interest was the result. The room became too strait, and the meetings were removed to the Court House at the county seat. Conversion followed conversion. The report went out into the surrounding settlements, and many were induced to attend the meetings. A man of gray hairs was seen making his way towards the Court House, in company with the worshipers. He was a man of notorious vileness, and a scourge to the neighborhood. He had not gone to the town to attend the meeting, but to prosecute some of his neighbors. Curiosity drew him to the court room, and he heard, probably for the first time in many years, the Gospel of the grace of God. He was pricked in his heart, and asked, "What shall I do to be saved?" Pointed to the Saviour of the chief of sinners, he soon learned how freely Jesus can forgive. On the Sunday evening before he left for home, he arose in the conference meeting, and spoke with much feeling, of the mercy of God shown to him, and the great change which he had experienced. "I came here, said he, for war, but I am going home for peace. I once hated my neighbors, and I came here to prosecute them, but I am going home to ask their forgiveness, and try to do them good." And he did. He established worship in his own house, went about confessing and exhorting among his neighbors, and, as the result, God converted a goodly number of souls.

Here we see, 1. The peaceful influence of the Gospel. Heralded by the song "peace on earth, and good will to men," when it enters the heart, it disarms and subdues enmity and leads at once to acts of benevolence. Let us pray for the spirit of the Gospel. Let divided churches, or alienated individuals, pray for that spirit, and strife will cease. 2. Christian charity will invariably lead to acts of benevolence. Reader, have you the spirit of peace? If so, you are happy indeed. If not, O pray for it without ceasing. God will forgive and bless you, "even as you forgive those who have trespassed against you."

CHILD'S EVENING PRAYER.

A few evenings since, while on a visit to a pious female friend, her sprightly little daughter came in to bid her mother "Good night." The child was told first to say her evening prayer, which she did with great apparent reverence and propriety. It seemed so beautiful and appropriate that we requested a copy, and give it to our readers, thinking that other mothers may wish to teach it to their children. [Pres. Treas.

AN EVENING PRAYER.

Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me!
  Bless thy little lamb to-night!
Through the darkness be thou near me,
  Watch my sleep till morning light!

All this day thy hand has led me—
  And I thank thee for thy care;
Thou hast clothed me, warmed and fed me—
  Listen to my evening prayer.

Let my sins be all forgiven!
  Bless the friends I love so well!
Take me, when I die, to heaven,
  Happy there with thee to dwell!

HOME.

The old grey mansion looks upon the woods,
  The lawns lie green beneath the mellow light;
I hear the olden song of falling floods,
  That fills the silent hollow of the night.

That is the chamber window whence I sprang;
  Those the old oaks of many centuries,
In whose great leafy boughs I loved to hang,
  And make strange playmates of the mighty trees.

The stream I leap'd in boyhood dashes down
  In falls and mossy windings as of yore;
Still sleeps the sunlight on the hill's dense crown,
  Whose base is ocean-swept with ceaseless roar.

And once that roar seemed music—once I lay
  In the rich orchard, underneath the sky,
In childish visions all the summer day—
  It seemed the whisper of eternity.

All the long solitary years of life
  Forgotten, I am now again a child;
Forgotten all the earnest toil and strife,
  Behold me willful, petulent, and wild.

Again a child; O were it true indeed,
  That I might meet you, playmates of the past,
Nor this unresting spirit inly bleed
  With a poor happiness which may not last.

Again to mock the chasm with ardent leap,
  Again to thrill the glades with ardent breath;
O futile dream—in distant isles ye sleep,
  Unknown, save to the icy eye of death.

And could we meet, with hair grown thin and grey,
  And care marked sadly on each weary brow—
Alas! not those who dared the flashing bay,
  And rocked and shouted in the windy bough.

Again a child; those wavering branches then,
  Where the last echoes of the stream rejoice,
Might yield that unforgotten form again,
  And I might once more hear my mother's voice.

Where southern seas under bright heavens lie,
  That voice has haunted oft the summer air:
O come thou now, beneath no alien sky,
  And teach thy sorrowing child another prayer.

ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES AT ALFRED.

In my peregrinations I happened to be present at the Examination and Anniversary of the Alfred Academy. This Academy started about ten years since, under the immediate supervision of W. C. Kenyon, A. M., and has had a steady increase, so that instead of occupying but one building, it now finds use for four, and instead of one teacher it has now thirteen. The North Hall, occupied exclusively by gentlemen, is five stories in front, 38 by 52; South Hall, same size and height, occupied exclusively by ladies; Middle Hall, three stories high, and 96 by 48, occupied by the Principals and their families; West Hall, 62 by 72, two stories high, occupied by students who board themselves. The first three overlook the pleasant little villa below, which before the Academy was—was not. This institution is supplied with extensive apparatus, a manikin, a telescope, &c.; the whole cost of buildings and all, is over $17,000. The buildings are warmed by the improved method of heated air.

For the current year its catalogue numbered 450, exceeding the number in attendance at many of our colleges. Second to none in the State in point of numbers, unless it be the Albany Academy, we are confident it is to none in thoroughness and discipline of mind. The New England industry and mental disposition of the Principal have imparted a force to those under his instruction, which makes them but new editions of himself.

Of the exercises of the "Anniversary Day," let the 3,000 who witnessed them, speak. Though interesting as they were, still, compared with the examination, they were but as "a drop in the bucket." For it is impossible in a production of four minutes' length to exhibit that research of thought or discipline of mind, which may be discovered and brought out during the course of an examination. Having attended several in various parts of Western New York, I can unqualifiedly say, that I never attended one so thorough.

The demonstrations and discussions of the most difficult propositions and examples in trigonometry—the development of the logarithmic series and formulas in Bourdon, showed minds trained to a very high state of intellectual discipline, and which need not fear a challenge for better explanations or solutions, from students in any of the best colleges in our land.

The same thoroughness was seen in the classical department. The various inflections were accompanied with a ready understanding of the almost numberless rules for euphony, contractions, observations, exceptions and remarks, and reasons for the same; in short, throughout, from the "model class," upward, not one, or a few, but the whole were thus thoroughly trained. Already have they sent out those who took but one year to graduate.

I understand that many at first complain of the trying ordeal through which they pass, and a few parents, who have more sympathy than reason in reference to the best good of their children, indulge their grievances by allowing them to stay at home. But those who do remain, and stand the test, this examination clearly showed, are to become lights and guides to those who follow after, and like "stars in the firmament, shine clearer and brighter as each successive generation shall have passed away."

If there is any one thing, or the want of any one thing, which characterizes our institutions of learning at the present day, it is the want of that discipline of mind which is to make the student a sound thinker, independent, and ready to make a practical adaptation of the branches studied, to the various and common pursuits of life. And he must be blind to the signs of the times, who cannot see that the wants of the age require minds of more than ordinary training and discipline. Not only do the signs indicate this want, but already does the age call for them. It is an age in which infidelity popery and other unhallowed influences, are gaining an ascendancy, and prevailing to an alarming extent. Better, far, for the parent to withhold the nutriment necessary to strengthen and support the physical being of his child, than to deprive him of that intellectual food which is to expand and develop his spiritual being.

Now, too, the journey of months is but so many days, and even our thoughts are not our own, unless we keep them locked in the empire of mind, for as soon as expressed, by the agency of electricity, they are almost instantaneously transmitted to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Then with such facilities for sending out the Light and Truth to surrounding nations, and for evangelizing the world, tell me not there is no call for well-trained, and highly-disciplined minds, and just such the Alfred Academy is sending out.

My thoughts were dwelling so intently on the conclusion—I had almost forgotton to state that immediately at the close of the anniversary exercises the Hymenial Altar was placed upon the stage, and there, in the presence of the assemblage in the grove, Mr. Jonathan Allen, A. B., late of Oberlin College, and Miss Abigail A. Maxson, were sacrificed, willing victims to the justice of its claims. Each compose a part of the present Board of Instruction—omenous of strength in this Institution, for in "union there is strength." VIATOR.

JOHN ROGERS AND HIS "NINE CHILDREN," &C.

A writer in the Cambridge (Mass.) Chronicle thus puts at rest the vexed question—How many children had John Rogers?—which has puzzled all readers of the Old New-England Primer:—

How often have children been puzzled by the ambiguity of the expression, "nine small children and one at the breast," not knowing whether the last named was intended to be included in, or added to, the number first mentioned. Sometimes they tried to solve the difficulty by counting the heads of the children in the picture: but the artist, modestly declining to meddle with matters beyond his business, used, in the old Primers, to leave the matter as much in the dark as he found it. A glorious indistinctness in the picture renders it utterly impossible to distinguish the children of the Martyr from the common crowd; and thus in obscurity the matter remained for nearly two centuries. In the recent edition—"with an historical introduction by H. Humphrey, D. D., President of Amherst College,"—and in the one of which over one hundred thousand copies have lately been circulated by the Massachusetts Sunday-School Society, the publishers have attempted to settle the matter by giving us a distinct picture, in which the spectators are left out, and the wife and nine small children, besides the one at the breast, are plainly represented.

The earliest published history of the martyrdom is "Foxe's Acts and Monuments of these latter and perilous Dayes," printed in London, A. D. 1562, only seven years after the death of Rogers, and while the numerous family were living. It contains the following statement:—

"His wife and children, being XI in number, X able to go out, and one sucking on her breast, met him on the way as he went towards Smithfield."

A person inclined to skepticism as to the accuracy of the proposed correction, may perceive a slight degree of ambiguity in the language of Foxe; therefore I produce another evidence. In Middleton's Evangelical Biography, Vol. 1, page 302, we read: "His wife and ten children by her side, with one at the breast, met him by the way." As the matter is one that has become hallowed in the minds of many by early associations, they may be unwilling to change their long cherished views without still further testimony of the correctness of the alterations. For their benefit I will give one extract from a recent publication—the result of great research and a work of the Highest authority on historical and other matters pertaining to the period of which it treats: "The Annals of the English Bible by Christopher Anderson, London, 1845." On the 26th page of the second volume may be found this passage:—

"The people were giving thanks for his constancy, but there among the crowd, there met him the wife, whom neither Gardiner nor Bonner would permit him to see. * * * * * the eldest now nearly seventeen years of age; the youngest, or the ELEVENTH child, an unconscious babe now hanging at the mother's breast!"

Thus it has been shown from the highest English authority—the earliest and the latest—that the true number of Mr. Rogers' children was not nine, nor ten, but eleven. The error may at first have been merely typographical—arising from the transposition of the numerical letters XI, as originally printed in Foxe. Later historians, copying at second hand, have helped to perpetuate the error.

THE SIN OF DOING NOTHING.

In an old religious magazine there are the following questions on the words, "Curse ye Meroz." The writer says:

"By whose authority? The angel of the Lord.

"What has Meroz done? Nothing.

"Why, then, is Meroz to be cursed? Because he did nothing.

"What ought Meroz to have done? Come to the help of the Lord.

"Could not the Lord do without Meroz? The Lord did do without Meroz.

"Did the Lord sustain, then, any loss? No; but Meroz did.

"Is Meroz, then, to be cursed? Yes, and that bitterly.

"Is it right that man should be cursed for doing nothing? Yes, when he ought to do something.

"Who says so? The angel of the Lord,—'That servant who knew his Lord's will, and did not according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.' Luke 12: 47."

A mass of the private correspondence of Calvin has been discovered in one of the French libraries, and is about to be published. Fears have been expressed, that the Minister of Public Instruction, who is a Jesuit, will compel some mutilation of the letters relating to Popery.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 8, 1849.

"NOT THE JEWISH BUT THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH."

We introduced Mr. Bennett's Sermon to our readers last week. We will now give them a little farther acquaintance with this remarkable production. One of the most extraordinary things we find in it, is his denial that the design of the Sabbath is to commemorate the work of creation. Read his language:—

"If it should be asserted, as it sometimes is, that the end of the sabbatic institution is to commemorate creation, there is reason to dissent. The error consists in putting one of the media, through which the end is to be reached, for the end itself."

After denying that the design of the Sabbath was to serve as a memorial of creation, it was, of course, due to his hearers that he should inform them what was its design; and, on this point, he has expressed himself very "safely."

"It may safely be concluded, that the final cause or end of the sabbatic institution is to foster and perpetuate in the mind of man, a saving knowledge of the being and character of God."

We think just so, Mr. B.; it is a very safe conclusion which you come to. We agree with you perfectly. But is not this the "final cause or end" of every other institution enjoined in the Scriptures? Is it not the end of Baptism, of the Lord's Supper, of the Passover, of all the sacrifices of the law? Is it not, in short, the final cause or end of the whole system of Divine revelation? To bring man to a saving knowledge of God, and to perpetuate that knowledge in his mind, is the grand object for which Christ died. It is the ultimate design of both dispensations, the Mosiac and Christian; and all the providential dealings of God with his people, from first to last, have this object in view. Whatever sagacity our author evinces in discovering that the Sabbath is included in the number of those institutions which ultimately look to the accomplishment of this great object, we doubt not our readers will give him full credit for. But though this be the final cause or end of all the institutions of religion, the Sabbath included, it may be just as "safely" concluded that each particular institution has its own particular and immediate design. And the immediate design of the sabbatic institution is to commemorate creation; Mr. B. to the contrary notwithstanding. It was a trick of sophistry in Mr. B.—not very honorable to him if he intended to mislead; not very creditable to his intellect if he did not himself perceive it—thus to draw away his hearers from the consideration of the immediate and direct design of the Sabbath, by holding up before them its ultimate design. The consciences of men tell them, that the ultimate design of all the institutions of religion is "to foster and perpetuate in the mind of man a saving knowledge of the being and character of God." And when Mr. B. told his audience that this was the "final cause or end" of the sabbatic institution, we doubt not that their consciences responded Amen. The most of them were probably plain, unsophisticated people, unaccustomed to the acuteness of logical discrimination, and therefore not likely to make any distinction between the immediate and ultimate ends of a religious institution. If we had been present, and told them that the immediate design of the Sabbath was to serve as a memorial of God's wisdom, power, righteousness and goodness, as displayed in creation, we doubt not that their consciences would have just as readily responded Amen. And here would have been an apparent conflict between the honest dictates of conscience. There being such a conflict, how would they decide? Of course, in such a case, they would be very apt to decide in accordance with their preconceived opinions and prejudices; and Mr. B. would consequently seem to have the advantage in the discussion. But, if he is an honest man, we put it to him before God, that he has no business to secure a triumph in this way. He triumphs, not over man, but over God's truth; temporarily and apparently only, it is true, for in the end truth shall sweep away every vestige of falsehood. We put it to Mr. B. again, and with all solemnity, that he owes it to those plain, honest-hearted people, whom his wily sophistry has misled, to undeceive them—to show them the clear distinction between the immediate and ultimate ends of the sabbatic institution—to stand up like a man, or rather like a Christian, and confess his error. "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts." Mal. 2:6.

But admitting that the end of the Sabbath is "to foster and perpetuate in the mind of man a saving knowledge of the being and character of God," does it make no difference in what way we undertake to secure that end? We acknowledge, that provided the end be certainly attained, the mode of attaining it is of little consequence. But we cannot admit, that any one mode is as likely to attain it as another. Indeed, our author himself seems to admit as much. He says, "that labor and rest, in proportions of time the same as those in which God labored and rested, is a suitable and efficient means thereto." We go farther; we maintain that such a mode of attaining the proposed end as man would suggest, is not as "suitable and efficient" as the mode which God has enjoined. And here, again, our author agrees with us. He says "that to celebrate those acts of infinite power and goodness which most clearly demonstrate his being and forcibly illustrate his character, are wisely ordained"—[ORDAINED, that's the word]—"as a medium through which to reach the end, a saving knowledge of God." We suppose him to mean, that God has ordained the celebration of his acts of infinite power and goodness, as the proper and sure method of attaining a saving knowledge of him. If he does not mean this, we do not know what he means. We hope to make it appear, before we have done, that the commemoration of God's rest day has been wisely ordained for this purpose.

PRESBYTERIANISM vs. CONGREGATIONALISM.

For many years past, the Congregational and New School Presbyterian churches in the vicinity of New York have jogged on together very good-naturedly and comfortably, each looking with sympathy upon the efforts of the other, and both regarding with comparative indifference the efforts of their "sectarian" neighbors. About a year ago, however, a paper was established in New York, and edited with talent and spirit, which gave considerable prominence to the peculiarities of the Congregationalists. The Presbyterians also established a paper, upon a liberal basis, in the conduct of which their best talents were enlisted. Under the influence of these papers, the Congregationalists have been growing more congregational, and the Presbyterians more presbyterial. On the 16th ult., the New School Presbyterian Synod of New York held a meeting at Montrose, Pa., which was attended by upwards of one hundred ministers. About the first business which came up, we are told, was a free conversation on the state of the churches, with a view to the preparation of a pastoral letter. Dr. Cox said, "As a denomination we want more of the esprit du corps; until lately we have scarcely had enough to keep together." He enlarged on the importance of church extension:—

"If nothing else waked us, the ferocity of these migratory Congregational bodies ought to do it. Hear them warning every thing and every body against that great Presbyterian barathrum, which is so soon to engulf them, unless Congregationalism fills it up! But they can't fill it up, any more than we can go to Boston and fill up the great barathrum of Congregationalism there. It would be in as good taste, as gentlemanly, as Christian, for us to do so, as for them to do what they are now doing to us. They were sadly mistaken about their progress. People were not willing to live on floating islands; they wanted some sure foundation on which to build, something far better than this pseudo-Congregationalism-Independency! He loved the old-fashioned Congregationalists; he always would love them, and they ought to love us, and do love us; but this filius degener was another matter."

Dr. Stiles enumerated four causes of the want of the esprit du corps; 1. Episcopacy, proselyting the men of wealth; "2. This new-fashioned Congregationalism, or Independency, driving the wedge to split us every day, and all the while warring against us as if we were more in their way than any-thing else;" 3. Worldliness; "4. An excess of catholicity, an over-liberal spirit among us." He "had no fear of sectarianism;" there must be "union among us in order to church extension."

Dr. Skinner followed. He commenced by saying, that "nothing he had heard for many years had pleased him so much as the speeches of Drs. Cox and Stiles. In every possible way, and by every possible means that were right, the denominational spirit which had lately sprung into existence ought to be fostered in our church. He verily believed that God had suffered these Independent Congregationalists to come out against us; yes, specifically against us, more than against Episcopalians or anything else, for the express purpose of WAKING US UP!"

At a later stage of the meeting, Rev. Erskine Mason, D. D., from a committee appointed a year ago, reported on the subject of the New York Presbyterian; that the Committee had attended to their duty, and issued the paper "as the organ of the Synod of New York and New Jersey;" that "nearly all the difficulties have been overcome;" that "the pecuniary affairs connected with it have been satisfactorily arranged, and a firm basis for future operations laid, which determines the question of permanency," and now "it is designed to give a more distinctive character to the paper, as the organ of constitutional Presbyterians."

Mr. Hatfield said that inasmuch as the Synod had authorized the publication of the paper, "they ought to regard it as the child of the Synod," and every member should not only consider himself as an agent, but as a correspondent." As all were aware, they were driven into this matter by absolute necessity.

Mr. Duffield remarked on "the anxiety with which he had marked the earliest germ of a denominational spirit that had been developed in our body, and the delight that he had experienced in finding, since the last General Assembly, that constitutional Presbyterians were no longer a body without a soul."

These extracts will suffice to show that in the neighborhood of New York Presbyterianism and Congregationalism are rapidly assuming an antagonistic attitude. The prospect does not alarm us; on the contrary, we are glad to hear these people acknowledge, that there is some "sectarianism" among themselves as well as among other denominations. It is to be hoped that the lesson they are now learning will serve to modify the harsh judgments they sometimes pass upon others.

THE SUNDAY REFORM GOING BACKWARD.

Great efforts have been made, both in this country and in England, to secure a reform in the manner of keeping what is commonly called "the Lord's Day" or "the Christian Sabbath." Railroad directors, mail-contractors, and post-masters, have been plied with all sorts of arguments, except Bible arguments, to induce them to oppose Sunday labor. They have been told that more money can be made without such labor than with it, that the public can be equally well served, and that the influence of men in the community will be greatly increased by opposing it. These are strong arguments, surely; and they have prevailed in many cases, as the stopping of railroad trains and the opposition to Sunday mails testify. But we have always had suspicions that a reform based upon such arguments would be incomplete and short-lived. Two facts have come to light within the past few days, which so strengthen our suspicions, and corroborate the opinions we have frequently expressed on the subject, that we copy and place together the full accounts of them, to which we solicit particular attention.

From the Boston Christian Watchman and Reflector.

Desecrating the Sabbath.

We learn that the Directors of the Boston and Worcester Railroad have determined, in spite of the opposition of a strong minority, to run a train of cars on Sunday, into the City from Newton in the morning, and out after public worship. This is ostensibly to accommodate church goers from the country to the city, but it is doubtful if enough will improve the opportunity to pay a tithe of the expenses. If profit accrues to the company by this desecration of the Sabbath, it will be from other persons than church goers. But, even if the entire population of Newton, and other towns near depots, were to leave their homes on Sunday morning in the cars, and attend church in this City all day, the outrage upon conscience, religion and public opinion, would be none the less flagrant.

The Directors, in thus openly desecrating the Sabbath, have assumed a fearful responsibility. They have done just what Sabbath-breakers will every where applaud, and furnished the little combination of Sabbath opposers in this State with fresh food for their disorganizing agitations, and inspired them with new hopes of essentially affecting an abolition of all laws designed to uphold and sanctify the day of rest. * * * *

The movement we now condemn is a defiance of public opinion. No actual necessity demands it; the sternest requisitions of society forbid it. If tolerated, a bolder step will be taken, a more diffusive evil will follow, other corporations will take heart, and Massachusetts railroads, running out from the metropolis to almost every point of New England, will be cited as evidences of degeneration in the descendants of the Pilgrims. Let the Directors and Stockholders of the Boston and Worcester Corporation bear in mind these possibilities, these probabilities, nay, these certainties. It is not too late for them to retrace their steps.

Sunday Post-office Work in London.

A resolution of the post-office authorities, to commence Sabbath labor in the London office, has caused considerable excitement, not only in the religious public, but amongst the merchants and traders of London generally; and there was a large and influential meeting held on Wednesday to protest against it. The manner in which this has been attempted is truly disgraceful, inasmuch as it was sought to be effected under cover of a fraudulent pretence of lessening post-office labor generally on the Lord's Day. The case is precisely this: Throughout the country Saturday is a blank post day; that is to say, no country post-office dispatches any bag to London on the afternoon of that day, but the cross post communication is kept up. The effect of this is somewhat to lighten the Saturday labor in the country, and to give the London office rest. The dispatches from London on Saturday night are enormous, and many tons of letters and Sunday papers are precipitated upon the country offices on Sundays for distribution. The new scheme, which proposes to be for the relief of the country offices, does not suppress the Saturday night's dispatch from London, but limits the Sunday deliveries in the country to one. The country towns will still have to be traversed by the postmen once, and the country messengers, the rural postmen, will still have to labor their seven days, and know no rest. On the other hand, the country post-offices are now to make a dispatch to London on Saturday evenings; thus throwing a vast mass of correspondence on the London office on Sunday for the first time. The real motive for the change, but to which not the least reference has been made, is this: A very large portion of the whole correspondence of the country is now centralized on London, and thence distributed; as there is no dispatch to London on Saturday evenings, there is a loss of, in many cases, twenty-four hours in the distribution of a letter. For example, a letter posted on Saturday at Exeter, in the west of England, for Norwich in the east, would have to remain at Exeter till Sunday evening; now, it is said, Exeter shall dispatch on Saturday, and the general office in London shall forward on Sunday. Doubtless this is a very important change; the suspension of the post on Saturdays, particularly since the circulation has been so centered on London by the railway system, has been the cause of much inconvenience, and apart from the religious view, and the relief of the great body of overworked London post-office clerks, there is much to be said for it; but the odious thing is, that an insulting and lying pretence of Sunday relief is put forward to cover additional Sunday labor, and because it is not now proposed to deliver in London on Sundays, the authorities persist in attempts to mystify the religious public. * * * *

The Bishop of London, with some thirty of his clergy and a vast number of "bankers, merchants, and churchwardens," waited in a deputation upon Lord John Russell, to induce his interference and direction, that the new arrangement should not be carried out. Lord John called to his assistance the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Sir Charles Wood,) and the Postmaster General (Lord Clanricarde,) in receiving the deputation. Some of their arguments he met by statements of what was new—there have always been a few officials on Sabbath duty even in London, for the purpose of sorting and forwarding letters to the ministers of State, therefore the principle was not new; the new arrangement would lessen the Sunday labor over the whole country, though it might add somewhat to that done in London; the general religious arguments could not hold good against the strong reasons of a political and social character which demanded the change. The Bishop of London pleaded with much warmth and pertinacity, but Lord John was argumentative and obstinate, and would give no hope that the new measure would be given up. The regulation will therefore come into force. The a priori argument in favor of the new regulation is that it will serve the public interests on an extended scale, by simplifying and symmetrizing the official routine, and will at the same time abridge the Sunday labor in the provinces. The drawback is in its latent tendency towards a general opening of the post-office for all purposes on Sunday, in the metropolis as well as in the country. Good people dread this tendency, and say they see in it but another evidence of the general advance of irreligion.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I am obliged to "One of the Initiated" for so promptly answering my inquiries. At another time I intend farther to notice his article. At present, I am disposed to meet, as directly as I conveniently can, the apparent desire of your correspondent to have something offered upon the resolution of the Conference.

As the communications of your correspondent evidently originated in an impression, that the views of the Conference on the subject were not correct, and being aware that others entertain such views of the case as he appears to, I intend to present, in part at least, the view of the subject which led me to vote for the resolution. But in this article, which must unavoidably be short, I wish to make a few preliminary remarks, in order to guard against some danger which attends the investigation of this, as well as other subjects.

I intend to avoid, in treating on this subject, pronouncing upon the virtues (comparatively) of those who do and those who do not belong to Secret Societies. It is not, however, that I have no opinion on this point, or that my opinion is so unfavorable thereupon that I choose to keep it out of sight. I have several reasons for guarding against such a course, either of which will show the importance of doing so. The first is, that to do so does not come within the range of my subject, as the resolution in question says nothing on that point. The second is, that the introduction of that topic confuses the mind, rouses the passions, and renders the perception of the truth next to impossible, when, otherwise, it would be seen in the clear and strong light of a demonstration. I may notice, that when the practical influence of Secret Societies comes under consideration, there will be found more liability of really or seemingly falling into a comparison of the virtues of the members of Secret Societies and others, than when the other parts of the subject are being handled. And yet it is necessary that we unflinchingly investigate that department of the subject. The propriety of these remarks will be better understood when we remember that professors of Christianity, and members of the same churches, take the most opposite views of this matter. In this connection I will admit, that it is possible, for anything that I know, for persons to regard Secret Societies as consistent with Christianity, though I do not know how it is that they can arrive at such a view. If others understand the mode of reasoning by which, and know it to be a fact that, they do come to such a conclusion, it may afford them satisfaction; but it does not yield me any advantage in judging of the matter. So, whether others can comprehend it or reap any advantage from it or not, there is one thing that I know, which is of importance to me, namely, that in opposing Secret Societies I am clear of any wish to injure any person, either my covenant brethren or others. I therefore am able to proceed in this design with a consience void of offense in that respect.

In my next, I shall try to say something by way of argument.

A MEMBER OF THE CONFERENCE.

A CLERICAL SUIT FOR LIBEL.—Rev. Joy H. Fairchild, of Boston, has commenced a suit for libel against Rev. Dr. Adams, laying the damages at ten thousand dollars. It seems that in 1845, Mr. Fairchild was tried and convicted by an ecclesiastical council for a breach of the seventh commandment. Subsequently the Suffolk South Association, of which he was a member, took up the subject, and passed a vote excluding him from that body. A certified copy of this vote having been furnished Mr. F., he sent a printed letter to each member of the Association, asking that the vote be rescinded, for the reason that the causes of his exclusion, as set forth on the records, were false and libelous. His letter closed as follows:—

"I further ask, that you will notify me officially, that the vote has been thus rescinded; for as it now stands, I am told, by a competent judge of the law, that it is a perpetual libel, re-affirmed by the admission of every new member into your body, and especially will this libel be renewed by a vote not to rescind it."

At a meeting of the Association, held in August last, it was voted not to comply with the request of Mr. F. In consequence of this refusal, the action has been commenced against Dr. Adams, as one of the members of the Association, each member being equally liable to a similar action.

TROUBLE IN THE SLAVEHOLDERS' CAMP.—A question has arisen in the bosom of Southern society, says the Independent, which will create more trouble than could be made by a score of abolition societies at the North. With the continually increasing intelligence and capacity of slaves, and the continual pressure upon the market of the agricultural products of slave labor, there is a growing propensity among the slaveholders to extend the sphere of employment for the slaves by putting them forward into mechanical trades. The mechanics object to working by the side of slaves, and complain of the competition of slave labor as putting down prices below the rate at which freemen can live. A meeting of journeymen was held, Sept. 20, at Petersburg, Va., at which it was

Resolved, That we regard the teaching of any negro any branch of the mechanic arts, as prejudicial to the interests and injurious to the morals of the white class; and that we will not work for any employer who shall take a negro into his employ for the purpose of learning any branch of mechanic arts."

On the other hand, the Hamburg Republican, South Carolina, thinks slaves ought to learn all trades, because, "it is certainly the interest of the South to be as independent of the North as possible;" and it is quite at "a loss to understand the policy of those who raise a hue and cry against the Wilmot Proviso, and in the next breath contend for excluding slaves from the most profitable occupations, merely to keep those places for Northern laborers." And the Rome Southerner, Georgia, denounces a gentleman who delivered a lecture before the Mechanic's Society at Macon, because he held it "not compatible with the dignity of white men to work at any mechanical trade in company with negroes," and "purposes to dignify the trades by excluding the competition of the negroes."

DECREASE OF MINISTERS.—The decline in the number of candidates for the gospel ministry, among the Old School Presbyterian Churches, is occasioning considerable anxiety. The venerable Dr. Alexander expresses the opinion, that while the primary cause of this evil is "the withholding of the influence of the Holy Spirit from the churches, there is another cause which is likely to go on increasing unless properly removed, and that is the inadequate provision made for the support of ministers." He says that in the Free Church of Scotland every pastor receives from the Sustentation Fund at least $600 per year, and efforts are being made to increase that fund so that every pastor will receive $750. The Doctor remarks, in conclusion, that "unless better provision be made for the support of ministers of mediocre talents, you may rest assured that the decrease in the number of candidates which has already begun will go on."

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The receipts for the month of October were $24,500; expenses, $72,055. Grants of Scriptures were made to Minnesota, to a Baptist church in New Jersey, to the American Union Missionary Society for Siam, on the application of Mr. Tappan to Indiana, to the American and Foreign Christian Union, to the Cherokee Nation, to J. Demarest at Rio Grande, to the American Seamen's Friend Society, to Hayti, to Panama, to California, to Smyrna, and to various other places in our own and foreign lands. Five new societies were recognized as auxiliary; two in North Carolina, one in Georgia, one in Texas, and one in the Choctaw Indian Nation, called the Choctaw Nation Bible Society. A letter from the French and Foreign Bible Society showed the progress of the work of Bible distribution in France, the great demand for increased funds, and the extensive calls that are constantly made for the Bible in that wide and interesting field.

REVIVAL IN WALES.—A paper published at Utica, N. Y., the organ of the Welch Congregationalists in the United States, says that the southern part of Wales has been wonderfully blessed with the out-pourings of the Holy Spirit. "To the Church at Kendle, three hundred have been added. The Rev. Mr. Hughes, of Dowlais, received on one Sunday four hundred and forty-seven additions to the Church under his care. Such a gracious visitation has never before blessed the mining regions; thousands of converted souls are young in this second Pentecostal revival; and its influence is extending daily."

DEPARTURE OF MISSIONARIES.—On Sabbath afternoon last, the brig Lowder, Capt. Brown, sailed from New York for the West coast of Africa, having on board Rev. J. L. Mackey and wife, Rev. G. W. Simpson and wife, and Rev. J. Best, missionaries for Gaboon; J. S. Brooks and wife, and Sarah Kinsen, for the Mendi mission; Adolphus Pike, for Sierra Leone; Jos. Berry and wife, and Mrs. M. Webb for Liberia, mostly missionaries under patronage of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. A farewell meeting took place on the previous evening, in one of the New York churches, at which appropriate religious services were conducted.

THE BIBLE FOR THE ARMENIANS.—The Board of the American Bible Society has made an appropriation of $5,000 to aid in publishing the entire Bible, with marginal references, for the use of the Armenians in Turkey. The edition will consist of 5,000 copies, and is estimated at $15,000, which sum will be required in the course of the next three years.

BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES IN BOSTON.

The meeting of the Massachusetts Baptist Convention was held last week. It appears, from the Treasurer's Report, that the whole amount received by the Board is $4,054—$1,678 of which has been paid to feeble churches of the State; to the American Baptist Missionary Union $200; American Baptist Home Missionary Society, $1,358; Education Society $17; to the support of the Missionary $716; services of Recording Secretary $125; printing and incidentals $86. Reports from the different Associations were then listened to.

The Convention assembled again in the evening, and listened to the reading of reports from the various churches; after which a few remarks were made by Rev. Mr. Fitz, Missionary of the Convention. A Committee of one from each Association was appointed to average an increased assessment of $2,000 on the churches, for the support of an additional Missionary. After which the Convention adjourned.

The Convention on Ministerial Education was organized by the choice of Governor Briggs as Chairman. Rev. Mr. Caldicott presented his Report, suggesting the following topics for the consideration of the Convention: 1st. What qualifications ought to be required of an applicant, in order to entitle him to the benefactions of the Society; 2d. The amount of aid that shall be given to the student, and the restrictions under which it shall be given; 3d. At what institutions shall the beneficiaries be allowed to pursue their studies; 4th. The course of study and training which shall be required of the beneficiaries; and, 5th. What rule of action shall be adopted in relation to the collection, disposition, and disbursement of funds. The Board asked the advice and direction of the Convention upon these several points, and a Committee of three was appointed upon each subject, to take it into consideration and report.

REV. JOHN SHORE.—A public breakfast was given to Mr. Shore, at Radley's Hotel, London, by the committee who have acted in his behalf; Edward Swaine Esq., in the chair. Speeches by Rev. J. H. Hinton, A. Reed of Norwich, T. Binney, and Dr. Boaz of Calcutta; and a letter was read from Sir E. Eardley, regretting his absence through indisposition. In his speech on the occasion, Mr. Shore said:—

"The prison, if you go with a good conscience and a good cause, is not the worst place in the world. I can truly say, that I left it with far greater reluctance than I entered it. I realized there, more than I had ever done, the gracious presence of my God, sustaining and comforting me. It has also brought me to feel, that with regard to the Lord's people, he will mercifully give them grace equal unto their day."

SLAVERY UNPROFITABLE IN KENTUCKY.—A writer in the Louisville Examiner has clearly shown by statistics, that slavery has diminished the wealth of Kentucky during the last eight years. In those counties where the number of slaves has increased the most, the amount of taxable property has decreased the most. From 1840 to 1848, the whole increase of taxable property in the State has been only five hundred thousand dollars; and in eight adjoining counties, where the number of slaves has increased the most, the assessable property has decreased five millions. In four counties where the slaves decreased, the value of property increased $1,347,686.

SUCCESS TO THE RUNAWAYS.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from Baltimore, under date of Oct. 29, says he is informed, on the best authority, that not less than two hundred slaves have absconded from their masters in Maryland within the past five months! These, at the lowest valuation, were worth $100,000; so we may judge of the annual loss to the slaveholders. Of late the absconding slaves have increased three-fold, and their success in eluding the most expert of our officers and police-agents has been remarkable. Very few in proportion, are ever caught again, and some families whose wealth consisted chiefly in their slaves have been greatly reduced in their circumstances.

FINING A SCHOOLMASTER FOR WHIPPING A SCHOLAR.—In Boston, the other day, the case of a schoolmaster, who was sued for damages on account of inflicting an undue punishment upon a pupil, was decided against him in the Common Pleas. It seems that one of his boys had been accused of stealing grapes. On being charged with the offense, he denied it. The teacher then punished him severely with a ferule and cowhide. The blows left black and blue marks on the body of the child, who was only twelve years old, and he did not get over their effects for a fortnight. The Court decided that the punishment was unreasonably severe, and the Jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $110.

BURR'S SEVEN-MILE MIRROR is one of the most truthful panoramic representrtions we have ever looked upon. We do not claim to be connoisseurs in the fine arts, and we shall not, therefore, venture any criticism upon the artistic skill of the painting. But we know what pleases us; it is when the painting is executed with such striking faithfulness to nature, that we do not have to examine a long time and puzzle our wits to know what it is the artist has intended. So far as we are acquainted with the scenery upon the St. Lawrence, the Mirror is a most exact and beautiful delineation of it. We advise our friends to visit it. It is exhibited every evening at the Minerva Rooms, 406 Broadway, and is well worth the price charged (twenty-five cents) for admission.

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamship Hibernia, seven days later news from all parts of Europe has come to hand.

There is no later news from Constantinople or St. Petersburgh, and of course we have no solution of the difficulty between the Porte and the Autocrat; the general belief, however, among well-informed critics, is said to be, that Russia will pocket the affront, rather than provoke a collision with France and England.

The Hungarians who were at Comorn are coming to America with Klapka at their head; and those who are at Widden are about to be transferred to the Isle of Candia by the Turkish government. From there they can easily get off to England. The report that Bem has turned Turk is confirmed, and it is said that Dembinski and others have done the same, and are now officers in the Turkish asmy.

A treaty between Austria and Prussia was signed at Vienna September 20th, and ratified by Prussia on the 10th ultimo, which provides that Austria and Prussia should assume the administration of the Central Power of the German Confederation, until the 1st of May, 1850, unless this power be transferred to a definite power before that period.

Accounts from Rome are the reverse of satisfactory. The return of the Pope is still talked about, but when it may take place is still the subject of conjecture. There has been a misunderstanding between one of the Cardinals and M. de Corcelles, and the Frenchman, being offended at a letter received from the ecclesiastic, complains of the number of traitors still tolerated in the Eternal City. The point was transferred to His Holiness, who disapproved of the Cardinal's conduct, and threw him overboard.

Gen Haynau in his adminstration of the military affairs of Hungary losses no opportunity to deserve the bloody epithet that has been so universnlly applied to him. He has thus far succeeded in murdering, under the guise of a Court Martial, thirteen Hungarian Generals who delivered themselves up at the close of the war and induced their soldiers to lay down their arms.

Count Bathyany, the Prime Minister of Hungary, has been shot under circumstances which forever will make the Austrian name synonymous with cruelty, treachery and dishonor. To render the last hour of this brave and accomplished nobleman as bitter as possible, he was sentenced to a malefactor's instead of a soldier's death. To avoid the ignominy of a halter, the wife of the patriot had a dagger conveyed to him in his linen, with which to anticipate his doom. The Count did not succeed in the suicide, but his throat was so much injured by the wound he had inflicted that he prevented his murderers from strangling him with the cord. He fell pierced to the heart by the bullets of Austrian soldiers—his last words being "My country forever." Some ladies of the highest class endeavored to dip their hands into the blood of the fallen patriot, but were prevented by the Austrian bayonets.

BURIED ALIVE.

The Youngstown (Ohio) Republican, of Oct. 26, says: A Scotchman by the name of McIntosh was last week engaged in this village in walling up a well for Mr. Grute—the well was thirty feet deep, the wall had been raised ten feet—when, in removing the lower tier of cribbing preparatory to raising the wall still higher, Mr. M. discovered the sand and gravel moving. Thinking it only a slight quantity that had commenced sliding, he adjusted the short planks over the top of the walled part, to prevent the dirt from falling into it. While doing this, the cribbing above gave way with a crash, which was followed by a general caving in from all sides, when in an instant he was covered with slabs, plank and dirt, to the depth of ten feet, he being about twenty feet from the surface. It was supposed that he was instantly killed, but lest the life of a fellow-being might be sacrificed by neglect, operations were immediately commenced for getting him out. The earth in that place being composed of quicksand and gravel, it was necessary to commence by curbing. In a few moments two or three hundred persons were collected, anxious to assist, but from the narrow limits of the curbing, only three or four could work. After about four hours, and after descending fifteen feet, a voice as from the grave was heard to say: "Be careful, the dirt is slipping in around me!" It was ascertained that he was outside the new cribbing, and that the whole body of loose earth above him was arrested by the diagonal position assumed by the old curbing in falling, leaving him room to stand erect, being imbedded to the hips in the sand that had run in around him. Tons of quicksand and gravel being supported above him by the accidental position of slabs and planks resting themselves on loose sliding earth, every precaution was necessary to avoid disturbing them. In this situation, his life resting upon the stability of sliding sand, he was doomed to suffer four hours more, till by handfulls the dirt was carefully cleared so as to get within the curb, from which he was lifted into the open air, amid the deafening cheers of the anxious spectators. The cave-in occurred at about 3½ P. M.; he was rescued about 11½ at night.

A Difficulty at Macao.—In a recent communication from China, we have a bit of news of some importance. On the occasion of a Roman Catholic procession at Macao, (which is under Portuguese authority,) an Englishman, who had just landed from a British ship-of-war, was ordered to take off his hat as the host passed him. In answer to this, he lifted his hat for a moment and immediately replaced it and kept it on his head. He was instantly seized, maltreated, and thrown into prison by the Portuguese Catholic authorities. Upon this, the commander of the British ship sent on shore demanding the instant release of the Englishman. The Portuguese then inquired if this release was asked as a favor, or demanded as a right. The answer being made that it was demanded as a right, the Portuguese Governor refused to admit it, and retained the man a prisoner. The English commander then declared, that if the man was not restored to his liberty within a certain number of hours, he would take him by force, whatever might be the consequences. So little regard was paid to this threat, it being deemed quite impossible that the armament of a single ship could put it in execution, that the Portuguese Governor was absent from his post the same day on business or pleasure in the country. But the British commander, true to his word, when the stated time had passed, and the Englishman had not been released, went on shore with a small but determined band, forced open the prison, and brought away the prisoner in safety. In the conflict a Portuguese was killed, but we know of no other fatality.

The Cherokee Nation.—The Tahlequah Advocate of the 8th ult., contains the proceedings of the National Council, which met the previous week. Hon. James Kell, of Delaware District, was elected President of the National Committee, or Upper House of the Legislature, and Hon. Six Killer, of Going Snake District, Speaker of the Council. The two branches elected the District Judges and Solicitors, a list of whom is given by the Advocate. The message of John Ross, the principal Chief, was received and read, and is published in the Advocate; 500 copies of it were ordered to be printed in English, and 500 in Cherokee, for distribution among the people. The message is well written, though short, and speaks of the tranquility, health, and general prosperity of the nation, the exemption of the Cherokees from the ravages of the cholera; their improvement as manifested by the increase of temperance, religion, and education; the payment of the public debt, for which purpose the Chief recommends the levying of taxes, or the appropriation of a portion of the money annually paid to the nation by the United States; the carrying out of the Treaty stipulations of 1846; the withholding of the School Fund by the Indian Department. He recommends that a delegation be sent to Washington to adjust all matters pending with the Government. The message says, that owing to the Report of the Superintendent of Public Schools not having yet reached the Chief, he cannot give the details respecting the condition of the District Schools, but the buildings for the male and female seminaries will soon be ready for use. The Supreme Court of the Nation was in session at Tahlequah. The Indian Mission Conference of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church was to meet at Riley's Chapel, two miles from Tahlequah, on the 25th, and Bishop Paine was expected to preside.

The Tea Culture in America.—We have late advices, says the N. Y. Tribune, from the Tea plantation of Mr. Junius Smith, at Greenville, S. C. His plants are in blossom, and as healthy and flourishing as those of China at the same stage of growth. Everything looks as favorable, and Mr. Smith feels abundantly encouraged. He expects to place fresh tea on the tea-tables of London and Paris in twenty days from his plantation. He has a large number of plants, and tea seed enough for half a million more. The Black descriptions blossomed some time since, but lately the Green plant descriptions have also blossomed. Mr. Smith is collecting about him quite a force of laborers, having recently sent to the North for about twenty hands. He has also made very successful efforts to grow the fig and almond. His next year's crop will be quite an important one. Should Mr. S. succeed in introducing the growth of the tea plant into the United States, he will certainly deserve the gratitude of the whole country.

Another Hard Case under a Slave Law.—The Norfolk (Va.) Herald, of Oct. 24th, says that Captain Woodford, of the schr. Thomas G. Pratt, who was committed to jail by the Mayor, on the 6th inst., charged with abducting a man slave named Henry, the property of Mrs. Jennings, was brought up before the Hustings Court of this city for examination, and, after a full hearing of the evidence and of counsel, was acquitted. Capt. Woodford, it will be remembered, while on his way from Fredericksburg to Providence, R. I., put into this port for a hand to assist in working his vessel, and shipped Henry, not knowing him to be a slave, but without requiring of him the requisite evidence of his freedom. After proceeding to sea, his vessel springing a leak, he was compelled to put back, and the slave, alarmed at the thought of returning, became very much excited, and in a fit of delirium, thereby induced, jumped overboard and was drowned. Capt. Woodford has had three weeks confinement in the walls of a prison, and will have to pay for the negro—a pretty severe penalty.

Escape of Slaves.—The Baltimore Clipper says four or five valuable slaves, the property of Col. Edward Lloyd and Mrs Tilghman of Talbot county, escaped on Saturday night. A reward of $1,000 is offered for the apprehension of two of them belonging to Col. Lloyd. Two others made their escape on Sunday night from the Bayside, both of whom, however, were caught on Monday evening and lodged in Easton jail. One of the runaways was a woman belonging to Col. John Tilghman, of Queen Anne's county. The Centerville Sentinel, in referring to the many escapes of slaves, says: If something is not done, and that speedily too, there will be but few slaves remaining on the Eastern shore of Maryland in a few years. They are running off almost daily. Four sets of bills offering rewards for runaway negroes were printed by us last week. Col. Edward Lloyd offers $1,000 reward for the apprehension of two. James L. Bryan, Esq. offers $300 for one. Charles Stevens, Esq. offers $200 for one; and Messrs. James and Franklin Bright offer the same for another, belonging to the estate of their father.

Sad Affair at St. Louis.—Two Frenchmen, who are said to be persons of wealth, brothers, but evidently insane, took apartments on Sunday night at Barnum's hotel, St. Louis. During the night one of them rose and going to Barnum's room shot him, it is thought fatally, from a gallery through a window. A man named Macomber was also fired at and wounded. Another boarder named Albert Jones, hearing the noise, came to ascertain the cause, and was shot dead on the spot. Two other persons named H. M. Henderson and Hubble, were also wounded before the madmen could be secured. It is said the same persons made an attempt upon the life of the landlord at Alton, but were prevented. They refuse counsel and say that they will plead their own case.

Proposals for Extending the Telegraph Line to San Francisco.—Henry O'Rielly proposed, in 1847, to carry the lightning telegraph from Philadelphia to Fort Leavenworth. Now that he has built five thousand miles, and contracted for the construction of other three thousand on this side of the Mississippi, it is presumed that his views will receive a proper degree of attention. In a letter to Col. Chambers, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements for a Convention at St. Louis, to consider of the practicability of a railway to connect the Atlantic and Pacific, Mr. O'Rielly earnestly urges the necessity there is for the immediate completion of the Western division of the telegraph line, from the Mississippi to San Francisco, five hundred miles of which are already under contract, from St. Louis to Fort Leavenworth. He contemplates a daily express mail across the Rocky Mountains, and shows that with the help of the U. S. troops, not otherwise employed, and a very moderate grant from Congress, his scheme is quite feasible. [Tribune.

Important to Holders of Land Warrants.—J. W. Simonton, of Washington, has put the following question to the authorities of the General Land Office:—"Is it necessary, to render an assignment of soldiers' Land Warrants valid and receivable at the Land Office, it should be filled up by the original holder when sold by him, and so of each party through whose hands it may pass before reaching the Land Office for entry?" Mr. Butterfield, Commissioner for these Warrants, replies that as assignments made prior to the issue of the warrant are null and void, it is material that the date of assignment be filled up when made. The mere leaving a blank in the document for the name of the assignee to be afterwards inserted does not vitiate the assignment where it is fair and regular in other respects. Before a warrant thus assigned can be located, the name of the assignee must be inserted, and it will be presumed that it is done by the authority of the original assignor; and will be receivable at the land offices, unless fraud shall be alledged and sustained.

Indian Matters.—One of the Western papers says that John Drennen, Esq., lately appointed Superintendent of Indian Affairs in the West, passed up on the 11th ult., with $322,000 in specie to distribute among the Indian tribes in November and December next. The amount paid out annually to the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Cherokees, Osages, Seminoles, and other small tribes, amounts to $330,000. The Choctaws appropriate money to the support of missionaries and schools, and are making rapid progress in civilization. The Seminoles and Osages prefer remaining in a rude state; and very little change has occurred with the other tribes within the last few years.

SUMMARY.

At a logging in the town of Lime, on Saturday last, says the Watertown Journal, a man named Ferdinand Rowe struck an old man by the name of James, knocking him down and then jumping upon his breast, breaking his bones and killing him almost instantly. Liquor, it is said, was the cause of this brutal outrage. Rowe is now in jail.

Dr. Peter Wendell, Chancellor of the University, died at his residence in Albany on Monday morning Oct. 29th. Dr. W. was a native of Albany, and died at the age of 64 years. In 1833 he was chosen by the Legislature as Regent of the University, of which body he became Chancellor on the death of Hon. Stephen Van Rensselaer in 1842, and to which last office he has since been annually re-appointed.

The Telegraph Companies, diverging East, West and South, from 5 Hanover-street, sent off and received one day last week, 722 messages. Among the number was one of 5,000 words, and another of 3,000 (steamer's news,) and several of 40 to 300 words each. There are three other offices in the city not included in the above. The above shows the extent and importance of the Telegraph business, which is yet in its infancy.

Directors of the New York, Albany and Buffalo Telegraph Company decided, at their last meeting, to put up a third wire from New-York to Buffalo as soon as practicable, exclusively for the business of those two cities and the business west of Buffalo, which now meets with great interruption in consequence of the business of local offices.

It appears by a report to the Philadelphia County Board, that nearly a quarter of a million dollars has been paid out of the County Treasury since 1836 for the suppression of riots. This sum does not include the bill which has yet to be footed for the riot on last election night, which will probably bring the amount quite up to a quarter of a million.

Dates from Cape Haytien to the 11th Oct. have been received at Boston, with a list of the newly appointed nobility, consisting, as we learn, of 5 Princes and 45 Dukes. A letter of congratulation had been received by Solouque from the English Governor of Jamaica. The French hold aloof and have not yet recognized the Government.

A son of Thomas H. Benton stabbed a Mr. Lyons of Louisville, on Wednesday night. Mr. Benton was about accompanying a lady from the parlor of the Weissiger House to her room. Mr. Lyons proposed to join them. Mr. Benton was offended at the proposition, and soon after, in an adjoining parlor, the stabbing took place.

The Mineral Point Tribune mentions the discovery of a fine quarry of Marble, apparently very extensive, in Richland county. The Tribune suggests that a block of this marble be procured and sent, as Wisconsin's tribute, to the Washington Monument Association.

The Dansville Chronicle announces the death of Mr. Moses M. Van Campen, in the 94th year of his age, at Angelica, N.Y. He was one of the first settlers of that county. "His blood was poured out like water, in several Indian battles, and his fame as a warrior stands recorded upon the page of his country's history."

Three free negroes were recently sold each into twelve months bondage, for sojourning in Louisville, Kentucky, contrary to the statutes of the State made and provided in regard to the free negroes of other States.

A Philadelphia correspondent of the National Era says of Mrs. Francis Ann Kemble that, fully recognizing to the last moment Mr. Butler's lawful claims on her as his wife, she sent him a check for twenty thousand dollars, being the earnings of her reading of Shakespeare, which he, of course, declined to receive and returned to her. It is also said, that she resisted the application for divorce made by Mr. Butler no farther than a sense of duty, and an opportunity of presenting to the world the merits of her case, and character as a wife, required; and when this was accomplished, she withdrew further opposition.

The ship Berlin, Captain Smith, from Liverpool, arrived at New Orleans the other day with two hundred immigrants. During her passage there were 43 deaths on board, the first having occurred when the vessel was 12 days out, and the last on her 29th day. Forty-one of the deceased were steerage passengers; the other two were Robert Robinson, the carpenter of the Berlin, and Thomas Baumsey, a seaman, belonging to the crew.

The St. Paul Chronicle announces that a treaty was effected on the 9th ult. with the Half-Breeds, for the land lying west of the Mississippi, bordering upon Lake Pepin. It is bounded on the River about 35 miles, extending back 15 miles, making some 320,000 acres, purchased for $200,000, or about 60 cents per acre. The land is said to be of good quality generally, having some fine situations on the Lake, and a number of improvements made by the Half Breeds.

L. J. Papineau has written a letter in the Quebec Independent, in which he comes out strongly in favor of annexation to the United States. The Toronto Globe, on the contrary, comes out with a declaration of warm attachment to England, signed by 2,000 men of all parties there. A Toronto Annexation Manifesto will, it is said, appear about the 1st of next month.

Hon. John Greig, of Canandaigua, was chosen Chancellor by the Regents of the University of New York, vice Dr. Peter Wendell, deceased. Mr. G. declined the post, whereupon Hon. Gerrit Y. Lansing, of Albany, was chosen.

In the U. S. Circuit Court at Boston, on Wednesday, before Judge Woodbury, the case of Herrick Aiken vs. Calvin Foster was committed to a Jury—being an action for infringing the plaintiff's patent for a new and useful improvement in tool-sockets. A verdict was rendered for plaintiff of $1,224, damages.

The South Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn recently made a move, with great success, to pay off their debt, amounting to about $14,000. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Spear, presented the subject in a very happy manner, urging the congregation to remove that which, to any Church, was a great obstacle to permanent prosperity. The result was a subscription of $11,000.

The Milwaukie Gazette says that on one day, not long since, there were seven hundred loaded wagons coming into that city with produce, of which upwards of five hundred were filled with wheat—about 21,000 bushels, besides flour. Allowing 45 feet to each team, the whole in one procession would make a line five miles long.

Resolutions in favor of the Annexation of Canada to the United States have been introduced into both Houses of the Vermont Legislature. Papers of all parties advocate the measure, too, together with political meetings and Conventions in all parts of the Northern States.

The girls of Fairhaven, Conn., who struck for higher wages for opening oysters, have obtained their demands. They now receive two and one half cents per quart, instead of two, as heretofore, for opening the bivales.

A memorial has been prepared for presentation to the Ohio Legislature, praying for a grant of $5,000 a year for ten years, to be devoted to the removal of negroes to Liberia. The memorial states that the American Colonization Society has had within its offer 10,000 slaves, on condition that it shall bear the expenses of their deportation.

Mr. J. M. Barrett, of Ohio, who was arrested at Spartansburgh, S. C., some time since, on a charge of circulating incendiary publications, or something of that sort, has been tried and acquitted. He is now at liberty. The sympathies of a large portion of the community about him appear to have been with him.

A colored woman named Charlotte Drose, residing at 22 Clark-st. N. Y., died last week at the extreme old age of 113 years. As she was upwards of 40 years of age at the time of the Revolutionary War, she recollected all its events and its heroes, and many other curious things long previous to that memorable era.

By a recent decision in the case of Boosey vs. Purdey, tried in the English Court of Exchequer, it appears that no foreign author can enjoy a copyright for his writings in Great Britain, except through an international arrangement between the two countries. Thus it seems that American writers cannot after this be benefitted by the republication of their works in England.

A man named Thomas Short, now in jail in Mississippi, has made a confession of his connection with a banditti, composed of men in high and low life, from Missouri to Mexico. The disclosures are of a startling character.

MARRIED.

In Lincklaen, N. Y., on the 24th of Oct., Leonard Coon, of DeRuyter, to Sarah A. Dye, daughter of John Dye, of Lincklaen.

☞ In a marriage notice from Scott, N. Y., published two weeks ago, the names should have been Derrick Babcock and Miss Susan Barber, instead of Orlando Babcock and Mrs. Susan Barber. The printers "followed copy" in this case, as they are directed to do in all similar cases.

DIED.

In Janesville, Wisconsin, on the 15th ult., Jonathan J. Edwards, late of Westerly, R. I., aged 36 years. Mr. Edwards had long suffered from a pulmonary difficulty, and for the benefit of his health had spent two or three of the past winters at the South. Last summer he determined to take up his residence at a distance from the seaboard, and accordingly removed to Wisconsin, where he fell a prey to fever, after two weeks of severe illness. It will be gratifying to his friends to learn, that in the early stages of the disease, before his mind was materially affected by it, he expressed strong confidence in God, and full assurance of safety in His hands.

At Petersburg, Rensselaer, Co., N. Y., Sept. 19th, 1849, William Hall, aged 58 years, 8 months, and 29 days. By this dispensation of God, a companion and four children are left to mourn a loss to them irreparable in this world. In his death the church suffers the loss of one of those genuine ornaments, who, loving his divine Master, is willing to do whatsoever he commands. The last Sabbath I spent in Petersburg previous to attending our General Conference, I visited him upon his sick bed. I found him not only resigned, but happy; yes, happy in the prospect of death. He expressed great concern for the prosperity of Zion and the salvation of the perishing. He has gone; he has left us, to range through illimitable space, to lay hold upon that bright consummation that clears all mystery and bathes the soul of the redeemed in immeasurable bliss. I returned from Conference just in time to attend his funeral. I mingled my grief with that of his bereaved family, and sorrowing church, and followed him to his last resting-place, before I reached my home. Bro. Hall was a native of Rhode Island, professed religion when a young man, and was baptized by Eld. Griswold a few years since. Text on the occasion from John 11: 23, "Thy brother shall rise again." J. Summerbell.

In Scott, N. Y., October 23d, of inflammatory croup, Josephene Louisa, only daughter of Philander and Electra L. Knight, aged 2 years, 10 months, and 14 days.

Notice.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of DeRuyter Institute will take place at the Institute on Tuesday, the 4th day of December next, at 6 o'clock P. M., at which time five Trustees are to be elected in the place of Ethan Stillman, Arza Coon, Matthew Wells, Jr., Edward Whitford, and Robert Langworthy, whose term of office expires on that day.

Immediately after the election, the Trustees will meet and organize for the year.

CHARLES H. MAXSON, Secretary.

DeRuyter, Oct. 28, 1849.

Proclamation,

By Hamilton Fish, Governor of the State of N. York.

A sense of gratitude to Almighty God for his numerous manifestations of goodness during the past year, calls for a public expression of thanks from a People who have experienced the full measure of blessings which have been extended to us.

Peace and quiet have reigned throughout our land. The labors of the husbandman have been rewarded in the return of the fruits of the earth. Industry has pursued its accustomed walks in all its varied employments, and its votaries have enjoyed honest and well earned rewards. Civil and religious liberty continue to be vouchsafed to all within our borders—and the blessings of the Gospel are extended to all who desire to enjoy its comforts and its consolations. A few weeks since, the whole Nation, in humble dependence, united in earnest prayer to Almighty God to withdraw the grievous pestilence which was ravaging the land; that visitation has passed, and the blessing of public health is restored.

It becomes a grateful and Christian people to acknowledge these mercies, and to render thanks to their bountiful Giver.

I do therefore designate Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November, instant, and do recommend its observance by the People of this State, as a day of Public Thanksgiving to Almighty God.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto signed my name and affixed the Privy Seal of the State, at the [L. S.] City of Albany, this first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine.

HAMILTON FISH.

By order of the Governor:

Robert H. Morris, Private Secretary.

Miscellaneous.

SONG OF THE SMITHY.

Blow! blow! strike! strike!
Sons of the forge's glow!
All arts that bless man's helplessness,
To us their being owe.
The plough that mellows the fruitful earth,
The sickle that reaps the grain—
'Neath our hammer's blows they sprang to birth,
'Midst a shower of fiery rain.
Hammer and hatchet, chisel and saw,
Lever, and vice, and screw—
The implements of every trade,
On our forge and anvil grew.

Clink! clink! as our hammers ring
On the anvil's shining front;
The red iron grows, beneath the blows,
To some useful implement.
We make the tools for every craft,
And studious, thoughtful men,
Are debtors to us for the keen edged blade
That sharpens the mighty pen.

Fulton, and Watt, and a thousand more,
Had studied and dream'd in vain,
Had not our arm given shape and form
To the figures of their brain.
Creatures of iron muscles and limbs
In our forge's glow have birth,
That do the work of a thousand men,
And girdle with strength the earth.
Then blow! blow! etc.

A SOMNAMBULIST STORY.

In the month of November last, a young girl named Eulalie M——, of the age of fifteen, was brought to one of the hospitals of Paris while laboring under a most alarming attack of catalepsy. The case was a most curious one, and the mother of the girl declared that she was subject to this disease, but had never been afflicted for so long a period together, having been four days and nights without consciousness. The doctors of the establishment were, of course, enchanted with this bonne anbaine, and forthwith began to experimentalize, and to prove and test a hundred different methods of cure, which, nevertheless, had all been exhausted before the poor patient was restored to herself. Such, however, was the debilitated state in which the disease, or rather the "remedies," had left her, that she was compelled to remain for some time longer in the hospital, to regain her strength.

It was during this convalescence that a phenomenon of the most extraordinary nature was witnessed in poor Eulalie, which caused the greatest perplexity and confusion among the nurses and doctors in attendance upon her. She was seized with an unceasing, ungovernable flow of speech—words poured in a torrent from her lips; night and day, sleeping or waking, it was all the same. With persons of her age and sex nothing is more common; but, gentle reader, it was the subject of her discourse, which was so extraordinary, and which caused even the oldest and most experienced of the medical advisers gathered round her bed to turn aside; some in wrath, others in confusion—it was the complete unveiling of every thought and desire which was passing through the mind of whoever approached within a certain distance of her bed.

The evil grew to such a hight—so many secrets got afloat—so many suspicions had grown into certainty by this means, that it was deemed expedient to dismiss the patient before a complete schism was created among the authorities of the hospital. Every celebrity in the magnetic science had been summoned to visit the girl, and all had declared that never before had a subject, possessing such extraordinary powers of clairvoyance, been met with. Every one of the professors, of course, contended for the honor of bringing her into public notice; but the young assistant of the hospital, who had attended her in the first instance, became the happy man, and bore off the treasure to an obscure lodging near the Rue St. Jacques, giving up, for her sake, and for the dream of fortune, promised by the wonderful faculty which she possessed, his present situation and the certainty of advancement he had acquired by many years' study and steadfast attention to his arduous profession.

For a while every thing prospered with the young couple. All Paris flocked to hear the revelations of the sybil, and her house was thronged from morn till night with eager inquirers. About a year ago Madame de S——, well known by her eccentric researches in every kind of science, became so enthusiastic in her admiration of Eulalie, that she insisted upon her taking up her abode with her, in order to aid in certain occult works upon which she was engaged—the end and aim being directed to no less an object than the discovery of all the buried treasure which exists throughout France. It would appear that the revelations of the fair Eulalie were of such a nature as to satisfy the most golden anticipations of Madame de S——. Hundreds of visions, more gorgeous than imagination could supply, burst one by one upon the sleeping sense of the somnambula; but of all those which were thus laid open to the greedy anticipations of the consultante, none seemed to offer such immense and certain chance of splendor as that which was beheld at the Chateau of Chalus.

These ruins, so celebrated in English song, became forthwith the object of a pilgrimage, and the Marquise de S—— repaired thither with the firm intention of purchasing the ruins, if they were to be had for love or money. But the owner cared not a whit for the first, as far as the Marquise was concerned at least, and a great deal too much for the second; so that the affair was rather more difficult to manage than Madame de S—— had anticipated. Nothing, however, is impossible to those who are gifted with a will firm and resolute as that of the stout-hearted Marquise; and the bargain was struck at an enormous sacrifice on her part, the only condition being the removal of the rubbish which encumbered the entrance to the principal dungeon of the castle, where, so the persuasion existed, the whole of the treasure was contained. The impatience of the fair purchaser was so great that, fearing the customary delay in all French proceedings, she insisted upon the performance of this part of the bargain before she would consent to sign the contract. Accordingly, workmen were sent to commence the task at once, when, lo! by the very stroke of the hammer which leveled to the ground the remnant of the old wall that barred all access to the dungeon, a recess was discovered hollowed in the stone, and in the recess a casket of iron, curiously wrought in the fashion of the Greek Empire, which casket, being opened, was found to contain a diamond of wonderful magnitude, and of the first water. It is said to be six times larger than the Legent, and of a luster unrivaled by any stone known as yet to the world. The value of the treasure is supposed to be at least 15,000,000 of francs.

THE PROPOSITION TO EMBRACE MAHOMEDANISM.

The following particulars connected with the proposition made to the Hungarians in in Turkey, are given in the English papers:—

Some of the refugees at Widden have adopted the Mahomedan faith in order to secure themselves against any danger of being delivered to the Russian Government. A letter, dated the 25th ult., states that before entering the Turkish territory official assurances were given by the Turks to Kossuth, that he and his fellow-refugees were welcome guests, and should be allowed to proceed to any part of the world. The refugees were subsequently alarmed by intelligence that the Russian and Austrian envoys had demanded the delivery of the Poles and Hungarians, and that a Council had decided in favor of granting the demand, though the Turkish Ministers strongly opposed it; but that all admitted that none who should embrace the Moslem faith could possibly be delivered to infidels. The Ministry dispatched a reverend mollah to examine the refugees separately, and expose to them the state of the case, whilst timorous friends in Constantinople recommended the adoption of the suggestion as the only means of salvation. No words can express the consternation of the community at this intelligence. Many of the Hungarians exclaimed, "Better the Russians than the Austrains—better Mahomedanism than the Russians;" and there appeared some prospect of the whole camp embracing Islamism. A council of the Chiefs was immediately held at Kossuth's, where Bem at once declared that his life was devoted to hostility to the Russians, and that he eagerly accepted the suggestion. The mollah promised at the same time the maintenance of their rank and the liberal allowance customary in the Turkish armies. Generals Kmets and Steen came to the same resolution, and several personages were for temporising. When Kossuth's turn came to speak, he briefly reminded his companions, in his impressive language, that now, in a strange land, where all authoritative bonds were sundered, each one was at liberty to act according to his own views, but that, for his part, welcome, if needs be, the axe or gibbet, but curses on the tongue that dares to make him so infamous a proposition. Guyon, the Irish General, followed, declaring that no human power should induce him to swallow even a bunch of grapes upon compulsion. General Dembinski and Count Zamoyski were equally determined. The example of their chiefs was so effective that of about 200 soldiers and 40 officers who had expressed their willingness to abjure Christianity, the soldiers, to a man, changed their intention, and there remain only three Generals and some twenty officers firm in their resolve. Bem took immediately a public step, and it is said assumes the name of Amurath, and becomes a three-tailed Pasha with the Turks, who have an exalted opinion of his military genius.

TYRANNY OF THE RUSSIAN CZAR.

The fact stated in the annexed letter from our Washington correspondent, says the Courier and Inquirer, cannot fail to excite the liveliest interest throughout this country. Mr. Bodisco, the former Russian Minister at Washington, has long been known to many of our citizens as a highly accomplished gentleman; and the news of the sad fate which the atrocious despotism of the Emperor has brought upon him, cannot be received without emotion. The source from which the intelligence comes to us leaves no doubt of its authenticity.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28, 1849.

The Emperor Nicholas has recently perpetrated an act of unparalleled barbarism, which will be deeply deplored by the citizens of Washington, and can hardly fail to awaken the indignation of the civilized world.

He has torn M. Bodisco, so long the Russian Envoy in Washington, from his family, and driven him, in his old age, into the lifelong rigors of Siberian exile! This news, so astounding, comes through a medium which precludes all doubt.

It seems that an edict of the Autocrat prohibits his diplomatic agents from owning property of any kind in the countries to which they are accredited, and M. Bodisco had enriched himself in estates wholly American. He owned valuable real estate in Georgetown, and had become considerably interested in Government securities. His property in all was valued at $450,000. These facts became known to the Emperor last winter, through the agency of a spy; and he immediately proceeded in an artful manner to entrap M. Bodisco into his hands. He directed M. Bodisco to repair to St. Petersburgh without any delay, as his counsel was required in a matter of great importance; and he was further directed not to fail to bring with him his nephew, Premier Secretaire of the Russian Legation at Washington, as a commission awaited him in the Imperial army, which was about to march against the Hungarians. To this order M. Bodisco yielded a prompt obedience. He and his nephew sailed for home early in May last. On presenting themselves to Nicholas, the nephew was thrown into prison, and M. Bodisco was hurried off into the wilds of Siberia!

I learn that, just previous to his departure from Washington, either from a suspicion as to his monarch's motives, or in view of the perils of the voyage, M. Bodisco settled a handsome fortune upon his much respected wife, who, it will be remembered, is an American lady.

☞ Such was the story published last week in the daily papers throughout the country. But before the people had ceased to express their astonishment, the whole affair was pronounced a "hoax."

MODEL LODGING HOUSES.—The London correspondent of the Chronotype writes as follows of the Model Lodging Houses in that city: "The result of the Poor Man's Clubs has been very gratifying during this time of sickness. I have many friends who are among the founders and active supporters of these establishments, and they all assure me, that the health of the inmates, for the sickly months, has been most satisfactory. The deaths among children are very considerably lower than in the surrounding neighborhoods, and the cholera has not caused a single death in the largest of the Lodging Houses, containing 300 sets of bedrooms, and 1,500 persons. I say the largest, because I am precisely informed; but I believe I should be correct in saying, that no deaths have occurred from this cause in any of the buildings, although raging in the vicinity of several of them. What hopes for the rich in such a condition of the poor, especially if it become general, and rose by successive improvements to fresh immunities and perfections. The Model Lodging Houses are extending in various parts of London, and the trades are associating to carry out their views in this direction. Within the week, the Journeymen Bakers have held a meeting for the purpose. The people who enter these houses are not of the very lowest class, they are chiefly the superior portion of the working classes—families that can appreciate to some degree the benefits of cleanliness and comfort."

FIGHT WITH THE APACHES.

The N. O. Picayune, Oct. 30th, says: It will be recollected by our readers, that the Mexican State of Durango, which has been from time immemorial a prey to the savage incursions of the Apache Indians, who have ruined their agriculture, and almost dissolved the bands of civilized society among the poor Mexicans residing at spots distant from the large towns, decided a few months ago to invite adventurers from the United States to form guerilla bands, in order to make war on their merciless foes. For this purpose the Legislature appropriated a certain amount of head money, $200, for each Indian taken, dead or alive. Several companies were soon formed, and some terrible encounters have taken place between the Americans and the Indians, in all of which the latter have been worsted, losing a large number of their chief warriors, killed or made prisoners. The Mexican papers at the capital at first denounced this system of mercenary warfare, and we believe that Congress passed a strong resolution condemnatory of the conduct of the Durango Legislature, and also that of Sonoro, who had imitated the former. Our last advices, however, from Mexico, state that public feeling in that city had changed on this subject, and the Sigio, one of the most influential of the metropolitan prints, declares that there is no other way of getting rid of the scourge.

Among the American companies that have distinguished themselves in this warfare, that commanded by a Captain Box, in the service of the State of Durango, is in the first rank. This body had a terrific encounter with a band of Apaches on the 3d of September, and although but 30 against between 200 and 300, they came off victorious, after killing twenty Indians. The Mexicans are quite enchanted with their deeds, and the Sigio of the 21st ult. devotes a considerable space to a narrative of their exploits.

FROM TRINIDAD—RIOT AND LOSS OF LIFE.

The Trinidad Standard says a disgraceful riot occurred there on the 15th of September, wherein the Government House was pelted by a mob, and missiles hurled at the Council while engaged in its Legislative duties. The Police were stoned and overpowered, and the Military were finally called out, and compelled to fire in self-defense. Two deaths, and one or two gun-shot wounds, were the consequence. The Government Buildings were converted into a temporary barrack, and various companies quartered there. Upward of 300 special constables have been sworn in, and a volunteer horse patrol formed. On the other hand the mob, finding the force in town too strong for them, have sent off a portion of their numbers to the Eastward, to burn and lay waste the sugar estates in that direction. The mogass-houses of Dinsley, Macoya, and El Dorado estates, have already been fired, and burned to the ground.

Such is the state of things at the moment we write, says the Standard. The immediate and ostensible object originally brought forward as the cause of the outbreak, was the regulations recently passed for the government of the royal jail of port of Spain, which regulations, among other things, provided that debtors committed under the Petty Civil Courts' Ordinance, should have their hair cropped close, and wear a prison dress, and be liable to be called upon by the jailor to assist in any work going on in the jail.

STATISTICS OF FRENCH LITERATURE.—It is calculated that, from the 1st of January, 1848, there were issued from the press in France, 87,000 new works, volumes and pamphlets; 8,700 reprints of ancient literature, and French classic authors; and 4,000 translations from modern languages—one-third of the latter from the English, the German and the Spanish coming next in numbers, and the Portuguese and Swedish languages having furnished the smallest contributions. Nine hundred dramatic authors are named of pieces produced on the stage, and afterward published; 60 only of comedies, and dramas not acted. Among the published works are 200 on Occult Sciences, Cabalism, Chiromancy, Necromancy, &c., and 75 volumes on Heraldry and Genealogy, Social Science, Fourierism, Communism, and Socialism of all sects, count 20,000 works of all sizes; 6,000 Romances and Novels; and more than 800 works of Travel. According to a calculation, for which the authority of M. Didot's (the publisher's) name is given, the paper employed in the printing of all these works would more than twice cover the surface of the 86 Departments of France.

CULTURE OF THE PLUM.—"An old Digger," in the Horticulturist, says: "Plum trees like a moist soil. I have found that covering the ground four inches deep with old spent tan-bark, is a good way of preserving the moisture, and keeping the tree in health. I scatter fresh lime thickly over the surface of the tan every year, as soon as the green fruit begins to fall. This kills every curulio that attempts to enter the ground. The tan prevents the weeds from growing, keeps the roots cool, and insures me a good crop of plums. I spread it as far as the roots extend, and it wants renewing, or adding to, once in three or four years."

ANECDOTE.—A good story is told of a poor fellow who had spent hundreds of dollars at the bar of a certain groggery; being one day faint and feeble and out of change, he asked the landlord to trust him with a glass of liquor.

"No," was the surly reply, "I never make a practice of doing such things,"

The poor fellow turned to a gentleman, who was sitting by, and whom he had known in better days, saying, "Sir, will you lend me a sixpence?"

"Certainly," was the reply.

The landlord with alacrity placed the decanter and glass before him; he took a pretty good horn, and having swallowed it, replaced the glass with evident satisfaction; he then turned to the man who had lent him the sixpence, and said, "Here, sir, is the sixpence I owe you; I make it a point, degraded as I am, always to pay borrowed money, before I pay my grog bill!"

HEAD WORK.—Head work is the hardest work in the world. The artisan feels this if at any time he has to spend a whole day in calculation. All men of learning testify to the same truth, and their meagre frames and sallow complexions tell a plainer tale than words. Sir Edward Coke, the great English lawyer, speaks thus concerning his great work:—"While we were in hand with these four parts of the Institutes, we often having occasion to go into the country, did in some sort envy the honest ploughmen and other mechanics. For one, when he was at work would merrily sing and the ploughman whistle some self-pleasing tune, and yet their work both proceeded and succeeded; but he that takes upon himself to write, doth captivate all the faculties and powers both of his mind and body, and must be only attentive to that which he collecteth, without any expression of joy or cheerfulness while he is at work."

THE MEN OF THE TIMES.—We like an active man, one who has the impulse of the age—of the steam-engine in him. A lazy, plodding, snail-paced chap might have got along in the world fifty years ago; but he won't do for these times. We live in an age of quick ideas; men think quick—speak quick—eat, sleep, court, marry, and die quick—and slow coaches ain't tolerated. "Go ahead," is the motto of the age; and he succeeds best in every line of business, who has the snapping turtle in him. Strive, readers, to catch this spirit of the times; be "up and dressed" always, not gaping and rubbing your eyes as if you were half asleep, but wide awake for whatever may turn up—and you may be "somebody" before you die. Think, plan, reflect as much as you please, before you act; but think quickly and closely, and, when you have fixed your eye upon an object, spring to the mark at once.

LIGHT FROM THE OYSTER.—Open an oyster, retain the liquor in the lower or deep shell, and if viewed through a microscope, it will be found to contain multitudes of small oysters, covered with shells, and swimming nimbly about; one hundred and twenty of which in a row would extend but one inch. Besides these young oysters, the liquor contains a variety of animalculæ, and myriads of three distinct species of worms, which shine in the dark like glow worms. Sometimes their light resembles a bluish star about the center of the shell, which will be beautifully luminous in a dark room.

RULE FOR CONSTRUCTING CHIMNEYS.—A very erroneous practice prevails, among chimney builders, of contracting the passage for the smoke at the lower part near the fire-place. "This," says Treadgold, "is like contracting the aperature of a pipe which supplies a jet." Chimneys, to draw well, should be contracted at the top. The rule for ascertaining the required degree of contraction is as follows:—

Let 17 times the length of the grate, in inches, be divided by the square root of the hight of the chimney, in feet, and the quotient will be the area in inches, of the section of the aperture at the top of the chimney. For example, a grate 15 inches in length, with a chimney 36 feet high, to which the contracting top is required—17 multiplied by 15 gives 255, which number divided by 6, the square root of 36, gives 42 1-2 inches for the area of the top. [Gen. Farm.

SINGULAR DEATH.—About a week ago, Mr. James Simpson, of Thompsonville, Ct., came to his death, under peculiar circumstances. He occupied a house in common with Daniel Sollar, and the door of each half opens into a common space by the front door. On the evening alluded to, they had been disputing in front of the house, each in high passion, and both went in at the front door at the same time. As Mr. Simpson opened his door, he fell headlong into the room a corpse! It is probable that Mr. Simpson died from the violence of his emotions. A post mortem examination did not reveal the cause of his death.

STRANGE MORTALITY IN BLACK RIVER, LA.—The Concordia Intelligencer says, that many of the planters on Black River have lost all of their young calves lately. The mortality cannot be accounted for. The animals are smitten as with a plague, and sink beyond all remedy on the instant. The death of the young calves is not the worst feature of this visitation. The mortality is general along both sides of the river, and the people of Black River will have it that this is the sure precursor of an epidemic visitation upon the portion of the human family dwelling there.

HILLS AGAINST LEVEL LANDS.—In a lecture recently delivered by a French Professor on mathematics, at the college at Blois, the lecturer informed his audience that in the purchase of hilly or uneven lands, its extent is estimated or measured, not according to the area of the surface, not according to the area of its horizontal base; because he added, "it is a well known fact in agriculture, that no more can be grown on a hill or slope than on a horizontal piece of land equal to its base."

Notwithstanding all that is said concerning the deterioration of the race, statistics prove, that as the laws which govern health become better understood and observed, the average duration of life is greatly increased. In 1700 the average mortality in England was 1 in 25, now it is 1 in 45, thus showing that in a century the chances of life are nearly doubled.

Variety.

The debts of the various countries of Europe may be classed in round millions: Great Britain, £860,000,000; France, 320; Holland, 160; Russia and Poland, 110; Spain, 83; Austria, 84; Prussia, 30; Portugal, 28; Naples, 26; Belgium, 25; Denmark, 11; Sicily, 14; Papal dominions, 13; Greece, 8; Bavaria, 3; Frankfort, 1; Bremen, £600,000; Hamburgh, £1,400,000. Total, £1,785,000,000. Debts which are not enumerated, £215,000,000. Grand total, £2,000,000,000.

The Cincinnati Commercial states that N. Longworth, Esq., is now erecting a wine cellar in that city, and a building over it 3 stories high; the cellar is 40 feet by 170, and 23 feet deep, or nearly two stories under ground. This cellar is to be exclusively used for manufacturing "sparkling wines." The first story down is for storage, and the second story under ground is to keep the wine cool, which is necessary for its change and flavor.

The Cumberland (Md.) Alleganian states that on Wednesday last, an Irishman, who resides near Lonaconing, threw from his stomach a living snake, five or six inches in length. For several years past he has been in delicate health, and latterly subsisted almost wholly upon milk. On Wednesday, at the earnest persuasion of several of his countrymen, he was induced to drink with them. Directly after swallowing the liquor he was seized with vomiting and threw up the snake.

In Normandy and Brittany the apples used for cider are in extraordinary abundance this year. In the memory of man the trees were never seen so loaded. The farmers have been obliged to fix props repeatedly under the branches to enable them to support the heavy weight of fruit that bends them to the earth. The cider crop will, in most places, be twice or three times more abundant than in ordinary years.

Mr. Gardner, the provision broker, gives the following as the import into Liverpool alone, from the United States, for the last twelve months: 26,000 tierces Beef, 37,000 barrels Pork, 224,000 cwts. Bacon; 15,000 Hams, 50,000 barrels Lard, 100,000 boxes of Cheese, and 8,600 firkins Butter. The value of the above is £1,000,000.

Something new has at last occurred even in New York, where we have so many things; and in the Nineteenth Century, when enterprise and profitable speculation are the order of the day. We refer to an Iron Steamboat now building in this city, and nearly completed, to run on Lake Titicaca, on one of the peaks of the Andes in Peru.

The total number of members of the Society of Friends in Great Britain and Ireland, is 18,733, viz., males, 8,592; females, 10,141. There are 25 quarterly meetings in England, three of them having from 2,000 to 2,400 members each; the others are generally small, from 100 to 300 members.

It is stated that if a horse be shut up in a pasture where there is no water, he will, at certain times of the day, make it a practice to stand in those situations where the water is nearest the surface, and thus indicate the best place for digging for it. Those who alledge this to be a fact, say that horses have the faculty of smelling water, like camels in the Arabian desert, or the cattle of the South American "pampas."

It is said that in Germany, to prevent, poison being used for evil purposes, none is allowed to be sold, without a written order or prescription from a physician. To prevent rat poison being made a bad use of, or taken by mistake, the arsenic is mixed with tallow and lamp-black, which makes a compound that no human being could partake of. None is allowed to be sold in a pure state.

Dr. Franklin wrote, "I think all the heretics I have known have been virtuous men. They have the virtue of fortitude, or they would not venture to own their heresy; and they cannot afford to be deficient in any of the other virtues, as that would give advantage to their many enemies; and they have not, like orthodox sinners, such a number of friends to excuse or justify them."

The Bennington Banner says that bears are quite plenty on the hills a mile or two northeast of that village. On Friday, A. Mosher killed one, and his son Almond another, and on Tuesday, Morton Brock, Esq., another. The sportsmen are having fun in hunting them. Seven were seen there on Sunday.

The Williamsport and Elmira Railroad was sold at auction in Philadelphia a few days since, under a special act of the Legislature, in order to discharge the incumbrances which have heretofore prevented the completion of this important improvement.

The New York, Albany, and Buffalo Telegraph Company are about to put up a third wire, to accommodate the rapid increase of business. The East, West, and South lines, converging at 5 Hanover-st., sent and received 722 messages one day last week; among them, one of 5,000 and one of 3,000 words.

A dispatch dated Buffalo, Oct. 26, says:—The propeller Globe, with $100,000 in merchandise on board, sunk last evening in sixteen feet water near Point Albino. The goods are insured in New York. There is an insurance on the vessel for $15,000.

The Preston Chronicle says of agricultural meetings: "With a boiled leg of mutton on the table, people think of eating turnips rather than growing them, and, with the bottle before them, thorough draining may be thought of, but it is not as regards land."

Rabbit-skins, which were selling some months ago at two shillings, are now, it is said, eight shillings per pound. They are used in making the soft felt hats now so fashionable in London and on the continent.

A gentleman of Darlington, who is upward of 80 years of age, but still a resolute pedestrian, recently walked in one day from Darlington to Newcastle, more than 33 miles.

A Leeds pickpocket, the other day, stole from the pocket of a police inspector, who was in plain clothes, a paper containing—a pair of handcuffs!

What is the safest capital a man can invest in business, and which shall insure him the greatest amount of interest? Answer: Civility.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION.

Letters from our missionaries in China have recently come to hand, though not of so late a date as those which have already been published. The following, from Bro. Carpenter, will be read with interest. It gives a particular account of the opening of the chapel for public worship. We hope the members of our denomination will not think that they have done more than their duty, because of the flattering commendation bestowed upon them in the closing part of this extract. Our conviction, from reading this and others of their letters, is that we have not done half enough. We are wretchedly behind our duty, and we hope our brethren will bestir themselves.

SHANGHAI, March 7th, 1849.

To the Executive Board of S. D. B. Missionary Association:—

BELOVED BRETHREN,—Having this morning re-perused all the letters we have received from the Board since we came to the "land of Sinim," it has served to refresh my mind with sentiments of affection for our brethren across the waters, and with a sense of the greatness of the work to which they and we have put our hand; at the same time, by bringing fresh to view the train of providences which has attended and guided and comforted us, all along, it has inspired my heart with increased confidence in the goodness and power and love of the Infinite Father upon whose favor we are altogether dependent. And I can unhesitatingly say, that the work in which I am permitted to engage is just the work in which I would wish to spend the remainder of my days; at least while strength is allowed me to labor. For there is something rather stimulating in the idea of laboring for an object around which cluster so many divine encouragements, an object which is so dear to God and to his people.

I must hasten to tell you about the opening of our chapel. On Sixthday previous to the first Sabbath in the present year, we put up a board over the door that leads to the chapel, with the inscription in large characters, "Kaung Soo-Dong"—Temple for explaining the Book. Two other small boards we put up in convenient places to give information of the hour of meeting, and inviting attendance. The same day we distributed nearly a hundred cards among our neighbors, informing them that on the ensuing Sabbath, and also on each recurring Sabbath, we proposed to explain the True God's Book, and invited them to give attendance. Every where we were well treated. When the hour for evening service arrived, the doors were opened, and a large gong was rung on the house-top. In a few minutes the chapel was nearly filled. Bro. Wardner addressed the people, who, considering their ignorance of our ways, and of the proper ordering of the house of God, conducted themselves with decorum, and listened with a good degree of attention. At the morning service, the number was much less; there were about thirty present, but mostly grown persons, and some of them of the literary class. They gave good attention. Thus passed our first Sabbath exercises. We had not been, without solicitude in regard to this matter. The other chapels are located on more public streets than ours, and congregations are gathered from passers by. Generally some one stands at the door with some tracts, giving to each individual who enters a tract. This draws them in. But we had no means of this sort to put into requisition. We had no tracts, and if we had had, our little YA JOO LOONG was rather retired, and but few people travel it. If people come to our meeting, they must, as a general thing, take a little pains for it. This we were not sure the Chinese would be disposed to do. However, our prayer was, that God would draw them to the place of hearing. And when we perceived that these prayers, in connection with the prayers of our brethren at home, had been answered, we thanked God and took courage. Admitting that on their part there was nothing but the promptings of a natural curiosity, that they were conscious of, yet God, who turneth the hearts of men as the rivers of water are turned, could stir up this natural principle, and give it force and direction, and make it lead to results the most important. It was natural to expect, however, that this principle, if left to itself, would operate most powerfully at the outset, and that it would become weaker and weaker until we should be left with few or no hearers. We hope, however, to escape this result. We hope that, as their curiosity becomes less, their convictions will become stronger, and so a motive more reliable and more steady in its operation than mere curiosity will be supplied to insure an attendance. To supply this motive, our reliance is on the Infinite Father. And for this object we desire your prayers, and the prayers of all our dear brethren.

The next two Sabbaths the number, as we expected, was somewhat less; in the evening about fifty, and in the morning about twenty-five. And this has been about the average attendance ever since. Last Sabbath, when the meeting commenced, there were but few present, perhaps a dozen. But when I had got about half through, the Lord sent in about as many more, and they were apparently men of intelligence, so that we had about our usual number for morning service. When they came in I began back and gave them about the whole of my discourse. They gave good attention. The whole time occupied is generally from thirty to forty minutes. The services consist of a few remarks, on some one of the ten commands, as an introduction; then prayer; after that, the discourse, which is not read, but spoken; then prayer and singing. We only sing one or two verses. This seems to interest the people as much as the other exercises do.

In the chapel we have suspended the Ten Commandments, the Genealogy of Christ from Adam, Mitchell's Map of the World, and the Map of Palestine and Egypt, all in the Chinese except Mitchell's Map. This serves a very good purpose, as it shows the position and relative size of "the Middle Kingdom." When the people come to understand it, and believe it is true, they will see that China is not exactly the Central Kingdom, and that the other portions of the world, in comparison with it, are something more than insignificant islands. The people already know something about the English, the French, and the Americans. And, as we might expect, when told that the map contains a representation of all the countries in the world, they frequently inquire for England and America. And it is gratifying to be able to give definiteness to their ideas by the aid of the map. Probably but few of them rely with confidence upon the truthfulness of the map. They have so little knowledge of other countries, and such ideas of the perils of navigating the great seas, that some of them are disposed at first to raise the question whether any body can possibly know enough about all the world to make a map of it. This map also affords a good means of pointing out Immanuel's land, whence the Gospel commenced its triumphant career, and from which it was commanded to be published to all the nations, and to which the tribes of Israel will yet be restored, and to which the Captain of our salvation will again ascend with power and great glory. This land, we endeavor to show them, is perhaps the most central of any among the kingdoms of the earth.

The map of Palestine and Egypt, on a large scale, is a help when treating on historical portions of the Scriptures. To be able to point out to them the place, even the track of the Israelites through the Red Sea, the location of Mount Sinai, of Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Nazareth, and other places, when describing scenes connected with these places, serves, I think, to fasten conviction on their minds. It shows that some body has been awake while they themselves have been enshrouded in the slumber of ages. It helps to do a very difficult but important work, viz. to impress upon their minds the conviction that actions have been performed upon this earth of a character the most stupendous, and all having a bearing upon the general welfare of mankind, of which they have hitherto had not the slightest conception.

We endeavor to present as distinctly as possible before them the law of God as the standard of right, and as the instrument of their condemnation. And we endeavor to hold up before them quite as prominently the Lord Jesus Christ as the friend of sinners. And our teachers tell us that, aside from the difficulties arising from the newness of the subjects presented, we are generally understood. We are not, however, entirely dependent upon the opinions of our teachers on this point. By the expressions of the countenance, and an expressive nod of the head, we frequently have a gratifying demonstration, not only that we are understood, but also that an interest is felt, to some extent, in what is said.

Upon the whole, from our short experience of two months in preaching to this people, we feel encouraged to go forward. We can often introduce religious conversation in our retired walks on the city wall, or in the country, in the idol temples, and at private dwellings. But there is no place in which we can throw ourselves into the work to so good advantage as in our own chapel. And if the Spirit of God shall continue to draw the people together to this place of hearing, we feel bound here to make our most earnest endeavors. But I need not dwell upon a point so obvious.

And now, brethren, you see the position of your humble brethren in China. While others, by the use of tracts, and by making preaching excursions out into the country, are sowing broad-cast, we must be content to cultivate a smaller field as more suitable to our means. We shall endeavor to keep a watchful eye, so far as we feel that we must, upon their doings, both preaching and translating, but we feel that our great work at present is with the people immediately around us. We have engaged to explain to our neighbors the True God's Book. Before this people we stand fairly committed to this work. But who is sufficient for these things? Who can so explain and enforce the teachings of that Book, that the dark minds of the heathen shall be filled with light, and their hard hearts be touched with the power of Truth and of the Spirit? Brethren, pray for us, for we shall stand in continual need of divine assistance. Let all our beloved brethren throughout the churches, who have put their hands to this work, and whose hearts are enlisted in it, pray for us, and for those who hear the word from our lips. There is power in prayer. And the God of power, in answer to prayer, will cause that his word shall not return unto him void, but accomplish that whereunto it is sent. It is solemn to think that that word is ordained to be, in the hands of men, the savor of life unto life to them that believe, and of death unto death to them that believe not. It has afforded us no small comfort to learn, as we often have from the official communications of the Board, and from other sources, that this mission is in the hearts of our people, and that they love to pray for its success. And we have substantial evidence of the sincerity of those prayers in the means which have been liberally supplied. Liberally, I say, for this is a great undertaking for our people, and they have done nobly thus far.

"THE POOR SOULS IN PURGATORY."

The following paragraph is taken from an editorial article in the last number of the "Freeman's Journal and Catholic Register," of this city. If we were not accustomed to seeing similar twattle from the same source, we could scarcely believe the writer of it to be in earnest. How a man who grew up among Protestants in the United States can honestly speak in such a strain, is a mystery to us.

"We had wished to have excited the devotion of Catholics who have not thought of it to the importance of the Octave beginning on Friday. It is the octave in which all Catholics are exhorted by the Church to pray for the poor souls in Purgatory. Is it not a touching thought, that there are so many dear spouses of the Redeemer, so many ransomed from eternal fire by His Blood, who are yet languishing in the prison-house of temporary expiation, while their friends yet on earth either unkindly forget them, or by a false and misguided charity take it for granted that the dross and assoilments of the earth, and of a worldly life, have been purged away in a few days or a few weeks? Who has taught the Americans that their souls are too refined to be touched deeply by the purgatorial fire? Or that their recording Angels are too polite to require of them payment to the uttermost farthing of the many debts, of which the guilt, but not the temporal punishment, was remitted so many times in the confessional? As an American and a layman, we feel free to ask why it is, that while we can shine admirably in the romance, and the sentiment, and the compliments of Catholicity, we allow persons of foreign birth who come among us, to out-do us in the plain and practical duties which constrain Catholics to glorify God, not by words nor by pretence, but in a multitude of alms for the living and for the departed; and in a zeal to help forward every good work by the little offerings, both of prayers and of money, which at the same time swell the treasury of the Church by their multitude and humble the giver by their insignificance? Why does the Catholic of foreign birth have twenty Masses said for the repose of his dead, and the American who lives in a better house, and eats daintier food, and is better clad, content himself with a single Mass or two for those he has lost? We fear this American delicacy finds hard times in purgatory! We have reason to believe that God will inspire others to pray for those departed souls who, while in life, are especially mindful of the souls in purgatory. But if we be careless in the discharge of this duty who do we think will teach those that come after us to pray for us when we go hence?"

ORIGIN OF LITERARY DEGREES.

The practice of conferring the honors of literary institutions on individuals of distinguished erudition, commenced in the twelfth century, when the Emperor Lotharie, having found in Italy a copy of the Roman law, ordained that it should be publicly expounded in the schools; and, that he might give encouragement to the study, he further ordered that the public professors of this law should be dignified with the title of Doctors. The first person created a Doctor after this ordinance of the Emperor was Bulgarius Hugolinus, who was greatly distinguished for his learning and literary labor. Not long afterward, the practice of creating doctors was borrowed from the lawyers by divines also; in their schools they publicly taught divinity, and conferred degrees on those who had made great proficiency in that science. The plan of conferring degrees in divinity was first adopted in the Universities of Bologne, Oxford, and Paris. (See Mather's Magnolia Christi Americans, B. IV. p. 134.) It is remarkable that the celebrated Dr. Samuel Johnson, when he had become eminent in literature, could not obtain the degree of Master of Arts from Trinity College, Dublin, though powerful interest was made in his behalf for this purpose by Mr. Pope, Lord Gower, and others. Instances of the failure of similar applications, made in favor of characters still more distinguished than Johnson then was, are also on record. So cautious and reserved were literary institutions, a little more than half a century ago, in bestowing their honors!

From the London Baptist Magazine.

"I WILL ARISE AND GO UNTO MY FATHER."

When burdened is my breast,
When friendless seems my lot,
When earth affords no rest,
And refuge I have not;
Father! if thou wilt suffer me,
I will arise and come to thee.

When conscience thunders loud,
When sins in dread array
Upon my memory crowd,
And fill me with dismay;
E'en then, there yet is hope for me;
Father! I'll rise and come to thee.

When I have wandered far
Along the downward road,
And mountains seem to bar
My turning back to God;
Yet glancing once on Calvary,
Father! I'll rise and come to thee.

And if I am a child,
But have backslidden still,
And filled with projects wild,
Have followed my own will;
Yet, penitent, resolved I'll be,
Father! to rise and come to thee.

With broken heart and sad,
I will retrace my way,
And though my case is bad,
Thy mercy is my stay;
With Jesus' blood my only plea,
Father! I'll rise and come to thee.

And thou in love wilt turn
To thy poor rebel child;
Nor let thine anger burn,
Though sin my heart beguiled;
Thy voice shall greet me graciously,
Arise! arise! and come to me.

And when my cheeks turn pale,
And when I sink in death,
Though heart and flesh may fail,
With my expiring breath,
I'll whisper, Jesus died for me,
Father! I rise to come to thee.

ELIZABETH.

PRAYER IN THE BALL-ROOM.

In one of the interior counties of Pennsylvania a young man whom, for the sake of distinction, we shall call B——, was convicted of sin and led to inquire anxiously the way to be saved. He was the son of one of the most respectable and wealthy inhabitants of that region of country, but his father was unhappily a bitter opposer of the religion of Christ. Perceiving the state of his son's mind, he determined to leave no means untried to divert his mind from the subject. He hurried him from business to pleasure, and from pleasure to business, with strong hopes that his serious impressions might be driven away, or, at least, that he might be prevented making any public profession of the change of his views. But all these efforts were vain. The Spirit of God had laid hold on his soul, and did not desert him. He was brought to the dust in submission, and found peace in believing on Christ.

About this time a splendid ball was got up, with every possible attempt at display, and the youth of the village and surrounding country were all excitement for the festive hall. B—— was invited. He at once declined attending, but his father insisted that he should go. Here was a struggle for the young convert. On the one hand were the convictions of his own conscience, as well as the desires of his heart. On the other, the command of a father whom he was still bound to obey. The struggle was long and anxious. At length it was decided—he determined to go. His father rejoiced at his decision. His friends congratulated him on having abandoned his new notions and become a man again.

The evening at last arrived. The gay party were gathered in the spacious hall. There was beauty, and wealth, and fashion. The world was there. Every heart seemed full of gladness, every voice was one of joy. B—— appeared among the rest, with a brow that spoke the purpose of a determined soul. He was the first on the floor to lead off the dance. A cotillion was formed, and as the circle stood in the centre of the room, with every eye fixed on them, what was the astonishment of the company when B—— raised his hands and said, "Let us pray." The assembly was awe-struck. Not a word was uttered. It was as silent as the grave, while B—— poured out his heart to God in behalf of his young companions, his parents, and the place in which they lived. With perfect composure he concluded his prayer, and all had left the room silently, but one. A young lady whom he had led upon the floor as his partner, stood near him bathed in tears. They left the room together, and not long afterwards, she was led to the foot of the cross, having been first awakened by her partner's prayer on the ball-room floor. They were soon married, and are still living, active, devoted members of the body of Christ. B—— is an elder in one of the churches near the city of New York.

A HUNDRED YEARS HENCE.

It strikes me as the most impressive of all sentiments, that it will be all the same a hundred years after this. It is often uttered in the form of a proverb, and with the levity of mind that is not aware of its importance. A hundred years after this! Good heavens! with what speed and with what certainty will those hundred years come to their termination! This day will draw to a close, and a number of days make up one revolution of the season. Year follows year, and a number of years make up a century. These little intervals of time accumulate, and fill up that mighty space which appears to the fancy so big, and so immeasurable. The hundred years will come, and they will witness the wreck of whole generations. Every living thing that now moves on the face of the earth will disappear from it. The infant that now hangs on its mother's bosom will only live in the remembrance of his grand-children. The scene of life and of intelligence that is now before us will be changed into dark and loathsome forms of corruption. The people who now hear me, will cease to be spoken of; their memory will perish from the face of the country; their flesh will be devoured by worms, and the dark and creeping things that live in the holes of the earth will feed upon their bodies; their coffins will have mouldered away, and their bones be thrown up in new-made graves. And is this the consummation of all things? Is this the final end and issue of man? Is this the upshot of his busy history? Is there nothing beyond time and the grave to alleviate the gloomy picture, to chase away these dismal images? Must we sleep forever in the dust, and bid an eternal adieu to the light of heaven? [Chalmers.

AN OPPONENT DISARMED.

Who has not heard of John Brown, of Haddington? His System of Divinity, his Dictionary of the Bible, but, most of all, his Catechism, have made him widely known, especially among Presbyterians. Though advanced in after years to the post of Professor of Divinity in the Theological Seminary of the Associate Synod of Scotland, his greatness was not so generally acknowledged in his early ministry.

His first call, while yet a licentiate, was to the Church in Haddington. It was opposed by a minority of one, but, as is sometimes the case, that one was a host in himself. His wealth, station, and influence, made him an object of fear to the majority, who anticipated trouble from him in the settlement of Mr. Brown.

Previous, however, to the ordination, the young preacher was providentially brought in the way of his formidable opponent. Nothing daunted or disturbed, he took him by the hand, and the following dialogue ensued:

Brown. Pray tell me, Mr. Stuart, what you have against me.

Stuart. I'll be as frank as yourself, Mr. Brown; and must say, that I have a very strong reason for voting against you; and it is just this—I don't think you a good preacher.

Brown. Ah! so I thought; but, my dear sir, you and I are perfectly agreed in this matter. I know it as well as you do; but the people, you see, differ from us both. Now where is the use of our setting up our opinions and views against those of the parish?

A pause—and then a hearty laugh succeeded, and Mr. Stuart, with a hearty shake of the hand, responded: "I begin to be of your opinion, Mr. Brown; you shall find in me, henceforward, not an opposer, but a faithful friend."

And so it proved. Mr. Brown, from that period, had no warmer friend in the parish.

HOW I WOULD PREACH IF I COULD.

"I am tormented," said Robert Hall, "with the desire of writing better than I can." I am tormented, say I, with the desire of preaching better than I can.

But I have no wish to make fine, pretty sermons. Prettiness is well enough when prettiness is in place. I like to see a pretty child, a pretty flower, but in a sermon prettiness is out of place. To my ear it would be anything but commendation, should it be said to me, "You have given us a pretty sermon."

If I were tried for my life, and my advocate should amuse the jury with tropes and figures, burying his argument beneath a profusion of the flowers of rhetoric, I would say to him: "Tut, man, you care more for your vanity than for my hanging. Put yourself in my place—speak in view of the gallows, and you will tell your story plainly and earnestly." I have no objection to a lady winding a sword with ribbons and studding it with roses, when she presents it to her hero-lover, but in the day of battle he will tear away the ornaments and use a naked edge on the enemy.

A CHINESE BREAKFAST.

Let us enter New China Street at about ten o'clock, the time of Chinese breakfast, though they rise and work for hours before. We pause in front of Chongshing's variety store, and observe that the shop doors are put to, indicating that business must yield to the pleasure of eating, and that the inmates have not the slightest idea of being disturbed at their meals. But, for once, we will violate the rules of etiquette and go in. Chongshing and his sons are about sitting down to a circular table, and do not seem disposed to pay us much attention. We hear a sound of something hissing, and presently a servant from the back room brings in half a dozen or more bowls filled with hot boiled rice, or fish prepared in some simple way, or vegetables; tea is served in little cups; the chop-sticks are pulled from their cases; and the battle begins. Chop-sticks to a European are one of the seventy times seven wonders of the world. They are from six to eight inches in length, perfectly round and smooth, and about the size of rye straws. Held between the thumb and two forefingers, they would seem, at first sight, about as useless as knitting-needles; but one no longer doubts their efficiency, when he sees the prodigies of devastation performed by their aid. So dexterous is the Chinaman, that he can pick up a grain of rice between their rounded ends as easily as it can be lifted on a knife-blade; but he does not usually stop to eat in such a delicate, lady-like style. Chongshing and party wash down their meal by such unnumbered cups of tea, that Johnson himself would be put in the shade. They drink it without sugar or cream; they would spoil its flavor. Now the breakfast is almost over, each has seized his bowl of rice, and this is the moment for the painter. Each bowl is elevated to the mouth, each head thrown back, each tail hangs straight down, and into the distended jaws the nimble chop-sticks shovel the rice in the most marvelous manner. Then, as the bowls are emptied, above each mouth appears a little hill of the white vegetable, a gurgling sound is heard, and the rice hills sink out of sight as if swallowed up by a quicksand. After this feat the party come to, and setting down the bowls look into them once more, sigh profoundly, and all at once become aware of our presence, jumping up from the table, ask if we too have had breakfast, and being wide awake to chaffer on every article.

AUSTRALIA.

The Rev. Dr. Lang, whose letters in the British Banner on Christian Colonization have, for some time past, been attracting attention, is about to leave London, on his return to Sidney, New South Wales, where he has formed the nucleus of an Australian College. In his last letter he says he is likely to carry out with him, as candidates for the Christian ministry, a band of men whose hearts the Lord hath touched. He proposes, on the voyage out, to have classes in Latin and Greek, and expresses his opinion that a young man of moderate abilities and ordinary diligence, will be able to read the four Gospels in both languages by the time he reaches his destination. He intends, also, to deliver a series of exegetical lectures on ship-board. According to his account, the Christian public in Australia will support the candidates during their preparation there for the ministry.

The educational establishment in Sidney, connected with the church of which Dr. Lang is pastor, already has buildings enough to accommodate a considerable number of candidates, and has a commodious lecture room. It is called the Australian College, and has been in existence ever since 1831, when Dr. L. was chosen Principal, but for the last seven years has been virtually stopped by a chancery suit instituted against it by the local government. The government, however, was foiled, and Dr. L.'s visit to England was to insure the revival of the institution.

The field of labor, and the prospect of support for the Christian ministry, are ample. Within a semicircle of 100 miles around Sydney, numerous towns and villages are springing up in all directions, and the colonists in many instances are exceedingly anxious for the settlement of evangelical ministers in their respective localities.

A PRAYER-ROOM IN STORES.

A merchant of this city invited a clergyman to visit a store which he had fitted up with every convenience for his own use. After surveying the premises, the clergyman said to him, "There is yet one room wanting." "What is that?" inquired the merchant, "I cannot think of anything else that I need." "A prayer-room," replied the clergyman, a closet to which you can retire to pray when you have a little leisure, and especially when you are tempted to over-reach a customer, or to do any wrong in your business transactions. "You are right," said the merchant, "the room shall be made; and he has since testified that he has found it a most delightful place.

It is said of Robert Hall, that when he became heated in a controversy, he would suddenly leave the room, and after a few moments return and calmly resume the discussion. It was understood that he had retired to pray against the natural infirmity of his temper. Would that every Christian merchant had his prayer-room at hand, to which he might flee when beset with covetousness, worldliness, or any business temptations and be alone with Him that seeth in secret. How many acts disreputable to the Christain name would thus be avoided; how many after repentings spared. Why may not this improvement be generally introduced into the stores of Christians? The room should be strictly private, and its very design may be secret except as it shall become known by its fruits.

COST OF SELF-INDULGENCE.

A single gambling-house in London cost not long since, with its furniture, nearly 500,000 dollars, and the receipts of the proprietor in one year amounted to just about the same sum. Mr. Colquhoun calculated that the money lost annually in all the gambling houses in London, exceeds 35,000,000 dollars; at Cockford's alone, nearly 5,000,000 dollars were recently lost in one night. One nobleman gives $1,505 a year for a single box at the opera; and the receipts of an Italian singer during one season were $70,000—more than enough to maintain 46 married missionaries. In 1821 the inhabitants of London wasted on one out of twenty-two theatres, a sum which would have furnished one hundred evangelists to the heathen world. What, then, did they waste on all the twenty-two? On the two articles of tobacco and ardent spirits, Great Britain spends more than $125,000,000 annually; by renouncing these two noxious indulgences, she could maintain about 60,000 missionary families among the heathen. The four great powers of Europe, Russia, France, Austria and Prussia, maintain 2,000,000 men, in the shape of standing armies, at an annual expense of about $100,000,000.

HEBREW LEGEND.—"You teach," said the Emperor Trajan to a famous Rabbi, "that your God is every where, and boast that he resides among your nation. I should like to see him."

"God's presence is indeed every where," the Rabbi replied, "but he cannot be seen, for no mortal eye can look upon his splendor."

The Emperor had the obstinacy of power, and persisted in his demand. "Well," answered the Rabbi, "suppose we begin by endeavoring to gaze at one of his ambassadors?"

Trajan assented, and the Rabbi, leading him into the open air, for it was the noon of the day, bade him raise his eyes to the sun, shining down on the world in its meridian glory. The Emperor made an attempt, but relinquished it.

"I cannot," he said, "the light dazzles me."

"If, then," rejoined the triumphant Rabbi, "thou art unable to endure the light of one of his creatures, how canst thou expect to behold the unclouded glory of the Creator?"

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 15, 1849.

"NOT THE JEWISH BUT THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH."

We have exposed to our readers a little of the sophistry by which Mr. Bennett has attempted to do away the commemorative character of the sabbatic institution. We say, to do it away; for the arguments he employs to prove that it does not commemorate the work of creation, do just as effectually prove that it commemorates nothing at all. "The error," says he, "consists in putting one of the media, through which the end is to be reached, for the end itself." Now it strikes us, that one might just as well say of the Lord's Supper, in flat contradiction of the Scriptures, that its design is not to "show forth the Lord's death"—that "the error consists in putting one of the media, through which the end is to be reached, for the end itself," which is a saving knowledge of God. For who will call in question that this is the "final cause or end" of the eucharist? Why, Bro. B., you ought to know, that a commemorative institution is itself, necessarily, a medium; it can be nothing else. The commemoration of some important fact or event is made the medium through which a certain end is to be reached. This holds of every commemorative institution whatever, whether religious or political. Take, for instance, the Fourth of July. The great and ultimate end of this national celebration, is to foster in the minds of American citizens a spirit of patriotic devotion to the government and political institutions of their country. But the commemoration of a certain event—the Declaration of Independence—is constituted the medium through which this end is reached. Would not that man's intellect be rated at a heavy discount, who should say that the end of the Fourth of July celebration is not to commemorate the Declaration of Independence?—that "the error consists in putting one of the media, through which the end is to be reached, for the end itself?" Our author certainly does not lack for intellect, but his acuteness failed him in this instance. If his principles of reasoning were admitted, they would show that a strictly commemorative institution could have no existence. Of course, what proves too much proves nothing.

Mr. B. seemingly overlooks the fact, that a commemorative institution is given, not merely to serve the benefit of those who observe its solemnities, but also to serve as a testimony to others. On the supposition that the Sabbath is designed merely to "foster and perpetuate in the mind a saving knowledge of God," it can be of little or no use to any except those who carefully avail themselves of its privileges. But, on the supposition that it is designed as a commemorative institution, pointing back to creation, it is of immense benefit to the world at large, inasmuch as it is a standing witness against atheism and idolatry. The infidel, who scoffs at the idea of a self-existent, supreme Intelligence, as the Creator of all things, and affirms that the world sprang into existence by chance, sees, in the weekly commemoration of the world's creation by Sabbath-keepers, a constant refutation of his foolish philosophy. The idolater, who gives glory to a multitude of deities, whom he supposes to be invested with the government of the world, and refuses to acknowledge the Creator as the rightful and only Sovereign, sees, in the commemoration of creation by Sabbath-keepers, and in the homage which they thus pay to the Author of creation, a constant rebuke of their folly. What a testimony was borne by the Israelitish nation, in behalf of the Creator of the world, to the idolatrous nations around them! Those nations saw the wonderful spectacle of an entire nation every week breaking away from worldly business, and assembling in "holy convocation." It was very natural for them to—and God, no doubt, meant that they should—inquire, "What meaneth this?" The answer they received was a testimony in behalf of the true God—that He who created all things is the only one that ought to be acknowledged and worshiped as God. Thus the Sabbath was of great use, not only to the Israelites, the keepers of it, by securing to them a season of rest from toil, and opportunities for devotion in order to further themselves in the saving knowledge of God, but to the other nations of the world, by calling their attention to that God who dwelt among and sanctified the Israelites. When Mr. B. gets his eyes well open to see that the Sabbath serves this very important purpose, he will not be so anxious to cover up its commemorative character.

Mr. B. concludes, "that action, rather than rest, is fitted to commemorate creation, for creation was a succession of Almighty acts; the Sabbath in its nature refers to a discontinuance of action."

The fallacy of this argument consists in supposing, that an event is not fitly commemorated, except by something which bears the closest possible resemblance to it. According to this view, a civic procession, with banners and music, and a patriotic oration reviewing our colonial struggles with Great Britain, are not a suitable commemoration of the Declaration of Independence. To render it complete, there must be, every Fourth of July, a dramatic representation of the signing of the great instrument! So, too, in the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, the acts performed do not very fitly "show forth the Lord's death!" The eating of bread and drinking of wine do not bear much resemblance to the putting of a man to death. The shedding of the blood of an innocent lamb would be a much more striking celebration of the matter. What a mistake our Lord made in not continuing the old paschal sacrifice! Your reasoning, Bro. B., may appear very plausible to some minds; but to us, who feel ourselves bound to curb our imaginations by the Scriptures, that is a very suitable method of commemorating an event which God appoints for the purpose, whatever it may be. We should not know that abstinence from labor was the most suitable method of commemorating creation, unless God had told us to commemorate it in this way. God "blessed and sanctified the seventh day," thereby setting it apart as a day to be religiously observed. But the duty of observing it by entire abstinence from labor, throughout the twenty-four hours, is ascertainable, not from the simple fact that God sanctified it, but from some express intimation of the divine will to that effect. The Creator's blessing and sanctifying the day was a plain intimation of the duty of man to render it memorable by some sort of celebration. But it did not follow, in the absence of any divine injunction, that because God rested, therefore man was to rest. If, however, God saw fit to make it man's duty to rest from his labors as a method of commemorating creation, we may be sure that there is a perfect fitness and congruity in such method of commemorating it. Let us see if we cannot discover some sort of fitness in it. If "the Sabbath refers to a discontinuance of action," it follows that in keeping the Sabbath we commemorate God's discontinuance of action. And if we commemorate his discontinuance of action, we do, by implication, commemorate the action itself which was discontinued. The commemoration of his rest naturally includes the commemoration of his work, for the one necessarily implies the other. If our author's eyes were a little wider open, he would see that the design of setting apart the rest-day, rather than any of the working days, as the day to be kept holy by man, was that man might then be able to commemorate creation as a work finished, beautified, and fitted for the glorious purposes which its Author had in view. For "on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made." Gen. 2: 2.

"It should be remembered," says Mr. B., "that the fourth commandment embraces two injunctions of equal authority, and to that commemorative institution, established thereby, the labor is equally necessary as the rest. We by our daily toil commemorate the work of creation, as we do the divine rest by our resting on the Sabbath. We have the same reason for asserting the former as the latter, both from the analogy of the case and from the language of the command. But the truth is, to remember either is important, only as they are both media, through which we secure the end of the Sabbath. And we should remember, too, that to men in the early ages of the world, it was more necessary to remember God as living in contradistinction from a lifeless image, as powerful in contradistinction from a powerless idol, than it was to remember Him as resting. Idolatry was their besetting sin, and the corrective was an impressive apprehension of God's natural attributes."

Did the Almighty commit an error, then, when "in the early ages of the world" he enjoined upon his people "to remember him as resting?" For this paragraph, taken in connection with the one just before quoted, "that action rather than rest is fitted to commemorate creation," clearly conveys the idea that the Israelites, by celebrating the rest-day, remembered the Creator only as resting. But if it was "more necessary to remember God as a living in contradistinction from a lifeless image, as powerful in contradistinction from a powerless idol, than it was to remember him as resting," why was a rest-day enjoined upon the Israelites at all? If "action rather than rest was fitted to commemorate creation," and if "the proper corrective of idolatry was an impressive apprehensive of God's natural attributes" exerted in a powerful display of creative energy, why command the Israelites, in that early age of the world, to celebrate the rest-day? Why not enjoin them to keep on working, day after day, without intermission? Now the position we take is this, and we defy Mr. B. successfully to contradict it—That the remembering of Jehovah as resting, inasmuch as it necessarily implies that he first actually labored, is better fitted to give "an impressive apprehension of God's natural attributes," and thus to operate as the proper corrective of idolatry, than the remembering of him as still continuing to labor, or, in other words, not having finished his labors. For, by the remembering of him as resting—ceasing to labor at the expiration of six days—and then beholding every thing which he had made as "very good"—perfect, and not requiring any alteration, amendment, or addition—we hold him forth to an idolatrous world "as a living in contradistinction from a lifeless image, as powerful in contradistinction from a powerless idol." For surely, if in six short days he could finish such a universe as this—the heavens, the earth, the sea, and all that in them is—the sun, the moon, and the stars also—if he could do all this so that on the seventh day he had nothing more to do, and therefore rested or ceased from his labors, it is such a demonstration of his eternal power and godhead as can not fail to carry conviction to the mind. Let it not, then, be asserted again, "that action rather than rest is fitted to commemorate creation, because creation was a succession of Almighty acts."

Mr. B.'s sermon is really a strange production. He first more than insinuates that the end of the Sabbath is not to commemorate creation. Next he admits that by alternate labor and rest we do commemorate the work of creation and the Divine rest. Then he insinuates that this commemoration of creation was intended rather for the early ages of the world, when idolatry was the besetting sin of men, and intimates that in this advanced age there is no further need of such a commemoration. Read the following:—

"Is it not necessary to the best interests of the Christian world, in this age, to so celebrate the wondrous acts of the Almighty, as that his moral attributes shall have the most prominent and impressive exhibition?"

Why, can it be possible that Mr. B. thinks that the whole world, or even a large portion of it, is recovered and saved from its tendency to idolatry? Does he forget that some five or six hundred millions of its inhabitants are still in the most abject state of heathenism? Does he think that because, in the United States, or in Europe, men would not think of bowing down to a stock or a stone, there is nowhere else such degradation? Surely, he forgets himself. If there ever was necessity for an institution to bear witness against idolatry, that necessity exists now. And, on the other hand, there is no more need now "to so celebrate the wondrous acts of the Almighty, as that his moral attributes shall have the most prominent and impressive exhibition," than there always was. If it was necessary in the early ages of the world that man should love the Divine Being, it was necessary that he should be presented to them in a lovely light. Yet, if his moral attributes had not been held up to them in connection with those which are called natural, he would not have seemed to be lovely. For, whatever may be said of God's natural perfections, the glory of them depends upon their being united with those which are moral. Wisdom, without holiness, would be the detestable cunning of the serpent; power would be tyranny; and the immutability of such a character would be the curse of the universe. And if any one supposes that in remembering God as Creator, we think of him merely as a great genius, or a fine architect, and have no reference to his moral perfections, he is much mistaken. Creation makes a display of Jehovah, not merely as wise and powerful, but as righteous and good. Otherwise we see not how it leaves the heathen "without excuse." Rom. 1: 20. Yes, IN CREATION the moral attributes of God have "a prominent and impressive exhibition." How otherwise could all the duties of the moral law be evolved from it? Yet it is a fact, that the duties of this law all grow out of the relation which we sustain to God as his creatures. They are considered as arising so obviously out of this relation, that they are binding upon the heathen as well as upon those who have the written word. And hence it is that the knowledge of Jehovah, as the Creator of the universe, is the fundamental principle of all religion. It lies at the bottom of the whole. The relation which creation establishes between God and men, gives birth to that system of religion, the apostacy from which constitutes them sinners. In the order of nature, therefore, it necessarily precedes Christianity—it necessarily is antecedent to any types of Christianity. Hence men must be acquainted with it—must know and feel themselves apostates from it, before they can know any thing of Christianity profitably. Why, then, should theologians, in the heat of their zeal to destroy God's Sabbath, speak of creation as if it were comparatively scarcely worth remembering? We sometimes think the theologians of the present day are crazed in their wits. [To be continued.

THE JEWS AT SALONICA.

At the Monthly Concert held in Boston on the 5th inst., Dr. Pomeroy stated that intelligence had been received of the death of Mr. Maynard, one of a party of five missionaries, with their wives, who left Boston for Smyrna in December last. Mr. Maynard and Dr. Dodd went out to establish a mission to the Jews at Salonica, the ancient Thessalonica. At the time of his death he was making good progress in acquiring the language of the people. The city of Salonica contains about 80,000 inhabitants, and is considered by Mr. Schauffier, a missionary to the Jews in Constantinople, as the seat of learning and intelligence among the Jews. The Jews came hither when they were driven out of Spain. Their language is Spanish, written in the Hebrew character, called the Hebrew-Spanish. Mr. Schauffier has already made a translation of one or more volumes of the Scriptures in the language. The Jews are divided into two classes, one of which are Mohammedans, that religion having been adopted, probably, from motives of policy. These men are easily accessible, readily converse on religious subjects, and freely receive the books distributed among them. At Salonica, there are two English missionaries among the Jews. The success of missionary effort among this people has been small. A great difficulty in the labors of the English missionaries among the Jews, is believed to be caused by their expectations of the return of the Jews to Palestine. Dr. Pomeroy gave some account of the forms of worship prevalent among the Jews of the East, spoke of their condition as being degraded and despicable, and as tending to destroy the poetical interest entertained towards them as a race.

In the course of a sermon, recently, in Baltimore, the Rev. Dr. Backus stated that his congregation (1st Presbyterian) had contributed $120,000 in the last thirteen years, to charitable and Christian works.

EDUCATION AT THE WEST.

The Society for the Promotion of Collegiate and Theological Education at the West, held its Sixth Annual Meeting in Brooklyn last week. The annual discourse was preached by Edward Beecher, D. D., of Boston, and set forth very clearly and powerfully the importance of coöperating with Protestant Christians at the West, who are now a minority, in establishing a system of collegiate and theological education, of such power, and so early, that it shall exert its appropriate influence in forming the character of that portion of the nation. The Annual Report stated that the Society had pursued its work during the year with very encouraging success. For one of the institutions under its patronage, Wabash College, ten thousand dollars have been subscribed by persons connected with the Plymouth Church and congregation in Brooklyn. For another institution, Western Reserve College, $23,000 (which is to be increased to $25,000) has been subscribed by persons at the East, on condition that $75,000 shall be raised at the West, so forming a fund of $100,000 for the permanent endowment of that institution. Of this sum of $23,000, nearly $10,000 was subscribed by individuals in Brooklyn, making the whole amount secured in Brooklyn, during the year, for institutions under the patronage of the Society, exceed $20,000. In addition to the above, the Society has received over $11,000, which has been expended in carrying out its designs. In five of the institutions aided by the Society, interesting revivals have occurred during the year, viz: Western Reserve, Wabash, Knox, Wittenburg, and Beloit. The Secretary stated that the premium of $100 offered for the best essay on the Educational System of the Puritans as compared with that of the Jesuits, had been awarded to Prof. Noah Porter, Jr., of Yale College.

NO SABBATICAL LAWS.

The following memorial, asking for the repeal of all sabbatical enactments, is to be extensively circulated for signatures in Massachussetts, and then presented to the Legislature of that enlightened and liberal Commonwealth. We shall look with a good deal of interest for the result. Many, no doubt, who are loud in their professions of friendship for religious liberty and freedom of conscience, will refuse to sign a memorial asking for the very thing they have so often praised. Possibly some who profess to believe that religion does not need the support of the State, will also refuse to sign a memorial which is framed upon that principle. Still it ought to be presented to all, and the reasons of those who decline signing it ought to be carefully noted for future use. Who doubts, that a law requiring the observance of the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, or forbidding the observance of the first day, would be pronounced unconstitutional and tyrannical by a majority of the people of Massachusetts? Yet the existing laws, which require the observance of the first day, and virtually forbid the observance of the seventh day (by requiring civil and political duties to be done on that day,) are no less unconstitutional and tyrannical. Why should not their true character be acknowledged by those who profess to be governed by the golden rule? The circulation of this memorial will serve to show who are the real, and who only the professing friends of equal rights and religious liberty. We are glad, therefore, to see that it has been started, and hope that it will be extensively circulated.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts:

The undersigned, inhabitants of Massachusetts, respectfully ask of the Legislature the repeal of all the laws in this Commonwealth, enforcing the observance of a day of the week as "the Sabbath" or "the Lord's day"—

1. Because there exists among the people an equally honest and conscientious difference of opinion as to the holiness of particular days, and the mode of their observance;

2. Because it is contrary to the fundamental idea of a republican government, that conscience should be coerced into conformity by law, or that special rights and privileges should be given to a particular religious belief;

3. Because the question of the holiness of days—like that of public worship, the support of the clergy, the observance of ordinances—should be left in its decision to individual conscience, and made to depend on its own merits, without the intervention of the State; and,

4. Because, as it has been found safe, politic, and beneficial to allow the people to decide for themselves in all other religious matters, there is no reason to doubt that the same good results would follow the repeal of the sabbatical laws complained of.

The Baptists of New Jersey held a sort of Anniversary Meeting at Plainfield, week before last, in the course of which the various objects of benevolence were presented by speakers who represented the Societies of the Denomination. The Annual Report of the State Convention, which was read by the Secretary, Mr. Carpenter, gave a sketch of the progress of the Baptist Churches in New Jersey for several years past. Twenty years ago, there were only fifty churches and about four thousand members in the State. Now there are ninety-one churches and about twelve thousand members. The amount of pastoral and missionary labor performed by persons sustained in part by the Board, since its organization, is put down at 211 years and 10 months. The number of hopeful converts baptized is stated to have been 2,009. During the last year $1,714 has been expended for missionary purposes by the Convention.

American Tract Society's Operations.—The building of the American Tract Society in New York now occupies a corner lot 80 feet by 94, and is five stories high, exclusive of the basement and under-cellars. Besides the parts of the first and second floors rented to other benevolent societies and for stores—the proceeds of rents being applied to the liquidation of the debt for the building—the entire lofts are occupied with machinery and workmen. A steam-engine propels twelve power-presses, five hydraulic presses, and three embossing-presses, and does all the hoisting, book-sawing, pastemaking, and glue-heating of the concern. By another boiler, the entire premises, containing 60 rooms, are heated by steam conveyed through wrought-iron pipes. The number of folders, stitchers, and binders, is about 160, and of compositors and pressmen more than 50, making more than 200 operatives whose daily bread is derived from the Tract House. Seventeen persons are employed in the executive and commercial departments. The daily production of books is about 3,000, and of smaller publications, about 30,000. The expenditures are on scale of about $1,000 a day; and to sustain this expenditure, the Committee have to look to the voluntary contributions of good men—except so far as the receipts for sales shall enable them to reproduce the books sent forth.

A Missionary Society for the Germans.—At the time and place of the late Indian Missionary Association, says the St. Louis Republican, a Convention was held and an Association formed and denominated The German Missionary Society for the Mississippi Valley. The object is to furnish religious instruction, on the principles of the Holy Scriptures, to the German and other immigrants from Europe. Provision is made for delegates from churches, associations and auxiliary societies, that aid in contributions. The plan contemplates the employment of itinerant and stationary missionaries, colporteurs and other instructors, who are native Germans, and who, by gathering congregations, visiting families, circulating works, and exerting a kind and persuasive influence, may produce salutary effects, and prepare those persons of foreign birth, to become Americans in their feelings and religious habits.

Importance of the Ministry.—At the recent meeting of the Presbyterian Synod of New York and New Jersey, the claims of the New York Union Theological Seminary were presented with much earnestness. In the course of remarks upon the subject, Rev. Dr. Skinner said that one reason why it should be sustained, was the present alarming apathy on the great and all-important subject of education for the ministry. God had no agent on earth more vitally connected with the progress of his cause, than the Christian ministry. To use a strong figure, he might say, that it was Christ's right arm! Get a MAN, and you can get a church, you can get money, you can get everything else. But what was the fact in reference to this matter? Dr. Robinson asserts, that at present the number of theological students in this country is less by one hundred and fifty than it was fifteen years ago. Dr. S. made a strong appeal on the importance of sending more laborers into the harvest.

The Gospel in Joppa.—It appeared, at the late anniversary of the American Board, that forty Missionaries are wanted to reinforce its stations and enter new fields "white for the harvest," but no one is ready to go. While this matter was under consideration, Rev. Mr. Thompson, of the Mission in Syria, gave the following very touching statement of what he saw of the necessity of the gospel in Joppa:—

"Just before taking passage in the ship that brought him hither, he had preached before a congregation of Arabs, at their own request, in Joppa, in the street that is called Strait, where Simon the Tanner once lived. He never thought that in his day he should have a request to preach in Joppa. The place whence the Gospel started on its westward mission to you two thousand years ago, is now waiting for you to send it back to its inhabitants. When he was about to leave, they came and threw their arms around his neck, and told him to tell Christians in this country to pray for them and send them missionaries. Some of them followed him several miles on his journey, and bathing his hands with their tears, begged that missionaries might be sent. They do not ask for your money, but they want your sons and daughters, and somehow, said Mr. T., I thought they ought to have them."

Persecution of Dissenters in the Canton Vaud.—The Paris correspondent of the Christian Advocate and Journal, who gives more and later news than any other, says that, about the first of September, no less than three religious meetings of dissenters were broken up by the police, and the persons who officiated, and those who lent their houses for the purpose, were indicted for this offense. The writer adds:—

"Allow me to recommend these suffering witnesses of the Lord Jesus to the sympathies and prayers of the Christians of the United States. Many have emigrated and have sought religious liberty in the eastern world, but many are unable to do so, and their testimony is needed in Europe. May they persevere in the faith, and may they speedily be delivered."

Ordination.—Brother James Summerbell was ordained to the work of the Gospel Ministry in the Seventh-day Baptist church in Petersburgh, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., on the 4th of November. As the same time and place, and in the same church, brethren Hamilton Clarke and Nathan Lewis were ordained to the office of deacon. The officiating ministers were Elders W. B. Maxson, James H. Cochran, and Azor Estee. Sermon by Eld. Maxson from 2 Cor. 5: 20.

The Condition of Hayti.—Reports of a recent date from the Island of Hayti are somewhat conflicting but generally quite unfavorable. The latest letters received from Mr. Jones represent things as in rather a "discouraging condition." Capt. Cook, of the schooner Willis Putnam, who recently returned from the Island, states that when he visited it, twelve years ago, the condition of the poor blacks (though then far from comfortable) was enviable to their present state; and that during this period their deterioration in civilization has been deplorable; there being now comparatively few that seriously apply themselves to work for a subsistence, the great majority preferring to beg or steal enough to keep body and soul together. On the other hand, the Superintendant of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission represents their operations as exceedingly prosperous and successful. The mission has 5 preachers, 13 stations or places for preaching, 7 teachers, 12 local preachers, 3,322 members, 131 Sunday scholars, 558 day scholars, and 1,210 who attend public worship.

Instrumental Music and Life Insurance "laid on the Table."—At the recent annual meeting of the Old School Presbyterian Synod of Kentucky, the question of the propriety of instrumental music, in the public worship of God, was discussed at length, and laid on the table. An overture was brought in and discussed, recommending to congregations to insure the lives of their ministers, and to ministers to insure their own lives for the benefit of their families. Against this recommendation, it was urged by several speakers, that life insurance was immoral—and on that and other grounds, it was laid on the table!

Union Theological Seminary.—The Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York, under the patronage of the Presbyterian Synod of New York and New Jersey, now contains 27 members of the Senior Class, 32 of the Middle Class, and 32 of the Junior Class—total 91. Of these, 25 are from the New England States, 32 from this State, and 12 from this City. The Faculty consists of five Professors—of Systematic Theology, Biblical Literature, Sacred Rhetoric, Ecclesiastical History, and Hebrew.

New York University.—There are, altogether, 411 medical students, 32 Seniors, 41 Juniors, 30 Sophmores, 32 Freshmen, and 169 Grammar School pupils—total 715 pupils in the University. The Faculty consists of Chancellor Frelinghuysen and 18 Professors, all of whom rank among the first scholars and instructors in the country.

A good Story spoiled.—Several weeks ago we copied from an exchange paper a paragraph to the effect that a New England Universalist preacher had received from his son in California $7,000 in gold dust. Mr. Willis, the father in question, states in a letter to the Boston Times, that he has a son in California, and that he recently received from him a piece of gold sent in a letter as a specimen of the "dust," which is all that he knows of the seven thousand dollars. We fear that many of the stories with which the newspapers are so plentifully supplied, will prove to be of a piece with this.

Missions of the American Board.—The American Board are about to send out several new missionaries. Rev. Messrs. Schenck and Doolittle, with their wives, were to sail on the 12th inst. from Boston, the first for the station at Fuchau, the latter for Amoy, China. It is expected that Rev. Mr. Tallmadge will leave in the course of the winter for the same destination. The Board also intend, before many months, to establish a mission at Mosul, in the Valley of Mesopotamia, near the ruins of the ancient City of Nineveh. The country throughout this region, including Antioch and Ayintab, and other places, is in an exceedingly interesting state, and promises good results as the fruit of missionary labor.

Laconic Correspondence between the Czar and the Sultan.—The following is said to be the substance of the letter addressed by the Emperor Nicholas to the Sultan, and transmitted by Prince Radziville:—

"The revolutionary element has been suppressed. The Hungarian war is at an end. I send to you my aide-de-camp, who will submit to you various demands calculated to ensure the maintenance of order."

The reply of the Sultan to this arrogant epistle (forwarded by Fund Effendi) is no less laconic; its tenor is pretty nearly as follows:—

"Your aide-de-camp has demanded from me the extradition of the Hungarian refugees. The demand being of a nature to cast odium on the two Powers, I entreat your Imperial Majesty not to insist on the point.

The Bible in the South Sea Islands.—In a letter to the British and Foreign Bible Society, dated Tahiti, South Seas, Nov. 23d, 1848, the Rev. Mr. Howe says:—

"It is truly delightful to see the eagerness of the people to obtain copies of the Sacred Volume, especially at the out-stations. One of the many small vessels which trade between this port and the dangerous archipelago, called the 'Paumotus,' came in the other day, and the captain had a long list of names of persons who would not take any thing for their work or produce but Bibles; and he was obliged to return here for them before he could pay them. Upward of 1,000 copies have gone to that group alone; and so desirous are people for them, that the merchants would take many more to distribute among them if we could spare them."

General Intelligence.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

By the steamer Empire City, which arrived at New York from Chagres on Sunday last, we have two weeks later news from California. The steamer brought thirteen thousand letters, about one thousand newspapers, near a million dollars in gold, and a large number of passengers, among whom was Hon. R. S. Thurston, delegate to Congress from Oregon. The steamer Oregon, which arrived at Panama from San Francisco on the 23d inst., brought 230 passengers, and the U. S. mails.

The most important and gratifying news from California by this arrival is, that the Delegates to prepare a State Constitution, have unanimously agreed to an article that "neither slavery, nor involuntary servitude, unless for the punishment of crime, shall ever be tolerated in this State." In other respects, the Constitution will not differ materially from that of New York or Pennsylvania. It was thought that the Convention would adjourn in about one week, after which the Constitution will be submitted to the people for their votes.

In regard to gold-digging, the accounts are very similar to those previously received—perhaps not quite as glowing. It seems to be agreed, that in the districts which have been dug over for a year past gold is becoming scarce, also that the turning of river-courses is not likely to be so profitable a speculation as was at first supposed. But there are rumors of newly-discovered placers on Trinity River which are very rich. A provision merchant at Sacramento writes, "There is good news from Trinity River; gold is very plenty, and provisions scarce!" Upon the whole, the news by this arrival is not particularly favorable to gold-digging.

The overland emigration is pouring into California in full tide. Speculation in lots at San Francisco was not quite as active as heretofore. The same is true of lumber. Washing is still $8 a dozen, and large quantities of soiled linen are sent to the Sandwich Islands and China to be washed.

An arrival at San Francisco from the Sandwich Islands has brought the startling intelligence of the Islands having been taken by the French. It is the same old quarrel broken out again. The story is this: The Island Government placed a heavy duty on various articles, such as wines and liquors, which constitute the principal exportations from France to the Pacific. The commander of the French fleet at Honolulu demanded that it should be revoked, and, on the refusal, opened his guns on the fort, which finally yielded. He then occupied it, and took possession of the Island.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston on the 10th inst., with Liverpool dates to Oct. 27, London 26th, Paris 25th, and Rome 20th.

It was reported in Paris, on the 25th, that the French Ambassador at St. Petersburg had forwarded dispatches to his government intimating a change in the hostile determinations of Russia in its disagreement with Turkey, upon the subject of the extradition. So far from forcing matters to extremities, Russia expressed itself anxious to settle the differences quietly, provided no warlike interference was threatened on the part of England. The same rumor prevailed at Vienna.

The Deutsche Zeitung has letters from Constantinople of the 8th ult., announcing the arrival in the Bosphorus of a British fleet of observation. A salute of 21 guns was fired by the Turkish ships in honor of the British flag. The Austrian fleet, consisting of frigates and brigs, is under sail for the Dardanelles. At Sebastopol there was a Russian fleet of twenty-six vessels, only four hours' sail from the mouth of the Bosphorus. The Turkish fleet is anchored across the Bosphorus at the narrowest parts, Gheuz-Soyou and Arnaout-Keni, to defend the passage. The Turkish army in Wallachia, commanded by Omer Pacha, had been ordered back to Constantinople. The French fleet, consisting of six vessels of the line, two frigates and steamers, with 8,000 men and 600 guns, is under weigh for the Dardanelles.

No further executions have taken place in Hungary, but arrests are the order of the day. A nephew of the unfortunate Count Batthyany has been forced to enlist as a private hussar in an Austrian regiment.

As many as sixty wrecks are reported to have taken place on the east coast of Britain during the late Equinoctial gales. The Conqueror, of Glasgow, on the morning of Sunday, Oct. 21, on the Gunfleet Sands, keeled over, and all on board perished, numbering sixteen or twenty persons. For miles the sea was literally studded with portions of her freight. Two other vessels were lost near the same spot, and all on board perished. The Dutch and Belgian mails describe the gales to have been very destructive on their respective coasts. Numerous vessels were lost.

On the coast of Greenland, this season has been one of the most disastrous on record to the whaling vessels. Intelligence has already been received of the entire destruction of four; and rumor has it that others have shared a like fate.

A New Article of Fuel.—A new article of fuel, says the Troy Budget, is manufactured in the vicinity of Newton's Corners, a few miles from Troy, from a swampy piece of low land which furnishes an article much resembling peat. It is thrown into a mill and ground, and then pressed in the shape of bricks for the purpose of thoroughly drying, when it is ready for use. It is considered to be quite as cheap as hard coal, and preferable to either coke or coal for grates, there being no gas or smoke from it. Thousands of tons have already been taken from a single acre in the above vicinity, affording a nice profit to the owners and manufacturers.

Startling Development.—On Thursday night, the 25th Oct., says the Butler (Pa.) Democrat, the house of James George, residing in Mercer County, Pa., was forcibly entered by a gang of robbers, having their faces painted, and otherwise disfigured for the purpose of evading detection. After having put the inmates under guard, they proceeded to search the house for money, using an ax in breaking open trunks, chests, &c., and took from $800 to $1,000, chiefly in gold. Previous to their leaving, they tied Mr. George to his bed, during which employment they used the most menacing and taunting language to their unfortunate victims. Information having been made against those suspected of the crime, they were immediately arrested and committed, which led to still farther examinations in the neighborhood of Centreville, in the upper part of this County, where five galvanic batteries, dies, chemicals, and all the implements necessary for carrying on the counterfeiting business, were found, and arrests made upon the strength of the testimony and circumstances. The arrests are still continuing to be made; and, judging from circumstances, they are only commencing. It is generally believed that a gang of robbers and counterfeiters are associated together, reaching from various parts of the State of New York, passing through Pennsylvania into the States of Ohio and Virginia.

Singular and Mysterious.—The Lake Providence (La.) Republican of the 23d ult., relates the following singular circumstance:

Some time ago, when the cholera was raging to such an alarming extent in our Parish, a gentleman residing a short distance from Providence determined to remove his wife to a more secure locality, and accordingly sent her to New Orleans. The husband soon received the fatal news that the tender partner of his bosom had fallen a victim to the dreadful pestilence, in the city of New Orleans.

Months, however, rolled by, and time, the great physician, assuaged the first violence of grief into a pensive and melancholy remembrance of his departed saint. Soon he formed the acquaintance of another lady, who attracted his respect by her many fine qualities, and at last woke to life his sluggish and broken heart, by her quiet and modest preference for him. Suffice it to say, that about four weeks since they were married, and the clouds of sorrow fled from their connubial bowers.

About a week since the first wife appeared and flung herself into the arms of her husband, to the great dismay of the new bride.

Jenny Lind.—A paragraph has appeared in some of the papers, stating that Mr. Barnum, of the American Museum, N. Y., has offered Miss Lind $50,000 for 200 nights, and the story is doubted by some by reason of its largeness. The truth, says the N. Y. Tribune, is simply this: An agent of Mr. Barnum has had three interviews with Jenny Lind upon the subject of visiting America. The lady evinced no indisposition to do so, could the terms be made satisfactory. The agent immediately came to this country to consult with Mr. Barnum, and is now ready to return with the following liberal proposition: Mr. B. agrees to pay Miss Lind one thousand dollars per night for two hundred nights, and also to pay all the expenses of herself and household, including two servants, a female companion, and a business man, probably her father. He also pays all the expenses of getting up concerts and for auxiliary talent, &c., &c. Included in the above are the expenses of the party from Stockholm to this country. To assure Miss Lind of his ability to fulfill his contract, Mr. Barnum agrees to deposit $50,000 in the hands of her London banker before she leaves Europe.

Contemplated Revolt.—One day last week, says the Globe, one of the colored prisoners in the Penitentiary on Blackwell's Island, near New-York, surlily disobeyed some command of the Warden, Mr. Kean, and was called up to be reprimanded or punished, when he drew a knife, which he had concealed about him, and made a furious stroke at Mr. Kean. At the moment one of the Deputy Keepers, named De Mott, stepped in the way, and the blow aimed at the Warden struck him in the left side, wounding him very seriously. The negro was promptly seized and ironed, and medical attendance procured for Mr. De Mott, who is still in a dangerous condition. Intimations of a contemplated revolt having been given to the Warden, he ordered a search of the prisoners and their cells, when over a peck of knives were found. Had this desperate conspiracy been suffered to come to a head, there would, in all probability, have been several lives sacrificed.

A Murderer supposed to be at large.—Our readers doubtless remember the material facts connected with the trial, condemnation and execution of a Dr. Coolridge in Maine, for poisoning a young man who was in the habit of visiting his office. The Lowell Journal says that the Press in Maine is pretty generally arriving at the opinion that Coolidge is still alive, notwithstanding the ceremony of his burial. Dr. C. Seavy of Stetson has a communication in the Bangor Courier in which he goes into the matter scientifically, and states his belief that Coolidge is not dead. He says, after examining the evidence that has been adduced, and considering the character of the witnesses he "cannot see how any reasonable person can come to any other conclusion than that there has been a most nefarious outrage committed on the part of some of the functionaries of the prison, and thereby a gross imposition practiced upon the community."

Congressional Mileage.—A Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, says that for years past, on the advent of every new Administration, the Senate has been in the habit of charging full mileage for attendance at the special Executive Session of that body, in addition to the amount received for the regular Session. This usage was killed a few days since by the First Controller of the Treasury It seems that a claim came up in usual form, for $40,000, paid by A. Dickens, Esq., Clerk of the Senate, for "constructive mileage" in attendance at the special Executive Session in March last, and that every member save three, received pay. Mr. Whittlesey, after full deliberation, was of opinion that the claim ought not to be allowed. He stated the case to the President through Mr. Clayton. The President's reply was, "Tell Mr. Whittlesey to do what is right, and let the consequences take care of themselves." The claim was immediately rejected. Mr. Dickens has his remedy against the honorable Senators.

Sabbath Accidents.—On Sabbath (commonly called Saturday) Nov. 3, a fearful accident occurred near Patterson, N. J. Mr. Megier, a wood cutter, was engaged in cutting down a tree in the woods and when it was half cut through it fell. Mr. M. seeing his danger attempted to escape, but in vain; he was knocked down by the tree and his two thigh-bones broken. He remained confined under the tree for nearly three hours before the sad accident became known; the place where the accident happened being remote from any residence, it was not until his son brought him his dinner that it was found out. He was immediately conveyed home and surgical aid procured. While on the way home with the wounded man, a lad (his son) fell out of the wagon, and the wheels passing over his leg, fractured it dreadfully. On the same day, in New York, a carter named William Quogh, residing at 102 Washington-st., was standing on his cart at the corner of Broad and South-sts., when his horse was knocked down by a spar that was passing on a wagon; Quogh fell on his head on the pavement and fractured his skull. On the same day, as John Gray, residing at 72 James-st., was crossing Greenwich-st. corner of Cortland-st., he was knocked down by a horse and cart which was driven at a furious rate down Cortland-st., his head was cut, and his side severely injured.

The New Sugar Process.—The great desideratum in the manufacture of sugar has been to extract the saccharine matter without fermentation. The product of one hundred pounds of cane is but nine pounds of sugar; although it actually contains eighteen pounds; alcohol will extract the whole, but it is too costly and dangerous to be employed in practice. M. Melseus, professor in the Belgian Veterinary and Agricultural School, at Brussels, has made the discovery that hyposulphate of lime will so absorb the oxygen as to prevent fermentation, and that it is also the most effective purifier; and it can itself be easily separated from the sugar by means of lime. It also extracts the coloring matter and prevents the formation of color; and it neutralizes all injurious acids which may exist or be engendered. It prepares the syrup for a perfect crystalization. It admits of the extraction of all the saccharine matter from the cane, and presents it tn a condition to crystalize with great facility and in almost absolute purity. The discovery will be to the diet of mankind what the cotton-gin and the spinning-jenny have been to their clothing. [Independent.

An Aged Negress.—The Chronotype says that Sylvia Torry died recently in South Kingston at the remarkable age of 112 years. Sylvia was imported as a slave into Newport, R. I., at the age of 8 years. For the last 80 years she has borne quite a local fame as a fortune-teller, and her great age was one qualification in which she came up to the ordinary idea of a Sybil Her youngest daughter, 87 years of age, resided with her. Poor Syl's death was caused by her clothes taking fire, otherwise there is no knowing how many more generations of puny whites she would have seen under the sod.

Slave Stampede.—A dispatch dated Quincy, Ill., Nov. 6, says: Last night about 50 negroes, of all ages and sexes, with teams, stampeded from the Missouri side of the river. The slaves were owned by Miss Miller, Mr. Mackim, and Mr. McCutcheon, of Sugar Creek, and Mr. Ellis of Monticello, Lewis Co. They were overhauled on Saturday morning, and, after a desperate resistance and the loss of their leader, they were captured. The slave who was killed belonged to Mrs. Miller.

New York Election.—Full returns are not yet received, and of course the result cannot be given positively. The N. Y Tribune of the 12th thinks there is no reason to doubt of the election of Washington Hunt, Controller, Christopher Morgan, Secretary of State, Alvah Hunt, Treasurer, and Hezekiah C. Seymour, State Engineer and Surveyer. As between Messrs. Joshua A. Spencer, Samuel Stevens, Nelson J. Beach, Benjamin Squire, and their several opponents, the run is very close, and no one can say who is elected.

A French Duel.—A letter dated Paris, Oct. 19, says that during the speech of Matthieu de la Drone, on the Roman Question, an altercation arose between Thiers and Bixio. The latter declared that the former had said the election of Louis Napoleon would be a disgrace to France. Thiers demanded satisfaction. A duel took place at once, one shot was fired by each at 20 paces distance, but neither was wounded, and the seconds came forward and said that the parties had done all that honor required. Both members returned to the Assembly just as the sitting was adjourning at 5.

The Telegraph in Prussia.—Within the last year, and at an expense of 40,000 thalers, the Prussian Government has laid down wires for the electric telegraph, extending over nearly 900 English miles, and connecting Berlin with Frankfort, Aix la Chappelle, Hamburg, and Stettin. Before the close of the year, it is expected that the line to Oderburgh will be in operation; and by a junction with the Austrian lines, the Prussian capital will receive intelligence in a few minutes, through Vienna, from the Adriatic Sea.

No Railroads in Italy.—The correspondent of the London Daily News says that the cardinals have decided that the railway from Rome to Naples is a useless scheme, tending only to inundate Rome with worthless foreigners; they have therefore definitely suspended the works, and thus thrown thousands of people out of employment, now that it is so much needed.

On the 8th inst. an accident occurred on the New Haven Railroad, near New Brunswick. Three men belonging to a lumber yard run a wood-car upon the draw-bridge when it was not ready for them. The car and men were precipitated into the canal, killing one man instantly, and seriously injuring the other two.

SUMMARY.

The Louisville Courier states that Mr. Bain has made very important improvements upon his telegraph invention since March, 1848. He can give 500 machines, or any lesser number, scattered over the Union, a simultaneous movement, so that dots, lines, or other telegraphic emblems, for intelligence, made at Halifax, may also be multiplied at the same moment at New Orleans, Louisville, and all the intermediate distances or stations. He also dispenses with perforated paper, and transmits 1,000 letters per minute.

The Staunton (Va.) Vindicator states that Mrs. Bell, the widow of Francis Bell, deceased, near Long Glade in that county, has liberated all her slaves, 83 in number, with a view to their settlement in some one of the free States. These slaves are principally young, and design locating in Ohio.

The Utica Observer of the 3d inst. says: We yesterday noticed the accident of the cars running off the track, near Fonda. Mr. Porter, the Superintendant of the line, being one of the passengers, immediately sprang from the cars, and cut one of the wires, and by some manipulating process unknown to us, sent the intelligence to the office in this city in a few seconds.

An accident occurred on the New Haven Railroad last week in consequence of a drove of cows getting on the track. The weather was foggy, and one of the cows was caught under the cars, and thus threw the train off the track. The result was, that five persons were injured, six cars smashed, and thirteen cows killed. The track was considerably torn up.

"The cause of temperance with us," said a gentleman in Vermont, in reporting on the subject, "is the cause of the popular voice; though it evidently does not lie very near the hearts of some, who at times give visible evidence of staggering in the faith, by reason of some unseen influences."

DIED,

At Newport, N. Y., Oct. 31, 1849, Mrs. Desire Truman, wife of Mr. Daniel Truman, aged 51 years. She has left an aged husband and numerous relatives to mourn her death. Sister T. embraced religion in her youth, and it may be truly said of her, that she has lived like a Christian. The church feel very deeply the bereavement her death has caused, but entertain no doubt that their loss is her gain. A. S.

In Albion, Dane Co., Wisconsin, on the 16th of Oct., Benjamin Maxson, in the 79th year of his age. This much-afflicted man, who was deaf and dumb from his birth, was born in Rhode Island in 1770, and removed to Berlin, N. Y., in his youthful days, where he chose a companion who was also deprived of the senses of hearing and speaking. They had a family of eight interesting children. In 1812, when the people of God in Berlin were enjoying a refreshing from the presence of the Lord, he also sought a place among the disciples of Christ. A brother of his, who doubted the spirit-work of religion, objected, saying that he knew nothing of the nature of such profession, and that some one must have influenced him to be baptized. But, at the suggestion of the church, they held a short conversation together, in which the brother inquired who had told him to be baptized, when he lifted his face toward heaven, making signs that God had impressed it upon his mind. The unbelieving brother at once withdrew his objections, and gave vent to his convictions with a flow of tears. He was one of the pioneers in settling Allegany County, N. Y. Four years ago he removed to Wisconsin with his oldest son. For the last year and a half he was entirely blind. O. P. H.

On the 12th of Oct., Nathan Hull, aged 1 year, 9 months, and 12 days.

Proclamation,

By Hamilton Fish, Governor of the State of N. York

A sense of gratitude to Almighty God for his numerous manifestations of goodness during the past year, calls for a public expression of thanks from a People who have experienced the full measure of blessings which have been extended to us.

Peace and quiet have reigned throughout our land. The labors of the husbandman have been rewarded in the return of the fruits of the earth. Industry has pursued its accustomed walks in all its varied employments, and its votaries have enjoyed honest and well earned rewards. Civil and religious liberty continue to be vouchsafed to all within our borders—and the blessings of the Gospel are extended to all who desire to enjoy its comforts and its consolations. A few weeks since, the whole Nation, in humble dependence, united in earnest prayer to Almighty God to withdraw the grievous pestilence which was ravaging the land; that visitation has passed, and the blessing of public health is restored.

It becomes a grateful and Christian people to acknowledge these mercies, and to render thanks to their bountiful Giver.

I do therefore designate Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November, instant, and do recommend its observance by the People of this State, as a day of Public Thanksgiving to Almighty God.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto signed my name and affixed the Privy Seal of the State, at the [L. S.] City of Albany, this first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine.

HAMILTON FISH.

By order of the Governor:
Robert H. Morris, Private Secretary.

New York State Agricultural Society.

The Annual Meeting of the New York State Agricultural Society is to be held at Albany on the third Wednesday of January. In addition to the awarding of premiums on essays, farms, grain and root crops, butter and cheese, an exhibition of winter fruits will be had at the Agricultural Rooms. It is desired that there should be an extensive competition for the premiums of the Society at the Annual Meeting, as well as a large attendance of practical farmers from every section of the State.

The exhibition of fruits at the last Annual Meeting was very superior, and it is hoped that an equally fine display will be made at this Annual Meeting. It is desired that there should be an exhibition from every County in the State, as well as from the adjoining States and British Provinces.

Persons who are willing to aid in this exhibition are requested to have their fruit, properly labeled with its name, and the name and residence of the exhibitor, and securely packed and directed to the Secretary, Agricultural Rooms, Albany, and sent at as early a day as practicable. It is also desired that the character of the soil, the exposure of the orchard, and the habits of the tree, as to its thrifty and bearing character, or otherwise, be given. B. P. JOHNSON, Secretary.

Notice.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of DeRuyter Institute will take place at the Institute on Tuesday, the 4th day of December next, at 6 o'clock P. M., at which time five Trustees are to be elected in the place of Ethan Stillman, Arza Coon, Matthew Wells, Jr., Edward Whitford, and Robert Langworthy, whose term of office expires on that day.

Immediately after the election, the Trustees will meet and organize for the year.

CHARLES H. MAXSON, Secretary.
DeRuyter, Oct. 28, 1849.

JEANNETTE AND JEANNOT.

The following little song is all the rage in Paris. The words are by Charles Jeffreys.

You are going far away,
Far away from poor Jeannette ;
There is no one left to love me now,
And you, too, may forget ;
But my heart will be with you,
Wherever you may go.—
Can you look me in the face,
And say the same, Jeannot ?
When you wear the jacket red,
And the beautiful cockade,
Oh ! I fear you will forget
All the promises you made ;
With the gun upon your shoulder,
And the bay'net by your side,
You'll be taking some proud lady,
And be making her your bride.

Or, when glory leads the way,
You'll be madly rushing on,
Never thinking if they kill you,
That my happiness is gone ;
If you win the day, perhaps
A General you'll be,
Though I'm proud to think of that,
What will then become of me ?
Oh ! if I were Queen of France,
Or, still better, Pope of Rome,
I would have no fighting men abroad,
No weeping maids at home ;
All the world should be at peace—
Or, if Kings must show their might,
Why, let them who make the quarrels,
Be the only men to fight.

AARON BURR AND HIS DAUGHTER.

The history of every nation is fraught with romantic incidents. England has the story of her Alfred ; Scotland of her Wallace, her Bruce, her Mary, and her Charles Stuart ; Ireland her Fitzgerald ; France her Man with the Iron Mask, and Maria Antoinette ; Poland her Thaddeus, and Russia her Siberian Exiles. But we very much doubt whether any exceeds in interest the touching story of Aaron Burr, and his highly accomplished and beautiful daughter Theodosia. The rise and fall of Burr in the affections of his countrymen, are subjects of deep historical interest. At one time we see him carried, on the wave of popular favor, to such giddy heights, that the Presidency itself seemed almost within his grasp, which he only missed to become the second officer in the new Republic. He became Vice President of the United States. How rapid his rise ! and then his fall, how sudden, how complete ! In consequence of his duel with Hamilton, he became a fugitive from justice, is indicted for murder by the Grand Jury of New Jersey, flies to the South, lives for a few months in obscurity, until the meeting of Congress, when he comes forth and again takes the chair as President of the Senate. After the term expires, he goes to the West, becomes the leading spirit in a scheme of ambition to invade Mexico, (very few will now believe that he sought a dismemberment of the Union,) is brought back a prisoner of State to Richmond, charged with high treason, is tried and acquitted, is forced to leave his native land and go to Europe. In England he is suspected, and retires to France, where he lives in reduced circumstances, at times not being able to procure a meal of victuals.

After an absence of several years, he finds means to return home. He lands in Boston without a cent in his pocket, an object of distrust to all. Burr had heard no tidings of his daughter since his departure from home. He was anxious to hear from her, her husband, and her boy, an only child, in whom his whole soul seemed bound up. The first news he heard was, that his grandchild died while he was an outcast in foreign lands, which stroke of Providence he felt keenly, for he dearly loved the boy. Theodosia, the daughter of Burr, was the wife of Governor Allston, of South Carolina. She was married young, and while her father was near the zenith of his fame. She was beautiful and accomplished, a lady of the finest feelings, an elegant writer, a devoted wife, a fond mother, and a most dutiful and loving daughter, who clung with redoubled affection to the fortunes of her father, as the cloud of adversity gathered around him, and he was deserted by the friends whom he formerly cherished. The first duty Burr performed after his arrival here, was to acquaint Mrs. Allston of his return. She immediately wrote back to him that she was coming to see him, and would meet him in a few weeks in New York. This letter was couched in the most affectionate terms, and is another evidence of the purity and power of woman's love.

In the expectation of seeing his daughter in a few days, Burr received much pleasure. She had become his all on earth. Wife, grandchild, friends, all were gone ; his daughter alone remained to cheer and solace the evening of his life, and welcome him back from his exile. Days passed on—then weeks —weeks were lengthened into months, yet naught was heard of Mrs. Allston. Burr grew impatient, and began to think she too had left him, so apt is misfortune to doubt the sincerity of friendship. At length he received a letter from Mr. Allston, inquiring if his wife had arrived safe, and stating that she had sailed from Charleston some weeks previous, in a vessel chartered by him on purpose to convey her to New York. Not receiving any tidings of her arrival, he was anxious to learn the cause of her silence ?

What had occurred to delay the vessel ? why had it not arrived ? These were questions which Burr could ask himself, but no one could answer.

The sequel soon was told. The vessel never arrived. It undoubtedly foundered at sea, and all on board perished. No tidings have ever been heard respecting the vessel, the crew, or the daughter of Aaron Burr ; all were lost.

This last sad bereavement was only required to fill Burr's cup of sorrow. "The last link was broken," which bound him to life. The uncertainty of her fate but added to the poignancy of his grief. Hope, the last refuge of the afflicted, became extinct, when years had rolled on, and yet no tidings of the loved and lost one were gleaned.

Burr lived in New York until the year 1836, we believe, when he died. The last years of his life were passed in comparative obscurity. Some few old friends, who had never deserted him, were his companions ; they closed his eyes in death, and followed his body to the grave, where it will rest till the trump of the Almighty shall call it into judgment.

Such is a brief sketch of the latter part of the strange and eventful history of Aaron Burr. None of the family now live ; it has become extinct ; and his name but lives in the history of his country, and in the remembrance of those who knew him.

TERRIBLE SUFFERINGS OF GOLD-SEEKERS.

The following letter, says the editor of the N. Y. Tribune, written by a gentleman long a resident of this city, but now in California, may be relied upon as a truthful statement, as the writer is well and favorably known to a large portion of our most thorough-going business men.

WOOD MINES, about 300 miles from San Francisco, July 30, 1849.

I am at last in the gold region, and will attempt a description of my tedious journey here. We arrived at Stockton after a fair passage, remained there a few days, and then started for this place. In coming here we crossed an arid plain of 32 miles—no vegetation, no shade, no water, except what we carried with us, and one of the hottest days I ever experienced ; after taking on each of our backs some 60 or 70 pounds, and filling a little keg with water, some 15 of us started in company. The first day we made about 13 miles and then laid down to rest our exhausted frames on the ground, with but a single blanket each for covering. The second day we traveled but 5 miles in the morning and 5 or 6 in the evening. This day a man by the name of Hunt, from Massachussetts, gave out and could go no further. As he was out of water, I let him wet his lips with mine, and some others did the same, but all we could do to revive him proved unavailing. He was determined to die, and we to save our own lives were obliged to leave him, as our stock of water was getting very short. We had some 12 or 15 miles to travel before we came to a river. I never shall forget the scene of leaving that poor man to die on the barren plain ; but that was nothing to what followed. The next day our water was reduced to a few drops. At 11 o'clock the sun was pouring down with unheard-of intensity, and not a breath of air stirring, when another very fine young man from New Hampshire, whom I had formed quite an attachment for on our short acquaintance, and when we were within 7 or 8 miles of the river, as near as we could judge, wilted right down under the sun and could go no further. All was done that could be done to arouse him to action, but without effect ; I gave the poor fellow a few drops of water, and such a scene as presented itself when we were about to leave him I hope never to witness again. He drew me down to the ground, and kissing me said, "O! God! can you leave me here to die alone ?" I told him to keep up courage, that we would go to the river, where there was a tent, and that we would rig up something to carry him on, and would be back as soon as possible ; so we bid him good by and started. Before we reached the river I felt myself as if I must surely fail, but I knew if I gave up at all it was to die, and when such thoughts at halting came over me I would arise as from a sound sleep. I never experienced such feelings. I think death from heat or exhaustion would be an easy one. Before we got to the river two more dropped, but were obliged to press forward toward the river in order to save their own lives. We at last came in sight of the long-looked-for river, and such feeling as we experienced I will not attempt to portray.

After replenishing a little we procured three mules and went back for our friends. I was in hopes to find the one who dropped first alive, but when I arrived and jumped off the mule I found a handkerchief over his face ; I raised it ; he lay as though asleep with his hands crossed on his breast ; but he was quite dead. We put him on a mule, and one of the other two was so weak that he could not sit alone, and so we trudged back to the tent, found an Indian blanket, sewed him up in it, and buried him. I staid at the river two days to recruit, then came on to this place. There is one other route to cross this plain, where there is water in one place, but we got on the wrong road.

THE ARAB AND HIS BARB.

It is not always that the Arab is ready to part with his horse, if a good beast, whatever price may be offered ; though money among the degraded people of Morocco will work miracles. A circumstance occurred to me about four years ago, when accompanying poor John Davidson some few days' journey into the interior.

As we were proceeding between Menedeca and Rabbat, we were joined by a troop of mounted Arabs, one of whom was riding a mottled grey, the handsomest barb I ever saw.

Riding up to the man, I entered into conversation with him ; and having put him in good humor by praising his steed, I told him I would make him rich if he would sell me the mottled grey.

"What is your price ?" said the Arab.

I offered a hundred and fifty mitzakel, about twenty pounds sterling ; a large sum in the interior.

"It is a good price," said the Arab, "but look," said he—and he brought his horse on the other side of me—"look at this side of him ; you must offer more."

"Well, come," I said, "you are a poor man, and fond of your horse ; we won't dispute about the matter ; so give me your hand. What say you ? Two hundred ?"

"That is a large price, truly," said the Arab, his eyes glistening ; and I thought the horse was mine. But my eagerness, I suppose, had been too apparent ; so the Arab thought I might go still farther ; and shaking the bridle, off he went at full speed. The mottled grey turned his tail in the air, and vanished to a speck in no time. I turned to speak to Davidson, and the next moment the Arab was at my side ; and, patting the neck of his grey, he said, "Look at him—see—not a hair is turned ! What will you give me now ?"

Davidson prompted me to offer even four hundred ducats rather than let the animal go. Again I began bargaining, and offered three hundred. On this the Arab gave me his hand, and, thanking me, said : "Christian, I can now boast of the price you have offered ; but it is in vain to tempt me, for I would not sell my horse for all the gold you or any other man possess." Having said this, he joined his companions.

Calling the kaid or chief of our escort, I asked him if he knew the rider of the grey ; adding, that I supposed he must be rich, as he refused so large a sum. The kaid said, "All I know is, that he is a great fool ; for he possesses nothing in the world but that horse, which he bought when a colt, selling his tent, flocks, and even his wife, to buy it."

JENNY LIND.

The following is vouched for as true by the London Athenæum :—

During the visit of this child of song to Bath, she happened to be walking with a friend, in front of some alms-houses, into one of which she entered and sat down for a moment, ostensibly to rest herself, but in reality to find some excuse for doing an act of charity to the old woman who lived in it and whom she had seen feeble and tottering at the door. The old woman, like the rest of her neighbors, was full of the Swedish Nightingale, whom she had heard was just then in Bath, entertaining with her voice all those who were so happy and fortunate as to be able to go to the theatre.

"For myself," said the old woman, "I have lived a long time in the world, and desire nothing before I die but to hear Jenny Lind."

"And would it make you happy ?" inquired her visitor.

"Ay, that it would," answered the old woman, "but such folks as I can't go to the play-house, and so I shall never hear her."

"Don't be so sure of that," said the good-natured Jenny, "sit down, my friend, and listen," and forthwith she sang, with all her richest and most glorious powers, one of the finest songs she ever knew. The old woman was beside herself with delight, when, after concluding her song, her kind visitor observed,

"Now you have heard Jenny Lind."

If she had given the woman a hundred pounds she could not have afforded her half so much pleasure. It was an act of noble charity, of the tenderest and most delicate kind. Money it would have been easy for her to give, and money she no doubt did give ; but to sit down in an alms-house, and there to call up the enchantments of her voice, for the amusement of an obscure and poor old woman, was a touching proof of goodness of heart, which nothing we have heard of Jenny Lind surpasses.

A PRINTER'S BOY.

Mr. Buckingham, in his 22d number of the 'Croaker,' published in the Boston Courier, briefly notices the hands in the printing office in which he was first employed in Boston, and speaks of the youngest apprentice as follows :—

The third and last apprentice has always floated on the flood tide of prosperity, a tide which yet "knows no retiring ebb." His duty then was (like all youngest apprentices,) to make the fires, sweep the office, pick up the types that were dropped on the floor, distribute pi and tread the pelts. Having passed through this state of tribulation, and finished his time of service, he began business as printer in State street, at the corner of Flag Alley—a locality which is now dignified with the name of Exchange Avenue, where he and his partner published a weekly literary journal, entitled The Emerald.

He removed to Charlestown, where he published a well-known monthly religious magazine, called Panoplist. Returning after some years to Boston, he pursued the business of printing and publishing on a more extended scale, and to that business added the very natural one of a bookseller. His industry was untiring, his friends wealthy and willing to aid—his publications popular with a large and zealous religious party, and his profits sure and rapidly increasing. He could not be otherwise than rich ; and he retired from active business many years ago, to enjoy the fruits of his enterprise and perseverance. But the public required his services. He represented Boston several times in the General Court, has been Mayor of the city, Lieut. Governor, and for the greater part of one year, acting Governor of the Commonwealth.

He has twice visited Europe, and spent some years in London, Paris and Rome. His mansion is one of the most delightful situations in the city, and here he lives in an enviable state of ease, affluence and independence. What a contrast is exhibited in the early and present condition of this gentleman ! And what a contrast between his condition and that of most of those who have been his cotemporaries from boyhood to grey-headed old age ! Well ! his wealth and honors have been honestly and honorably acquired. May he too, live long, unmolested by the "moth and rust" which corrupt earthly treasures, and at the close find all the pages of his life approvingly registered.

It is hardly necessary to say that the person referred to is Lieut. Gov. ARMSTRONG.

HARDSHIPS OF GOLD HUNTING.—Dr. M. R. Tewksbury having personally seen the Elephant, writes a description of the peculiar kind which exists in California that is by no means flattering. We copy the best paragraphs :—

"In relation to myself, I have no horribles to relate, except that on the best fare I shrunk fifty pounds in my personal corporation. I instance this as a specimen of the general result of the laws of the circumstances ; and nature dealt more kindly with me than with a vast majority of my unfortunate associates. To an experienced Californian, there is nothing more foreign from his thoughts than the idea of getting rich by digging gold. I do not exceed the bounds of sober truth, when I estimate that nine-tenths of the honest laborers who go there, moderate their aspirations for gain, to the simple point of gaining enough to get them back to their own country.

"The captain of the vessel in which I sailed from San Francisco, told me that nearly all of his passengers were begging applicants for the privilege of working their passage to Panama. A man, of whom it was reported in the New York papers that he had returned with twenty thousand dollars worth of gold as the reward of his enterprise, to my knowledge had to borrow money to meet his current expenses home."

POPULATION OF LONDON.—The population of London is nearly three millions. The number of deaths, in a recent week, was 3,183, or 454 a day, 19 in an hour, or one every three minutes. If, says a curious calculator, "this immense population were placed in a line, at a distance of 14 yards apart, they would reach to the extent of 25 thousand miles, or more than the circumference of the globe ; so that, if persons died at the above rate, viz : one every three minutes, and allowing one thousand births every week, it would then be twenty-six years before all the people in London were extinct."

WEALTH OF LITERARY MEN IN CAMBRIDGE.—The Albany Express, referring to the statement of taxes paid by several of the literary gentlemen of Cambridge, says :—

To prevent any evil consequences that might ensue from its exciting undue hopes in the pecuniary line, in the breast of any young aspirant to literary fame, we will state that all the gentlemen above named married fortunes, in expectancy or possession. Mr. Longfellow married a daughter of Nathan Appleton, the millionaire ; Mr. Lowell a daughter of Abijah White, of Watertown, a man of wealth ; Mr. Everett a daughter of Peter C. Brooks, the richest man in New England ; Mr. Norton a daughter of Samuel Eliot, a merchant prince, who left a million and a half ; Mr. Palfrey a Miss Hammond, of Boston, with a handsome property ; and Mr. Felton has been equally fortunate in his matrimonial connection.

AMERICAN BUTTER.—We cut the following paragraph from the Scientific American. The subject is one worthy of the closest attention :—

The Genesee Farmer, speaking of American butter in England, says that by foreign accounts it is not so well packed or made as the Irish or Dutch, and a great quantity of it has to be sold for grease, as unfit for use. We believe that the evil does not lie so much in the packing as in the way of collecting the cream. To make good butter, the milk should never be turned when the cream is taken off. Let care be exercised in this respect, and then we will always have sweet butter from sweet cream. Or, let the milk be churned without skimming—the way in which the best butter is produced. It would be well to pack the butter firkins inside of larger firkins, filled between with salt.

INGENIOUS SWINDLING.—A Russian officer (many of whom are extremely poor,) went into a hatter's in Petersburg, followed by a servant in livery. After trying several hats on, he at last fixed on one which he put on his head ; he then asked the servant, who was safely holding the old one, how he looked in that hat ? "Why, master," said he, "you look like a money." The man, seeing his master's feigned anger beginning to rise, made the best of his way to the door, the officer following close, but taking care not to get to him ; the master of the shop, supposing the officer followed to give his servant a drubbing for his insolence, was very much amused, and did not discover his mistake until the man of war and his servant were out of reach. He then had to mourn the loss of a hat, worth in Petersburgh about £3.

YANKEES IN RUSSIA.—The Tribune says that Major T. S. Brown, Chief Engineer of the N. Y. and Erie Railroad, has made an engagement with the Czar of Russia to take the place of the late Major Whistler in the superintendence of the great railroad from St. Petersburgh to Moscow. Major Brown is to receive $12,000 a year, with some perquisites which will swell his salary to $15,000, and the engagement is to be continued for five years. He will take his departure on or about the 1st of next month. The grading of the whole line of railroad (nearly 500 miles) is completed, but only about 18 miles of rails have been laid. All the necessary iron is on the road, and so are the locomotives and cars.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.—A large and highly respectable meeting, presided over by the Lord Mayor, took place at the Egyptian Hall, London, on the 17th ultimo, relative to the proposed exhibition of industry of all nations in that city during the ensuing year. The best feeling was evinced towards the plan of the projectors, and it was proposed to raise by subscription the sum of £20,000 to distribute in premiums. All nations are invited, without distinction or preference, and the promoters of the design feel no misgiving of the possibility of raising £100,000, or more, for the general expenses of the exhibition.

A NOVEL CASE.—In Fairfield District, (S. C.) recently, a man named Tidwell and an accomplice named Lawhon were tried and convicted of abducting and marrying a young girl of 13 years of age. The defendant, Tidwell, is a shoemaker, and had been employed as such in the family of the prosecutor, and it was supposed by some, who heard the evidence, that some provocation or offense given by Mr. Crankfield, the prosecutor and father of the young girl, to one or both of the defendants, was the motive of the abduction. The married Miss is to remain in charge of her father until the age of 16, as it appears there is a statute of force in this State against young girls taking upon themselves the duties attendant on the marriage state until they arrive at that age.

TO TAKE A SPECK FROM THE EYE.—We lately saw a very clever and safe mode of extracting any speck of dirt or dust from the eye, when it cannot be easily removed by the hand. It consists in licking it out with the tongue. The person affected lays his head down, with his face uppermost, and the operator, desiring that the eye shall be kept open, comes across it gently with the tongue, so as effectually to wipe it clear of the extraneous body. This we find has been a common practice among some classes of stone cutters, on getting what is called a fire in the eye ; and we doubt if the whole of the resources of the medical art could afford a better remedy.

TO PRESERVE CLOTHES.—As clothes, when laid up for a time, acquire an unpleasant odor which requires considerable exposure to the atmosphere to remove, it can be prevented by laying lumps of recent-made charcoal between the folds of garments ; and even when the odor is already fixed, the charcoal will absorb it.

LOWELL.—A quarter of a century ago Lowell was not known. It was then almost uninhabited. Now it contains 35,000 inhabitants, 47 cotton and woollen mills, 11½ millions of incorporated capital, 260,000 spindles and 8,000 looms. There are from 10 to 15,000 girls employed in the mills. On every side new buildings are being erected, and improvements are the order of the day.

The improvement of Oneida River, so far as to pass boats from the Oswego Canal at Three River Point to Oneida Lake, a distance of 18 miles, is, we understand, about completed. This improvement opens a new channel of canal-boat navigation, from the Oswego Canal at Three River Point to the Erie Canal near New London, and of steamboat navigation from the former point to within three or four miles of the Erie Canal, through the Oneida Lake, making altogether a distance of steam navigation of about 50 miles.

Late Little Rock (Ark.) papers announce the discovery of some quarries of superior Slate in the Choctaw country, specimens of which have been placed on exhibition. The locality is on the borders of the Maintain Rock River, seven miles above Eagle Town, in two hills about a hundred feet high, which, it is said, are composed wholly of Slate. They are separated by a small stream, furnishing abundance of water clear as crystal, flowing over the benches of Slate.

The Cincinnati Price Current publishes a tabular statement of the number and value of hogs and beef cattle in 59 counties in Ohio, as returned for taxation by the township assessors, and equalized by the County Boards for the years 1848 and 1849. The aggregate of hogs for 1848 is 1,336,367, valued at $1,690,308 ; and for 1849, 1,410,737, valued at $1,876,622 ; and of beef cattle for 1848, 837,584 ; valued at $6,063,284 ; and for 1849, 688,248, valued at $6,658,269.

The American Agriculturist says : "A gentleman within our knowledge has a small orchard on the Hudson river, of less than seven acres, which produces from $500 to $750 worth of apples annually. This is not one year of plenty, and another or two of famine, but is a regular, steady average yield. All this is secured by the simplest process, viz., good management."

It is now admitted that in France, there is as much intemperance—that there is as large a supply of tippling houses, and that they are as well patronized, as in other European countries. A French writer says, that there are in Paris seventeen thousand habitual drunkards. So much for the temperance of wine countries.

Fruit trees may be transplanted successfully, any time from the 1st of October until the ground is frozen. The trees should be well secured, and a few inches of manure or litter spread around the roots.

The Newburgh Excelsior says that Miss Bremer is now in that village, on a visit to the family of A. J. Downing, Esq. Miss Bremer is plain looking, short in stature, with fair complexion, light hair, and blue eyes. There is a great deal of goodness in her countenance, but not much passion.

Captain Bailey, of Newburyport, it is said, paid $600 for a passage in the last steamer from New York for San Francisco. He has gone out with letters of credit, to purchase some of the ships which are now lying deserted in the harbor of San Francisco.

On the 18th inst. the corner stone of the Mobile Cotton Factory was laid at Mobile. Machinery for 5,000 spindles and 186 looms, with two steam engines of 50 horse power, have been ordered.

The German Chemist, Liebig, is said to be coming to this country. The political disturbances in Europe interfere with his pursuits, and so he has determined to visit America. The hope of benefiting his health is an additional inducement.

The Pacific Railroad, in its extent of 2000 miles, would require, every day, 1600 cords of wood and 8000 tons of water. There are a few hundred miles of plains to be passed over, on which there is neither wood nor water.

Fishkill, on the Hudson river, is the largest township in New York State. It contains over 60,000 acres of land, 50,000 of which are under cultivation, and has a population of 10,000.

By six qualities may a fool be known—anger without cause, speech without profit, changes without object, inquiry without motive, putting trust in a stranger, and wanting capacity to discriminate between a friend and a foe.

A little boy, seeing a drunken man prostrate before the door of a groggery, opened the door, and putting in his head, said to the proprietor, "See here, neighbor, your sign has fallen down."

That every day has its pains and sorrows is universally experienced, and almost universally confessed : but let us not attend only to mournful truths ; if we look impartially about us, we shall find that every day has likewise its pleasures and its joys.

A poet asked a gentleman what he thought of his last production—"An Ode to sleep." —The latter replied, "You have done so much justice to the subject that it is impossible to read it without feeling its whole weight."

How many in hot pursuit have hasted to the goal of wealth, but have lost, as they ran, those apples of gold—the mind, and the power to enjoy it.

To be a man's true friend, it is not necessary to agree with him always. "Better be a nettle in his side," says Emerson, "than be merely his echo."

The road ambition travels is too narrow for friendship, too crooked for love, too rugged for honesty, too dark for science.

According to the late census of South Carolina, the white inhabitants now number 280,385, being a gain in ten years of 23,269.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific ; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00 ; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00 ; Oil Painting, $5 00 ; Chemical Experiments, $1 00 ; Writing, including Stationery, 50c. ; Tuition on Piano, $8 00 ; Use of Instrument, $2 00 ; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage ! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION.

Farther Extracts from Mr. Carpenter's Letter.

We have occasionally proofs that we are in a heathen land, and recently one which came pretty near home. On the 10th of February my teacher was apprehended and put in custody by the city magistrate upon the charge of being in debt to a certain house-builder. The history of the affair is briefly this: While Chung, my teacher, was acting as teacher to Mr. McDonald, an English merchant, he introduced this house-builder to McDonald, who engaged him to build a house. But soon the builder showed himself to be unworthy of the trust committed to him, and before the house was completed he was dismissed, and a part of the original price withheld in consequence of non-fulfillment of the contract. Some months passed; Chung being now in my employ, the builder, finding that he could get no more from McDonald, came upon Chung in the night with a band of ruffians, demanding money. As he refused to recognize the claim, they beat him severely, stripping from him most of his clothing. They used him so hard that he felt himself obliged to promise money to rid himself from them, and save his life. He made his complaint to the magistrate, and had the carpenter apprehended. But he was soon liberated, and using the note extorted from the teacher, got him apprehended upon the charge of being in debt. He immediately applied to me for help. I went and obtained McDonald's testimony that the payments were always made to the carpenter himself instead of Chung, presented this to Mr. Griswold, the American Consul, and asked him to interfere. He at first simply inquired of the magistrate why my teacher was detained in custody. When he received the reply of the magistrate, he immediately made a demand for the liberation of the teacher. He was accordingly liberated forthwith. But since his liberation he has been and is now sick, confined to his bed. Whether he was poisoned by being confined in such a filthy place, or whether his disease is something else, I can not tell. He relies upon a native physician to heal him. In thus availing myself of the power of our Consul in a case so plain, did I do right? I felt myself rather obligated to defend the teacher in this way, for three reason: 1st. According to the treaty I had a right to do it as much as I should my cook who lives in the house with me. 2d. It was his only hope of a speedy liberation. 3d. When he was apprehended his testimony in self-defense was not admitted on the ground that he was in the employ of a foreigner. This was prima facie evidence of his guilt.

The winter has been rather mild; no snow has made its appearacce. It frequently freezes a very little during the night, which is melted as soon as the sun makes his appearance. On the 10th of February we saw dandelions in bloom; on the 15th, plum trees were in blossom. And now, March 7th, peach blossoms are just beginning to unfold themselves. The wheat fields look beautifully. In some, the grain is twelve inches high, thich and flourishing. The rich soil about here is deep. I know not whether it is ten, or twenty, or fifty feet deep. Were the land freed from the mounds, and brick tombs, and naked coffins, which are almost everywhere in the way, it would be by far the best agricultural country I have yet seen. But, as it is, a great amount of produce is raised from it.

The Rev. Mr. Edkins, belonging to the London Society, has taken up his residence temporarily at the hills, about 30 miles west from this place. And, what is more, he occupies rooms in an idol temple. This I suppose is for the purpose of acquiring the language more rapidly, as it will oblige him to use the Chinese in all his intercourse. The British Consul has made some arrangement with the Chinese authorities here which allows British subjects free access to the hills. It is a pleasant trip in good weather. They go all the way by water in a small canal. The tide carries them a part of the way.

Mr. Shuck has established a school in a little village about fourteen miles south-east from Shanghai, where also he goes on Sundays to preach, or sends some one. The school is taught by a native, but supplied in part with Christian books, and his wages are paid in whole or in part. The little hamlets are thick in that vicinity, so that a gong could be heard by thousands. It would be interesting, healthful, and perhaps useful, if we could make excursions into the country.

Rev. Mr. Muirhead, of the London Society, has a regular preaching place about fourteen miles from the city, in another direction; he preaches in an idol temple. I know not how large his congregations are. But these things show what may be done even now. Who knows that such things will not be done more frequently hereafter? Dr. Medhurst and others have been in the habit of making excursions for distributing tracts and talking to the people.

Rev. Mr. Farmer, who early after his arrival at this place, as you know, openly avowed his intention to oppose us in every way he could, declaring that we were not missionaries, and he could not treat us as such, has just returned from Ningpo, whither he had taken a trip for his health. His health is not improved, and to-morrow he is expected to sail for his native home. Soon after his arrival here he expressed to Bro. W. that he had come to settle here permanently, putting considerable emphasis on the last word. How easy it is to be disappointed. Bishop Boone's health remains feeble, but I think he is resolved to die in the field.

In visiting my teacher yesterday, I expressed a gratification that he had read through the gospel of Matthew, and a desire to know whether, if he should be called away, he could rely upon the Lord Jesus Christ to save him. He expressed a conviction that Jesus was able to save the souls of men; but did not say that he was yet prepared to cast himself upon his mercy. I addressed a few words to his relatives who were present, upon the cause of disease and death which hurries men by the thousand to the grave, and spake to them of the resurrection and eternal judgment. Solemnity appeared to rest upon their minds. These relatives consisted of his mother, sisters, and cousins. I mention it as an instance and proof that foreigners may sometimes have access to the families of the natives. We have frequently visited the natives, but are always placed in the reception room, and are not expected to go farther, excepting our wives, who are often invited to visit the more retired apartments. But in this case we were invited to go up stairs and through several rooms to the sleeping apartment of the teacher.

March 10—Sabbath eve. A good number at the meeting. Preached from Matt. 4: 12—16. Morning service also well attended. The number of attendants rather increasing. In walking out into the country we fell in company with a man who resides some miles from the city, and was walking homeward, to whom we presented as much of gospel truth as our time would allow. He seemed interested, and when we parted he gave us a hearty good-bye. This is a sample of what often occurs. It is a sort of sowing broadcast. May God grant a harvest in due season.

Yesterday we received the sad intelligence that Rev. Mr. Yates, of the Southern Baptist Board, is losing his eye-sight, and that it is in consequence of an affection of the optic nerve. His wife has been sick a long time, and her disease is probably incurable. That Mission seems to be deeply afflicted. Dr. and Mrs. James were drowned before reaching their field of labor. Rev. Mr. Tobey started for home in consequence of the ill health of his wife. They have stopped, however, at Hong Kong. Now Mr. Yates is disabled, and Mr. Shuck suffers much from a disease which is wont to prostrate foreigners. Surely, it becomes us to walk softly before God. The Mission at Amoy has also recently lost two of its most valuable members, Rev. John Lloyd and Rev. W. J. Pohlman.

March 12. It is with feelings of sorrow that I record the loss we have sustained. Last evening our teacher was called to pass through the valley of the shadow of death. We feel that we have lost a friend. As soon as his spirit had taken its exit, his mother and wife's mother came to us for sympathy and aid. Bro. W. and I immediately repaired to the house. We had often heard the funeral wail of relatives upon the decease of friends, but none had sounded in our ears like this. Soon after we entered the room the lamentation was hushed for the time being. The attention of the relatives was fixed, even at this solemn moment, upon obtaining redress for the injuries inflicted upon the person of the deceased by the carpenter. I put them off at first, telling them that death was an important event, which we ought to consider well, and again spoke to them of the resurrection of the dead. To-day Mrs. C. and I went together. Mrs. C. entered the room a little while before me. The wife, mother, mother-in-law, and one or two sisters of the deceased, gave free scope to their feelings in loud lamentations, which were continued for some time after I entered the room. We remembered the injunction of the inspired Apostle, with which in this instance it was not difficult to comply, "Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep."

Chung-seen-sang had been in my employ about nine months. He was a man of fine talents. He was active and faithful in the performance of his duties—not an eye servant. He always treated me with respect, and we had contracted a mutual friendship of a very agreeable character. His conversational powers were extraordinary, and he always took pleasure in interesting us in this way. From the grosser superstitions and idolatrous practices of his countrymen, he seemed in a great measure free. While in health, and also on his dying bed, he pronounced the doctrine of Jesus to be excellent, and the day before he died he expressed his belief that Jesus was able to save the souls of men. Whether this was merely the testimony of a partially enlightened judgment, or whether he felt the force of the truth which he uttered, can not be known till the judgment of the great day. His relatives say that a little before he died he requested them to put his little son under my instruction when he shall have acquired a sufficient age. He is now about two years old. The little fellow is the image of his father, and if his mother shall be willing to part with him, and my life should be spared, I should be disposed, I think, to take him. We could not take him now unless we should hire some one to take care of him. Perhaps in two or three years we might do it without an extra hand.

March 15. Yesterday I called again to see the afflicted family of our late teacher. We now have their warm friendship. May we have wisdom and grace to improve this advantage for their good. Chung's father has been dead several years. His wife, mother, wife's mother, and several sisters, some of them married, together with domestics, all amounting to about thirty souls, live in the same house. There was a willingness expressed that the wishes of the dying father should be carried out, and that the child should be placed with us to be instructed, when he shall have attained a suitable age. The age of seven was talked of. Perhaps, however, they may be willing to part with him sooner if it should appear to be desirable. The mother distinctly manifested a willingness to comply with the wishes of her deceased husband. When the time shall arrive, however, she may feel differently. I told them that I would write to my friends in America to see if they would furnish me with the means to feed and clothe as well as instruct the child. The little fellow has the same peculiar expression of countenance which his father possessed, an expression which indicates no ordinary degree of intelligence. Such a child would afford better promise than the majority of children. Perhaps before it will be time for me to take him, some one of our friends in loved America will be found who will delight to furnish means to carry forward this project. Twenty-five dollars a year would be sufficient, I think. If I should undertake to train up this child in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, I should insist upon having him live with us.

REV. MR. NOEL—INTERESTING INCIDENT.

Pesident Mahan, of Oberlin, on his recent journey to the Paris Peace Convention, whilst sojourning in London, had a personal interview with this celebrated man, at his own house. In one of his letters in a late number of the Oberlin Evangelist, he relates the circumstances of the interview, as follows:—

"Since my sojourn in this city, I have obtained what I most earnestly desired—a personal interview with the Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel, whose recent secession from the Church of England, together with his book published in connection with that event, has excited so much interest in England and America. I accompanied Dr. Burns to his (Mr. Noel's) residence, a few miles out of the city, on Friday, the 11th instant, (August.) The previous evening he had received the ordinance of baptism by immersion in one of the Baptist Chapels in this city. We called early in the evening in order to be sure of finding him at home. We accordingly had the privilege of uniting with him in his family devotions. He invited me to conduct the services. For obvious reasons, however, I requested him to perform the duty. No stranger could give utterance to the sentiments proper to a husband and father in the circumstances in which Mr. Noel then was. It was the first time in which he had met his family and household around the domestic altar, after sealing with the ordinance of baptism, in the only form now deemed by him truly scriptural, his new position before the world, as a Christian, and as a Christian minister. The scene was truly a solemn and impressive one. The portion of Scripture then read was a part of Matt. xvii., containing an account of Christ's transfiguration on the Mount. After commenting on the evidence there presented of the real glory and divine majesty of Christ, together with the truth of his divine mission, he observed that the visible appearance of Moses and Elias there demonstrated the doctrine of immortality, not merely as a theory but as a fact. The great question with us should be, not what our position among men, mortal like ourselves, may be, but what shall it be in that untried and changeless state into which we are all, ere long, to enter. To prepare for that state is the great mission of life. The prayer which followed was in harmony with the truths thus presented, and the circumstances of the husband and father at the time. The family of Mr. Noel, it should be remembered, belong to the nobility of England. His eight children, of course, were candidates for intermarriage with that nobility. But a few weeks previous, few families stood higher among the highest than his. His brother is a Peer of the realm, himself a Chaplain of the Queen, and, at the same time, one of the most popular and influential ministers of the Established Church. Into what a deep eclipse have the mere worldly prospects of that family been thrown by the act of secession and baptism of the father—an act by which he has descended from the high position which he formerly occupied, to an association with one of the 'least of all the tribes of Israel.' How important, then, for the father to turn their attention from the vail which thus obscured their visions of earthly glory, to behold brighter visions of immortality.

After a short season spent in the service of the Evangelical Alliance, Mr. Noel is to commence preaching in a large Chapel secured for him in London. His church is to be constituted on the most Christian principles: whilst the minister occupying the pulpit is to be Baptist, the church, with all its offices, privileges, and immunities, is to be equally open for all who give evidence that they are born of God. No other test of membership or standing is to be required. The church of brother Burns is constituted upon the same principle.

"I asked Mr. Noel how he felt in his new position. 'I feel,' he replied, 'like a bird out of its cage.' I remarked that his position as a Baptist would diminish the interest which sectarians in America, and elsewhere, now felt for him. 'Of that,' he replied, 'I am fully aware. My aim is not popularity, but truth.' It is well worth crossing the ocean to see such a man, and to witness the scene which we witnessed in his house."

CASE OF FATHER ACHILL.

The correspondent of the Times gives the following account of this famous man, who is now confined in a Roman dungeon, accused of murder, and of being a recusant priest. Some ten or fifteen years ago there lived in the town of Viterdo, about 37 miles from Rome, on the road to Florence, a young man and a beautiful girl, who were tenderly attached, and who desired to marry. The friends on both sides opposed the union, and after all hope was extinguished, and the impossibility of again meeting proved, a second edition of Abelard and Heloise actually took place; the lover became a priest and a monk, and the beloved retired into a nunnery and took the veil. I know not how convents and nunneries were managed in those days, but it would appear that the priest found means of visiting the nun, and that several interviews took place, which occasioned much scandal in the respective establishments and in the neighborhood. The bishop of the diocese interfered; orders were given which would separate for ever the imprudent pair; but a last meeting, in spite of every difficulty, was managed, and on the morning after the nun was discovered dead, evidently poisoned, in her cell, and the friar was not to be found, nor could any trace of him be procured. Whether the nun poisoned herself in despair, on being parted from her lover, or whether the friar administered to her the dose, is a question still legally undetermined; but the flight of the latter was considered to be evidence against him, and as he was not present to defend himself, the people of Viterbo imagined he was guilty, and so the matter was lost sight of and nearly forgotten. The friar went to the United States, after having visited Malta and Great Britain, and in the course of time abjured the Roman Catholic doctrine and embraced the Protestant faith. He became a member or agent of the Missionary Society, and when the late Repubic flourished at Rome, the Pere Achille returned to this part of the world, and with the zeal of a convert, labored in his vocation as a distributor of Bibles and an expounder of Protestant doctrines. He had full liberty of speech and action under M. Mazzini; but when the Republic expired beneath the fire of French artillery, things took another turn, and one of the first acts of the restored Government was the arrest of the missionary and his incarceration in the Church prison. A double accusation weighed against him—first the death of the nun at Viterbo; and secondly the ecclesiastical crime of being a recusant priest.

THOROUGH DISCIPLINE.

The British Banner, a London paper, gives the following account of a recent difficulty in the Episcopal congregation under the care of Rev. Dr. Tyng. From this statement, which is an extract of a letter from a correspondent in New York, it appears that some of the ministers of that communion are in favor of inflicting the penalties of discipline on the dead, in accordance with the usages of Rome! The writer says:—

"A highly respectable citizen and merchant, who had for thirty years, up to a recent date, been a communicant at St. George's Chapel, N. York, and was a member of many religious and benevolent associations, was offended at the conduct of his pastor, the well-known Dr. Tyng, a person of undoubted talent, and a recent well known traveler in your country. The difficulty arose about some secular concerns; and Mr. Woolley being a vestry-man, opposed the doctor's measures in ralation to the erection of a new and more elegant edifice, now one of the sights of our city. The controversy waxed warm. Mr. Woolley had recourse to the press, and the end of it was, Mr. Woolley was refused the communion, if not excommunicated. From the decision of his pastor, he appealed; but before the appeal was considered and acted on, he died. When his friends applied to a certain Episcopal clergyman to read the burial service over the corpse, he declined, on the plea that he could not or would not do so for an excommunicated person. The public feeling was shocked at this; and as soon as the circumstance became known, and that was immediately, Dr. Tyng himself requested permission to perform the service, as did two other clergymen of the Low Church. The party who gave offense, then endeavored to retrace his steps by some sort of an apology, and thus the matter stands for the present."

THE BURNING PRAIRIE.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

Some four years since, we met, at a meeting of the "Improvement Circle" of the Factory Girls of Lowell, the author of the following lines, who was presented to us as the author of a series of pleasant parables in the Lowell Offering, which, in our view, were something more and better than successful imitations of the German writers, in this agreeable department of literature. She has since left her loom, and is now, if we mistake not, a school teacher in the West. We thank her for her kindly remembrance of us, and commend her spirited lines to the notice of our readers. That they were written by a young woman whose life has been no long holiday of leisure, but one of toil and privation, does not indeed enhance their intrinsic merit, but it lends them an interest in the eyes of those who, like ourselves, long to see the cords of caste broken, and the poor niceties of aristocratic exclusiveness—irrational and unchristian every where, but additionally ridiculous in a country like ours—vanish before the true nobility of mind—the natural graces of a good heart and a useful life—the self-sustained dignity of a spirit superior to the folly of accounting labor degradation, and usefulness a calamity, and which cannot count as common and unclean the duties which God has sanctified. [National Era.

Evening throws her dusky mantle o'er the boundless, grassy sea;
Here and there, like ships at anchor, in the moonlight stands a tree;
While the stars that nightly travel o'er the highway of the skies,
Bend upon earth's weary pilgrims, still and clear, their earnest eyes.

Now the constellations brighten; like a stern and war-like lord,
Bright Orion leads the pageant—he of gleaming belt and sword.
In his wake glide forth the Pleiades; by the pole-star leaps the Bear;
Down the star-paved road, in silence, rides the Lady in her Chair.

But behold! an earthly glimmer rises 'neath the starry beam!
Far along the Prairie's border, how the ruddy fringes stream!
See the red flames darting forward, sparkling through the withered grass,
While the lurid smoke, up-rolling, stains the azure as they pass.

Who the distant blaze enkindled? Can it be some savage clan,
Flinging out the winged wild-fire to affright the pale-faced man?
Nay; for Mississippi's water speeds no sachem's light canoe,
And beside the dark Missouri are the Indians' wigwams few.

'Tis the farmer's mighty besom;—thus he sweeps the fertile plain;
Lays it bare unto the baptism of the softening vernal rain.
Where the billowy flame is rolling, shall a warmer sun behold
Verdant pastures richly laden—harvests tinged with wavy gold.

Brighter visions burst upon me; for the dear enchant-ress, Hope,
Bids me look into the future, through her magic tele-scope.
Lo! a glorious blaze ascending! purer, loftier doth it grow;
Every ridge and swell revealing, softened in the mel-low glow.

'Tis the central fire of Freedom, lighted on the nation's heart;
Cynosure of hapless millions, fadeless peace its rays impart.
Truth and love, their white wings waving, sit and fan it all day long;
And to meet its warmth and brightness, ever pours a grateful throng.

Let it blaze! The Pilgrim's watch-fire, kindled first on Plymouth Rock,
Must not die upon the Prairies, nor with fitful flicker-ings mock.
Every lowly cabin window shall reflect its steady light,
And beyond the red horizon it shall make the country bright.

Then the gazers of the nations, and the watchers of the skies,
Looking through the coming ages, shall behold, with joyful eyes,
In the fiery track of Freedom fall the mild baptismal rain,
And the ashes of old evil feed the Future's golden grain.

A BAD TEMPER DISCIPLINED.

Little Mary once struck her brother during my absence from the house. The stick in her hand had a sharp knot, which went clear through his cheek, making an ugly gash. The blood flowed in a stream; the boy screamed piteously, and Mary was exceedingly alarmed. She had no animosity against her little playmate; on the contrary, she loved him dearly; and when her mother, who was called to the room by his screams, came in, her little daughter had thrown her arms around his neck, and was joining her cries to his, while the red blood poured full in her face.

When the mother had made inquiries, she took the boy away to dress the wound,—and the girl went up stairs without a word, and crept under the bed. There she sat and sobbed for several hours. Her mother, discovering where she had gone, said not a word to her, believing that it was best to leave her for the present alone. Her own heart was much pained to hear her dear child's grief, but she was willing to let her suffer for a while, in hope that it might be made a lasting lesson to her.

I came in a little while before night, and learned how matters stood. It was a season to me of great interest and responsibility. Upon my own action here might depend the future conduct of this child. Her violent temper had been often checked by punishment, and she had been frequently enough told of its evil consequences. Now it had led her to a great crime; and if not at once restrained, my little daughter might grow up wicked and miserable.

I considered a while how I should act—and having humbly asked guidance of the Father of all, I took my seat in the room where the affair had happened, and took the knotty stick in my hand. Then I called out in a kind voice, "Sister, come here to pa." She was always an obedient girl, and she instantly crept out and came down to me. Never shall I forget the expression of her countenance, as she looked in my face. She had wept until her eyes were greatly inflamed, but they were dry, and in her face was a look of the most profound humility and grief that I ever saw. She walked slowly to my side, and bowed her head on my knees. I said—

"My daughter, some naughty person has hurt your little brother very much. His cheek is cut open, and I think there will always be a scar there as long as he lives. Will my daughter tell me who did it?" I heard a little sob, and then she whispered, "It was me." I continued—"If the stick had struck his eye, he would have been made blind." She commenced weeping. I said, "If it had struck his temple, it might have killed him." She gave a low scream, and said, "Oh, pa!" I continued, "Yes, the blow you struck would have killed your brother, if some one had not turned it aside. There was some one in the room, who saw how angry my daughter was, and when she struck the sharp knotty stick into her little brother's face, he turned it aside, and saved his life. Do you know who it was?" She looked up into my face with a look of almost happiness, and said, "It was God, pa." "Yes, (I continued,) no one but God could have done it. He has saved my boy's life; but how sorry he must be that any little girl can have so bad a heart as you have. God never can love the bad girl, in this world or in the next."

She wept now more bitterly than before. I took her hand and led her into the room where her brother lay asleep. His face was bound up, and it was very pale.

I asked her softly, "Is little brother alive yet?" She started as if smitten with a horrible thought, and uttered an ejaculation of grief. This awoke the boy, who, casting his eyes about and seeing Mary bathed in tears, reached out his arms and called her. It was electric, and hardened must have been the heart which could behold this sweet reconciliation without tears.

That night, as we bowed around the sacred altar of family service, tender hearts were ours; and the angels who watched to carry our offerings upward, saw the tear-drops glittering in the fire-light, and heard low sobs, as we united to ask the seal of God's approbation upon this reconciliation on earth.

TWILIGHT CONCERT OF PRAYER.

In Tolland county, Conn., there existed, some 25 years ago, an association of ladies who by their prayers and efforts, rendered efficient aid to the Rev. Mr. Nettleton's labors. This society also sent a Mr Patterson, who was accustomed to labor with Mr. N., to East Tennessee, whose labors there were greatly blessed.

Mr. Patterson proposed what was called the "twilight concert of prayer for the revival of religion." Most of the churches throughout all that country entered into an agreement to observe this twilight concert of prayer. Where the family could come together at that hour, they would then have their evening worship, and in that exercise, pray particularly for the revival of the cause of God, and the conversion of sinners. When it was not convenient to call the family together, each one, in his closet, or on his journey, or wherever he might be, alone would lift up his earnest prayers to God, for for the salvation of souls. Thus, over a wide land, from evening to evening, a vast volume of prayer for showers of divine mercy, went up to the throne of God.

We are not for neglecting the ordinary means of grace and supplying their place with what are termed extraordinary means; but if Christians could be stirred up to such a union in prayer all over our State or country, who would not expect the windows of heaven to be opened and a blessing too large to be received shed down.

NATURAL HISTORY AND IDOLATRY.—Dr. Wilson, of Bombay, one of the most accomplished scholars now in the missionary field, writes as follows relative to the bearing of natural history upon idolatry:—

"As there is only one species of rock known here, within a circle of some hundred miles, and that contains no organisms, numbers of the natives have come to me from the city and its neighborhood to see the fossils collected in other parts of India, the west of Asia, and Europe, which I have brought up for purposes of illustration. Some of the Brahmins have not had the courage to touch the remains which I have of the Mastodon, Dinotherium, and other extinct animals, under the belief that they are the veritable bones of the Rackshasas, or devil-giants, whom their Shasters feign to have disturbed the earth of old! When I entered into explanations, they not unfrequently themselves made applications of them hostile to the cosmogony of their own sacred books. In this matter, I endeavor to give them all the help which truth requires, directing them at the same time to the relations in which man, the head of God's works below, stands to the Great Creator. The study of no branch of science, we have long found, is so inimical to idolatry as that of natural history. To this branch of knowledge all missionary candidates should pay particular attention."

DENOMINATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.—The Christian Almanac for 1850, recently published by the American Tract Society, gives the following estimates of the different denominations in our country:—

"The regular Baptists are put at 667,750, and churches at 8,205; more than 250,000 likewise are embraced in Anti-Mission, Campbellites, Free-Will, &c. Methodist Episcopal, 629,670; South, 465,533; Protestant and others, 81,000. Presbyterian, Old School, 192,033; New School, 155,000; Congregational, 127,196; other Presbyterian sects, 140,000; Dutch Reformed, 32,840; German Reformed, 69,750; Protestant Episcopal, 67,550; Lutheran, 163,000; Roman Catholic, 1,231,300; Christian Connection, 325,000. Papists include every body belonging to them—men, women, and children, and most of the others only communicants."

True modesty blushes for every thing that is criminal. False modesty is ashamed of every thing unfashionable.

We have devoted more time, already, to the examination of Mr. Bennett's sermon, than we intended to do. We do not mean to take our leave of him, however, until we have shown him that his production is not unanswerable. The commemorative character of the sabbatic institution is a point which we are not disposed to yield, unless we are furnished with more solid reasons for doing so than any which he has offered. God had revealed himself to Israel as the self-existent Jehovah. Ex. 3 : 14 and 6 : 3. It was to worship such a God that they were sanctified, or set apart, from the rest of mankind. And what was the token that it was the self-existent Jehovah, rather than some such deity as the heathen worshiped, who had constituted them his people? The token was the Sabbath. "It is a sign between me and you, throughout your generations, that ye may know that I am the LORD that doth sanctify you." Ex. 31 : 13. See also Ezek. 20 : 12. For, inasmuch as it holds me forth as the Author of creation, it exhibits me as the eternal, self-existent God, and thus in the most marked manner distinguishes me from all the idol gods of the heathen nations. It follows, therefore, that whenever a nation renounces idolatry, and acknowledges the God of Israel, the Sabbath becomes just as much a "sign" of the relation thus established, as it was between God and the Israelites. Is it not perfectly ridiculous, then, to urge the fact that it was "a sign between God and the Israelites," as a reason that Christians have nothing to do with it? Do not Christians worship the God of Israel? See Rom. 3 : 29. Mr. B., of course, will not urge that Christians have nothing to do with the Sabbath. He admits that they are concerned with the institution, though not with the seventh day. But we have seen that this distinction is without any foundation.

"The time of celebrating the Christian Sabbath cannot be objected to on the ground of its tendency to limit the institution. From the time, there is no such tendency. Again, what is there, connected with the celebration of the Christian Sabbath, to render it nugatory, as a means to the end? Does the beginning (no matter when) of the septenary cycle, the seventh day of which we sanctify, deprive us of receiving as cheering, edifying, impressive, and lasting apprehensions of the being and character of God, as we would if the cycle began at any other date? Unless God interposes directly to make it otherwise, the number of the day on which a celebration occurs, cannot, in the remotest sense, affect its efficacy or utility, provided those interested are satisfied with the number. When, for reasons satisfactory to the good people of this Union, Independence is celebrated on the third or fifth of July, as is often the case, no one thence supposes the means will be so vitiated as that the end will not be fully attained. What sane man would say, 'When I hear recounted the numerous and priceless blessings which, as a citizen of the United States, are mine, my bosom will not be warmed with the sweet emotions of gratitude, my heart will not glow with a generous love of my country, because it is on the third?' 'In vain will the orator with moving pathos paint the super-human fortitude, the death-daring devotion, the god-like energy of our sires in the cause of liberty; their blood will not, as usual, run and rush through my boiling veins, till my whole being kindles in emulation of their deeds, ineffable admiration of their character thrills my soul, and I stand proudly assured, that I am a son of those who dethroned despots, and forever placed Freedom on the 'throne of the West, 'cause 'tis on the fifth?' The utility of the celebration is not in the least modified by the number of the day, be it third, fourth, or fifth."

In reply to all this stuff, which some perhaps may call argument, we would simply ask Mr. B. whether he ever knew a community of people to celebrate Independence day on Friday, or on Tuesday, when the Fourth of July occurred on Sunday? Did he ever know them to deviate more than one day from the true anniversary? When they cannot celebrate it on the true anniversary, do they not always put the celebration as near to it as possible? And is not this equivalent to a confession, that just in proportion as they depart from the true anniversary in the time of their celebration, they regard it as departing from the strict character of a commemoration? The truth is, that the people all have such a sense of the fitness and propriety of celebrating Independence only on the true anniversary, that they never deviate from it, except for the sake of giving way to a celebration which, they suppose, devolves upon them with greater obligation. It is only for the sake of honoring what they consider to be higher authority, that they ever consent to celebrate Independence on the third or on the fifth. Destroy their confidence in this higher authority, and they will at once, prompted by a deep-rooted sense of fitness, celebrate it always on the fourth.

Whether Christians who observe the first day of the week receive "as cheering, edifying, impressive, and lasting apprehensions of the being and character of God," as they would if they sabbatized on the seventh, is a question to which Mr. B. appears to think no one will venture to give a negative. But, admitting the fact to be so, it still does not prove that the end of the sabbatic institution is fully obtained by such observance. For, as we have before shown, the institution is designed not only to promote the good of those who actually observe it, but also to serve as a testimony to others. The Sunday observance does not testify to others, that God made the world in six days, and rested on the seventh. It does not serve as a standing witness against athiesm and idolatry. We should be sorry to say, that a devout Quaker does not receive 'as cheering, edifying, impressive, and lasting apprehensions' of the work of redemption, as those do who honor the institutions of Baptism and the Lord's Supper. Yet we are confident, that a system of faith which repudiates these ordinances, has a tendency to darken the mind with reference to the work of redemption. We are just as well persuaded, that if those who observe the first day of the week, to the rejection of the Bible Sabbath, do receive as clear and just apprehensions of the character of God, it is in spite of the tendency of their system. But we have not room to prosecute the subject farther this week. [To be continued.

It will be proper just here to present the resolution of the Conference, which has become the occasion of these remarks. It reads as follows :—

Resolved, That this Conference is conscientiously of the opinion, that Secret Societies are necessarily—in their organization fundamentally, and in their influence practically—adverse to Christianity; and therefore most earnestly and solemnly entreats the churches and members of this denomination, by all the motives which Christianity inspires, to dissuade their brethren from all connection with such Societies.

I think we may embrace the matter contained in the above resolution under the two following propositions :—

1st. That in organizing a Secret Society something must of necessity be embraced as fundamental to the orgonization, which is adverse to Christianity.

2d. That the practical influence of Secret Societies is also adverse to Christianity.

I will now speak of the first proposition. I suppose it to be self-evident, that in organizing a Secret Society it is necessary to lay it down as a fundamental arrangement, element or principle, that the meetings of the Society shall be held, and its business transacted, with closed doors against all except its members and such as are being initiated. I suppose, that without such a provision a Secret Society cannot be created, and that with such a provision any Society must be a Secret Society. The members of such bodies sometimes deny that theirs are Secret Societies, because they have no secrets, or none except the pass-word. That any such Societies, in times past or present, have or ever had any important or valuable Secrets, I never supposed. But whether they have the possession of a secret should not be mistaken for what constitutes a Society a Secret Society. The provision by which any Society separates itself from community at large, and meets exclusively by itself, is what constitutes it a Secret Society. No matter what valuable knowledge it may possess, or how profoundly ignorant it may be; no matter what or how much important business it may transact, or whether it absolutely does nothing; it is a Secret Society in spite of itself, and subject to the objection I am about to urge. The thing, abstractly and specifically, which I take it upon me to say is adverse to Christianity in such an organization, is the arrangement adopted to secure the secret meetings. Does some one say that I have not defined the thing I object to, because I have not told what the arrangement consists in to which I object? I reply, that I care not what it may consist in, for that makes no odds to the question here. The arrangement in the case may be any contrivance which ingenuity can invent, or imagination paint—it is not the form or kind of the contrivance to which I object, but this, rather, that, be it what it may, it is a contrivance to secure the secret assembling of the Society which adopts it. But it will be asked, why I object to such an arrangement? I reply, because it is in violation of the common confidence or common faith of society. It is in itself odious and suspicious. No one would think such a rule had been suggested by the demands of a good cause. To know that it is a constitutional law in any Society that it shall meet and do its business in secret, is to know that it has a function for evil—a mould for mischief. It is not, I allow, a demonstration, that its designers intend mischief; indeed, they may intend good, notwithstanding this monstrous deformity in their arrangements therefor. Yet it cannot be denied, that this arrangement is just what would be naturally suggested by a design, and adopted in order to consummate a wicked purpose. Many virtuous persons may adopt, laud, and magnify this plan; men may, in order to gratify curiosity—a strong weakness of many persons—take the pledge of such organizations, and, in connection therewith, do many great and good things, and at length these Societies become very popular; and in the halo of glory thrown around them, men may lose sight of and forget the native and inherent ugliness of this organic feature of their system when nakedly viewed. But when that glory shall have faded away, this ugliness will unchangeably remain. Its perpetuity, and the perpetuity of human perception and sensation, are identical. Every expression of this feature casts insult on society. It signifies distrust of, disregard to, and design against society. For nothing else is known to prompt to such a course. But it is known, that such principles do, and that good-doing does not. Jesus Christ has asserted this doctrine. If it be urged that those who adopt the provision of secrecy do intend good, I will allow that it may be so. But I deny that their good design prompted the measure in question. Misapprehension as to how they may do the good they wish, might lead to the choice of such a method; but a disposition or conscious desire to do good must always suggest a contrary course, for the well-known reason that all men love—and most of them to a fault—to proclaim all their good works, that they may have praise for them. Farther, good design always makes one who entertains it bold, and divests him of every feeling like being in need of secrecy. Nor would the thought of secrecy ever enter the mind, but for the existence of evil principles or agents some where. One might observe secrecy in doing good in order to escape the designs of the wicked; or to avoid ostentation, which is incompatible with genuineness or purity of motive, according to the instructions of the Saviour respecting alms-giving; or for the same or very similar reasons as in the case of admonishing a brother privately when he offends us, or in praying in secret. But this is not adopting secrecy as a constitutional law of a Society, and covering all its movements thereby. The species of secrecy enjoined in these particulars in Scripture, is applicable mostly or exclusively to single individuals, as such, and cannot at all serve to justify the use of a pledge of secrecy as a cover for the transactions of a Society. A gross and great mistake is sometimes made by confounding these directions to individuals to practice particular virtues privately, with organizing a Society on the scheme of secrecy. Very few things are more dissimilar. The whole import and significance of the plan of organizing a Society for charitable and benevolent purposes on the scheme of secrecy, is adverse to Christianity, for Christianity claims to be designed and fitted for the accomplishment of those objects in the highest sense. But it has, as a system, no provision of secrecy. In so much, therefore, as the principle of secrecy is held necessary to fit an organization to accomplish those objects, in so much it is condemnatory of and adverse to Christianity. As a system, the secret organization opposes the system of Christianity for the accomplishment of these objects. However much Christianity may arouse the depravity of the human mind, and thus occasion opposition to its claims, it never allows its votaries to employ any measures which, in their own nature, are in violation of common confidence in community—which are suspicious and indicative of designs against society. But, on the contrary, it undertakes its purposes by operating with open doors, or in open halls, or out of doors beneath the broad heavens, and by publishing all of its rules, principles, doctrines, and practices, to the whole family of man. I repeat it, then, that the provision of secrecy under consideration is an insult to the common sense of men; that the position which it assumes is directly in contradiction of the scheme of Christianity; and that, in despite of all the immaculate purposes, intentions, designs, and doings of all the good, and great and wise who adhere thereto, and there may be many such.

A MEMBER OF THE CONFERENCE.

MR. STEPHENSON ON THE SABBATH.

REV. ANDREW STEPHENSON, Pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in Eleventh Street, New York, has recently preached two sermons in opposition to Mr. Morton's "Vindication of the True Sabbath." A brief synopsis of these discourses may be not uninteresting to the readers of the "Recorder."

The first was preached from Heb. 4 : 9, 10—"There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God; for he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his."

Mr. Stephenson commenced by giving an exposition of the text. This rest, said he, is not heavenly rest, for two reasons : 1. Because "we who believe do enter into rest,"—not, we shall, but, we do, enter into it. 2. Because the word here translated rest (sabbatismos) is not the same used in the context, (katapausis;) and the Holy Spirit intended by this to intimate, that he meant a New Testament institution. This word is never used in the New Testament in relation to heavenly rest.* Again, the great design of the Apostle in this epistle was, to persuade the Jews to give up their ceremonial rites. He was reasoning with a Jew, and of course a "thus saith Jesus Christ" would have no weight with him.† Every Sabbath is founded upon some great work, and a rest of God consequent upon it. Now, this sabbatismos is founded upon some great work of God the Mediator, and his resting from it.

The preacher then deduced this doctrine from the text, That there is a Sabbath day under the New Testament dispensation, entirely different from that observed under the Old.

This doctrine he proceeded to discuss, and remarked—

1. We have reason to expect this change; for, (1.) it entirely coincides with God's dealings with his church in former times. There have been three different Sabbaths—the creation Sabbath, which was founded on the rest of God the Creator; the Jewish Sabbath, which was founded on the rest of God the Redeemer, when he introduced his people into the promised land, into which the unbelieving Jews could not enter; and the New Testament, or Christian Sabbath, spoken of in the text. The first Sabbath was instituted under the covenant of works, the second under God's covenant with the Israelites when he took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, while the Christian Sabbath is instituted under the covenant of grace. The covenant of works was not yet dissolved when the Jewish Sabbath was instituted, therefore the day was not changed; but it was dissolved when Christ rested from the work of redemption, therefore the day, as well as the institution, was changed. (2.) We have reason to expect this change, from the great difference between the covenant of works and that of grace. The Creation and Jewish Sabbaths had the rest at the latter end of the week, to signify, that under the covenant of works man could have no reward till after he had worked for it, while the Christian Sabbath has the rest in the beginning of the week, to intimate that in Christ we enter upon the enjoyment of our rest at once, without waiting to merit the reward by our works.* Indeed, continued he, I suspect that those who plead for the seventh day secretly wish to go back to the covenant of works, and work out their own salvation by the deeds of the law.

2. There is provision made for this change in the fourth commandment. The whole sum and substance of this commandment is in these words, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." There is a difference between the day and the institution, which is pointed out in this commandment. To say that "the Sabbath day" and "the seventh day" are synonymous, is a gross misuse of terms. It is no where said that God blessed the seventh day.† Thus there is provision made for this change in the fourth commandment itself.

Mr. S. then remarked—

3. This change is predicted in Isaiah 65 : 17, 18—"For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create; for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy."‡ The new heavens and the new earth are the work of our redemption, which the Mediator finished when he made his atonement, while the former are the visible heavens and earth which God made in six days. As these are no more to be remembered under the Gospel dispensation, of course the old Sabbath, which was designed to commemorate them, will give place to another to commemorate the work of redemption. If the Christian Sabbath is not a commemoration of the work of redemption, this work has never been commemorated by the church.‖

Mr. S. next remarked—

4. This change of day is clearly indicated by Christ in Matthew, 9 : 15—"And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast." It is known that Christ lay in the grave the whole of the Jewish Sabbath. That was, on that account, a day of mourning and fasting, and not a day of joy, as the Sabbath should be. The Saviour referred to this fact, when he said, "And then shall they fast."§

Mr. S. finally remarked—

5. This change is clearly taught in the text. The Christian's "sabbatismos" is an entirely different thing from God's "katapausis" and the Jew's rest in Canaan; and, as the opinion of many learned divines, that the believer's sabbatism will be enjoyed in heaven, has been shown, in the introduction, to be neither good sense nor sound theology, it remains clearly proved, that the New Testament Sabbath is a different day from the seventh of the Old.

In conclusion, Mr. S. noticed the objection, that Adam and all his posterity were bound in the covenant of works to keep the seventh day of the week holy, and no other. This, said he, is the Goliath of the argument of the opposition; and if it can be fairly disposed of, much will have been gained. If, he continued, Adam and his posterity did promise in that covenant to keep the seventh day of the week, then, brethren, you had better see to it. I say, if they did. But, if the objector means Reformed Presbyterians, with all due deference, I beg leave to say that they admit no such thing. Adam and his posterity never bound themselves to keep any particular day, but only that day, whichever it might be, that God would afterwards appoint. The seventh day could not be specified in the covenant of works, for the following reasons : First, because this covenant was made before the seventh day. Second, because it will not do for us to consult the dim page of Adam's heart to know the times and circumstances of worship. Third, because we are not bound to go to that old covenant to learn our duty.¶

Mr. S. then closed with an intimation that he would, on another occasion, resume the subject, and show which day of the week is the true Christian Sabbath.

[A report of Mr. Stephenson's Second Discourse is in type, but we are compelled to defer it until next week.]

---

* Dr. Scott says that this word is not used any where but in this text.

† "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus." Heb. 3 : 1.

* "Who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counsellor?"—Rom. 11 : 34.

† "And God blessed the seventh DAY, and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God had created and made."—Genesis 2 : 3. "O, brethren, I perceive that these texts are an eye-sore to you, and that in your hearts you wish they were out of the Bible. If you loved them you would not flatly contradict them"—"Vindication," page 56.

‡ "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Peter 3 : 13. When this promise shall have been fulfilled, it will be time enough to commemorate the new creation of which the prophet speaks.

‖ "And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat, this is my body which was broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death, till he come." 1 Corinthians 11 : 24, 25, 26.

§ "And they (the disciples) returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment." Luke 23 : 56. This is the day to which Mr. S. (not Christ) refers.

¶ "This law, (the law of the covenant of works,) after his fall, continued to be a perfect rule of righteousness, and, as such, was delivered by God upon Mount Sinai, in ten commandments, and written in two tables." Westminster Confession of Faith, chap. 19.

ENGLISH CONGREGATIONALISTS AND SUNDAY POST-OFFICE BUSINESS.—We learn from the Independent, that at the recent meeting of the Congregational Union, a discussion on Sabbath observance was raised, upon a motion for a memerial to the Government against the proposed increase of labor in the General Post-office on the Lord's day. A memorial was adopted; but there were two sets of opinions expressed before it was finally concluded upon. Dr. Massie, of Manchester, was opposed to a memorial, and to any interference with the Government in the matter. He appeared to think that such interference would recognize the claims of Government to legislate on religious questions; and also that it was not the province of the Union to interfere with arrangements regarding the State servants in public offices. The memorial, having first been made more comprehensive, so as to include all post-offices, was adopted.

CONSISTENCY ECCLESIASTICALLY SUSTAINED.—At a recent Convention of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches of Wisconsin, the following minute was adopted with only one dissenting voice. It is such a rare instance of consistency in the treatment of a slaveholder being supported by an ecclesiastical body, that we take pleasure in recording it. The question arose, as we read the minute, whether the Presbyterians and Congregationalists do not sometimes practice "close communion." But we will not take the reader's thoughts off from the minute by pressing that question here. The Convention says :—

"Whereas our delegate to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Philadelphia (Rev. S. Peet) has reported to us that he declined to attend the communion with that body because Rev. Dr. Leach, a slaveholder, was appointed to take part in the exercises, and that he privately offered his objections to Dr. Leach against receiving the sacrament of the Lord's Supper from his hands; therefore,

"Resolved, That the position of our delegate to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in declining to receive the sacrament of the Lord's Supper at the hands of a slaveholder, is in accordance with our often expressed views, and meets our cordial approbation."

DEATH OF REV. IRA M. ALLEN.—By a letter from Dr. J. G. Candee, dated in camp near San Diego, Oct. 4, 1849, the New York Recorder has received the painful intelligence of the death of Rev. Ira M. Allen late Secretary of the American and Foreign Bible Society, who started for California last winter. It took place August 30th, on the Rio Gila, about 120 miles from the Colorado. The health of Mr. Allen was such that he complained during the whole journey. He was much enfeebled by an attack of diarrhea, which seized him on the Rio Grande del Norte, and continued several weeks. It was finally checked, but returned again in a few days with a power that would not yield to medical skill, and after several weeks of suffering and anxiety, the patient died. His remains were buried on the morning of the thirty-first of August on the banks of the Rio Gila.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC'S ESTIMATE OF COLPORTAGE.—The following fact, says the American Messenger, was related by a friend. We have reason to believe that other intelligent Catholics regard the system of colportage in the same light. A gentleman from the States, while on a visit to Montreal, was invited by a citizen, who was a Roman Catholic, to share his hospitality. In the course of the visit, when conversation turned upon the subject of religion, the Catholic remarked, that they had had no fears in reference to all that Protestants had done in past years, but had rather laughed at their movements, for they had utterly failed to reach the Catholic people. "But," added he, with apparent emotion, "you will now succeed. Your colporteur system is doing the work successfully. Those active, faithful men, go right into our families, and they will succeed."

THE SUNDAY AT RIO.—At Rio Janeiro, the shops and stores are open, and all sorts of work is going on throughout Sunday as on other days of the week. A letter dated Sunday, June 18th, says :—

"This has been a celebration of some saint, and it was accompanied by fireworks, firing of guns and cannon, ringing of all the bells, and bonfires, exactly as we celebrate the 4th of July at home. There are exhibitions at the theaters, bull-fights, cock-fights, and horse-racing, as on the other days of the week."

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Will you, or some of your correspondents, answer the following questions through the medium of the Recorder?

1st. Are church-members, who are about removing from the bounds of their respective churches, entitled to letters showing their standing in said churches?

2d. If, on requesting such letters, the church votes that the request shall not be granted, are not the applicants entitled to a statement from the church of the reason or reasons for refusing their request?

3d. Should members who have requested letters and been refused, be advertised as non-resident members, while their requests in writing are still before the church?

4th. Should such members be reported as dismissed from the church which has refused to grant their request, while they remain unconnected with any other church? R. C.

A "CHATTEL" FOR SALE.—The following, which we find in a paper published in Norfolk, Va., speaks more than volumes of argument against that most infamous system of wrong the earth bears up. Mothers, sisters, daughters, read it; then refuse, if you can, to give your influence against a system which makes merchandise of the virtue and beauty of your sex.

NOTICE.—For sale, a colored girl, of very superior qualifications, who is now in Mr. Hall's Jail in Norfolk. She is what Speculators call a Fancy Girl—a bright Mulatto, a fine figure, straight black hair, and very black eyes—remarkably neat and cleanly in her dress and person. I venture to say, that there is not a better seamstress, cutter and fitter of ladies' and children's dresses, in Norfolk or elsewhere, or a more fanciful knitter of bead bags, money purses, &c.

Any gentleman in Norfolk or Portsmouth who may wish to purchase a girl of this description, (whom I consider the most valuable in Virginia,) may take her and try her a month or more at my risk, and if she does not suit and answer the description here given, may return her to Mr. Hall.

The cause of offense for which I intend, (though reluctantly) to sell her, is that she has been recently induced, by the persuasions of some colored persons, to make her escape to the North, in which she failed, and is now for sale. Apply to the subscriber, in Suffolk, or to James Murdaugh, Esq., or C. C. Robinson, of Portsmouth, for further information. JOSEPH HOLLADY.

PUBLIC MEETINGS IN PARIS.—The following remarks on this subject are from the pen of Mr. Syme, who is writing in the Christian Citizen a description of the Peace Congress in Paris :—

"It is a melancholy but instructive fact, that there is no room set apart for what we understand in Britain and the United Staies as 'public meetings.' There is no 'Faneuil Hall,' no Exeter Hall.' The Parisians, always denied the liberty of meeting and discussing their rights, have only been habituated to yell forth their wrongs from the trench or barricade. The Peace Congress Committee might have obtained, through the courtesy of the French Government, the old Chamber of Peers, or possibly the hall of the National Assembly; but the only public rooms available for this convocation of two thousand peaceful, rational people, were theatres and music saloons. There can never be a healthy public opinion in France until the public meeting becomes one of her social institutions."

SEAMEN'S CHAPLAINS.—The Rev. T. H. Newton of this city, and late of the Princeton Theological Seminary, has been commissioned by the American Seameu's Friend Society, as a chaplain to seamen at St. Thomas, in the West Indies. The Rev. J. Morris Pease of New York, has also just been commissioned by the same Society for a similar service at Rio de Janeiro, the capital of Brazil.

SPUNKY.—The Morristown (Ohio) Presbyterian church lately met to consult about selecting a pastor, wherepon they unanimously resolved, that they would give no encouragement to any man that would read his sermons, and would pay nothing for read sermons. If this does not bring "the readers of the gospel" in Ohio to their senses, what will? So says the Presbyterian Herald.

ANOTHER SABBATH ACCIDENT.—On Sabbath last, (commonly called Saturday,) a train of cars on the Michigan Central Railroad came in collision with the freight train at Ypsilanti, horribly mangling Mr. Ferguson, the baggage master, and slightly injuring several others. This is the second Sabbath accident on that road within a short time. Their boasted strictness about running cars on Sunday does not, it seems, protect them against accidents on the Sabbath.

STILL ANOTHER.—On Sabbath last a man named Thomas McGrath was crushed between two railroad cars at the corner of Tenth and Washington streets, Philadelphia, and died shortly after the occurrence.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF LIFE.—A terrible steamboat explosion occurred at New Orleans on the 15th inst. The steamer Louisiana, bound to St. Louis, when about starting from her wharf, burst both her boilers, shattering her to atoms, and also badly injuring the steamers Storm and Bostona, which were lying alongside. The Louisiana was crowded with passengers, as were also the other two, which had just arrived. It is supposed that, altogether, 200 lives were lost, beside many wounded. The levee was strewn with the dead and dying. Dead bodies, legs, arms and heads, were scattered in every direction, and the sight presented was most awful. Cause supposed to be carelessness.

NEW YORK ELECTION.—The recent election in the State of New York resulted in sustaining the New School Law, by which gratuitous instruction is secured to every child in the commonwealth. Of the eight State Officers elected, four are Whigs and four Democrats. In the New Legislature, the parties will be tied on a joint ballot—the Whigs having 17 in the Senate and 63 in the Assembly, while the other party have 15 in the Senate and 65 in the Assembly. The State Officers elected are as follows :—

Freeborn G. Jewett, of Onondaga, Judge of Appeals;
Washington Hunt, of Niagara, Controller;
Christopher Morgan, of Cayuga, Secretary of State;
Levi S. Chatfield, of Otsego, Attorney General;
Alvah Hunt, of Chenango, Treasurer;
Frederick Follett, of Genesee, Canal Commissioner;
Hezekiah C. Seymour, of Rockland, State Engineer;
Darius Clark, of St. Lawrence, Prison Inspector.

LATER EUROPEAN NEWS.

By the steamer America, seven days later news from all parts of Europe has been received.

The French Ministry have been dismissed or forced to resign, and the President has formed a new Cabinet, which is said to represent his views, and those of a majority of the National Assembly. The cause of the rupture is said to be a disinclination on the part of the Ministry to sustain President Napoleon's views relating to Rome. The affair caused considerable excitement in Paris.

The Russian Autocrat has relinquished his design of bullying the Sultan of Turkey into a surrender of the Hungarian Refugees, and has informed the Turkish Envoy, that he will be satisfied with the expulsion of the Patriots from the Turkish territory. The matter is regarded as settled.

Measures have been taken by the Porte for the location of the Polish and Hungarian refugees. The former had been conveyed to Shumla, while the latter were lodged in good quarters at Silaslego and Rubchick. Kossuth and other leaders were to remain for a while at Widden, until measures are taken for their removal and final liberation. No less than 300 of the Hungarian refugees had become converts to Aslamism, and many of their friends are about to follow their example.

The fiends who are nicknamed rulers in Austria, not satisfied with the human gore they have shed, still continue their sanguinary career. Several additional murders have been added to the already fearful list. Their victims who have been strangled in Pesth or shot are all men of mark, and when it is stated that the wretch Haynau has been appointed civil and military governor of Hungary, crimes at which humanity shudders at once arise before the mind at the mention of his name. If this wholesale system is continued, another crisis in that country is inevitable. The Hungarian officials are sending in their resignations in masses. The various nationalities of Hungary have re-commenced their old struggle for ascendancy, particularly the Slowaks Ruthenes.

In Rome the assassination of French soldiers continues daily. It was not expected that the Pope would return soon, or that the French army would leave immediately. Great hostility was still maintained against the Pope.

The Nationel states that the French Government has prohibited the entry into France of the Piedmontese journals, La Journal l'Italic del Popeli, published by Mazzini, and has also interdicted the passage through its territories of the numbers addressed to England and America.

SHIPWRECK AND LOSS OF LIFE.—The Mobile Advertiser, of Nov. 8, says that the bark Elijah Swift, D. A. Nye master, from New York, bound for New Orleans, with 39 souls on board, of whom eight were women and children cabin passengers, was wrecked on the 30th of October. On Monday, 29th ult., at 2 P. M. she anchored on the Great Isaacs, about two miles from the shore, in nine fathoms water; the wind moderate, with pleasant weather. At 1 A. M. the wind hauled suddenly to the N. W. and blew violently, with constant heavy rain. The vessel, while in the act of cutting away the mainmast, struck the rocks, and in one hour went to pieces. "During the time we were on the wreck," says one of the passengers, "the sea was continually breaking over us. After several ineffectual attempts to get a rope on shore, we at length succeeded, and landed all on board, though many of them were very much bruised and lacerated by the driftwood and surf dashing them against the sharp coral rocks. On landing, we deemed it safest to gain the highest or southeastern part of the Island, as the sea had already commenced breaking over the northwestern point where we stood. We had scarcely proceeded fifty yards on our way, leading the ladies at a slow pace, they being in their night-dresses and bare-footed, when a tremendous sea broke over the rocks, and washed away twenty of our number, eight of whom we saved—the other twelve were drowned. Among those lost were Parker Flower, 2d officer, and James Lane, seaman, both of New York, who lost their lives in endeavoring to save those of Mrs. N. A. Bailey, and Miss Henrietta P. Ray, two cabin passengers. The rest of our number succeeded in reaching a place of safety. The next morning, in searching for fresh water, we found an infant, six weeks old, the son of Mrs. Bailey; it had been washed upon the rocks the morning before, and had remained there 26 hours; it was alive and apparently sustained but little injury; we immediately carried it to the surviving ladies, to whose motherly care it owes its life. We remained on the rocks two days and a half, destitute of clothing, food or water, with the exception of some salt provisions that washed ashore, which we could not eat on account of creating thirst. On the third day we were rescued by the ship Bangor, Capt. W. J. Philibrook, who kindly answered our signals of distress, took us on board, and treated us with all the kindness that disinterested humanity could suggest."

SLAVE CASE.—The Upland Union states that a free colored woman, with her child in her arms, the latter born a slave, and claimed by the master, were found on board the steamboat Express, on the passage to Philadelphia from Delaware City, and being put on board the steamer Balloon, on her downward trip, were conveyed back to Dover and cast into prison. The devoted mother had made an effort to escape on the Balloon, but having no money to pay her fare, was suspected and put ashore at Delaware City.

INFLUENCE OF CUTTING THE HAIR.—A little girl, aged three years, of good health in general, had her hair grow excessively long during the course of a few months. She was a beautiful child, but had lately wasted without any apparent cause, becoming dull and apathetic, losing her appetite and strength, without any organic lesion being discernible. She was placed upon a tonic regimen, with chalybeats, but without deriving material benefit, until her hair was cut short at the suggestion of a friend, from which time she rapidly gained strength.

AMERICAN SAILORS ON EXHIBITION.—Late news from Lahaine, received at New London, Ct., makes mention of the arrival at the former place of the American whaler Minerva, Capt. Seabury. Capt. S. reports hearing from the Alert, Green, in the first part of the season. Being in on the Tartary Coast, the Captain sent two boats' crews in after wood. They not returning as expected, he sent the third boat, which was also detained. The ship was thus left with a single boat's crew, and continued standing off and on for two weeks or more before he had any intelligence of the boats. They finally all returned to the ship, and related that, when they landed, the natives made them prisoners, and took them back through the country and villages for the purpose of exhibition. They were treated in the kindest manner during their imprisonment. When their keepers had exhibited them to their satisfaction, they restored their boats with every article belonging to them. Not even the smallest article was missing.

CHINAMEN IN SAN FRANCISCO.—A San Francisco paper, of Sept. 29, says: We are so fortunate as to be located in a section of the town where large numbers of Chinese have pitched their tents, and we have remarked with much interest, the character and habits of these people. From early morn until late in the evening, these industrious men are engaged in their occupation of house-builders, of which a great many have been exported from China, and the quietness and order, cheerfulness and temperance, which is observable in their habits, is noticed by every one. Search the city through and you will not find an idle Chinaman, and their cleanliness exceeds that of any other people we ever saw.

LARD OIL.—In Cincinnati it is calculated that 11,000,000 lbs. of lard will be run into lard oil this year, two sevenths of which aggregate will make stearine, the residue oil, say about 20,000 barrels of 43 gallons each. There is also an establishment in that city extensively engaged in extracting the grease from the residue of the hog, which will probably this year operate in this way on 30,000 hogs. This concern alone is expected to turn out this season 3,000,000 lbs. of lard. Of stearine 3,000,000 lbs. have been made in one year in these factories, and they can make 6,000 lbs. of candles per day average throughout the year.

SUMMARY.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing under date of Schoharie, N. Y., Nov. 13, says: The dwelling-house of David Becker, a parsimonious and very aged man, of Carlisle, in this County, situated on the Albany and Cherry Valley Turnpike, was broken into and entered early this morning, and robbed of a large quantity of specie, amounting to about $4,000. The burglars, four in number, ransacked the whole premises, breaking in their progress sixteen locks on various tills, boxes, and drawers. Their booty consisted in part of two tin trunks, full of dollars, a six quart pail, filled with quarters, to say nothing of stocking-legs, &c.

Several robberies of gold dust have been detected among the lots received last week by the Empire City. When the robberies took place can not be discovered, but they were very ingeniously effected. A hole was bored in the bottom of the boxes, the dust picked out, the hole plugged, and a seal placed over it. How much the aggregate robbery is, has not been ascertained, but one lot is short $10,000. It is most likely that the thief took advantage of the transit of the Isthmus. The loss falls on the insurance companies.

Serious fears begin to be felt at the Treasury Department for the safety of the revenue cutter Lawrence, Capt. Frazer, which left Washington for California some time in November last. She was at Valparaiso in May, since which time nothing has been heard from her.

Three negroes ran away from their 'owners,' in St. Louis, a few days ago, and were arrested in Illinois and returned to their masters. They made several attempts to escape. The man who assisted them is a free negro, who, it is said, will be sent to the Penitentiary to expiate his offense.

The Southern Argus states that for some time past, a system of purloining letters from the mail between Richmond and Murfreesboro, N. C., has been successfully practiced. A few days since the mail was robbed of a letter containing $200 in bills.

The first session of the thirty-first Congress commences on Monday, Dec. 3. The Senate will stand, Democrats 34, Whigs 24, Free Soil 2, Hale and Chase. The House stands, Democrats 110, Whigs 106, Free Soil 14.

The steamer Constitution arrived at St. Louis, Nov. 14, with emigrants from New Orleans, having upward of 30 cases of cholera on board, 17 of which proved fatal before the steamer touched the wharf. The James Hewitt arrived the next day, with a number of cases on board, and was prohibited from landing by the public authorities.

Purser Wilson, who died in Boston recently, has left about $30,000—after the decease of his sisters—to the town of Belfast, Me., for the purpose of general education.

Judge Parsons, in Philadelphia, has just settled an important principle. He has fined a gentleman who drives a pair of fast horses, one hundred dollars for running into a family vehicle on Broad street, in that city. As the public roads are for the convenience of the whole public, the Judge held that those who endangered the lives of others by immoderate driving were responsible for the injury done.

A female of great personal attraction and bewitching address, has been passing herself off at Cincinnati, as the authoress, Mrs. Ellis, by which means she collected about $500 for subscription to a periodical which she alledged she was about to publish in Philadelphia.

The coal mine discovered by Professer Ridgway, in Cranston, R. I., has been opened, and about sixty tons of good anthracite coal have already been got out.

The "Asmonean" is the title of a new weekly paper just commenced in New York, and zealously devoted to the interests, tastes and doctrines of our Jewish population.

James Smith was arraigned in Boston, a few days since, for "smoking in the street." The court fined James a few dollars—and James, disposed to pester the court, tendered the sum in pennies. The court informed the officer that it had not time to count the money then, and he might jug James until he could spare time for that purpose. This was lighting the cigar at the wrong end, and James was not long in tendering the amount in "current bills of the Commonwealth."

The Legislature of Georgia has just met. The Governor's Message is very long, and has much to say about the position of the South on the slavery question. It concludes by asking the Legislature to authorize the Governor to convoke a convention of the people to consider "the measures proper for their safety and preservation in the event of the passage of the Wilmot Proviso, or other kindred measures, by Congress."

In the Senate of Vermont are 13 farmers, 8 lawyers, 2 physicians, 2 manufacturers, 2 mechanics, 1 innkeeper, 1 merchant, and 1 scribe. In the House, are 144 farmers, 12 attorneys, 8 physicians, 8 manufacturers, 16 mechanics, 18 merchants, 7 clergymen, 4 innkeepers, 1 stage proprietor, 2 teachers, 1 country clerk, and 1 druggist. In both branches there are 186 natives of Vermont and 3 foreigners.

An old miserly planter died at Attakapas, Louisiana, lately, who was worth, in money, land and negroes, at least $200,000. He had his coffin made before his death, of rough, unhewed plank, in which was found, after his death, some two or three thousand dollars in gold. Secreted in the ceiling of the house was found $45,000 in gold, and in an iron chest also a very large amount in gold and paper.

Thompson's Bank Note Reporter says that Fifty Dollar notes on the Tradesmen's Bank of this city, altered from genuine Ones, are in circulation. They are very well done and likely to deceive those not acquainted with the true bills. The genuine One and spurious Fifty dollar notes have for a vignette a female with scales, ship, &c.; the genuine Fifty has a bull's head, &c.

The Doylestown (Pa.) Democrat gives a curious account of a fight between a man and a hawk. A farmer named Meredith having driven off a hawk that was attacking one of his turkeys, it subsequently made a rush for him off a neighboring tree, and continued to strike at him with beak and talons until he had beaten it to death.

At the St. Louis Convention for the Pacific Railroad, an estimate was submitted by Col. Curtis, a skillful engineer, of the cost of a survey. The road can be made, he thinks, for eighty-eight millions of dollars; and one thousand men, a party being assigned to each one hundred miles, can complete the survey in one year.

A suit has been commenced in order to test the validity of some of the trusts contained in the will of the late John Jacob Astor. The suit is instituted against William B. Astor, by Mrs. Langdon, a niece of the deceased. The trusts in relation to herself and some others of the family, are alledged to be invalid.

A man named Cannon, a book-keeper in New York, who had been in the habit of using that dangerous drug opium, on Friday night jumped from the window of his room in the second story of a house in Pearl street, and crushed himself on the pavement so badly, that he died while being carried to the hospital.

The Erie (Pa.) Observer informs us that in a sheep recently killed near that place, the lungs were found to contain half a pound of lead, in shape resembling a tree. The animal was apparently in good condition, and the lungs not diseased nor injured by their load.

The number of land-warrant frauds recently discovered at the Pension Office, has made it necessary to be very strict in examining and careful in purchasing them. In one case five different warrants were issued by the Pension Office, upon as many spurious sets of papers, all in the name of the same soldier.

A terrible collision occurred recently on the Columbia Railroad, between Parkesbury and Coatsville. Twenty cars broke loose from a freight train, and running on a downward glade, came in collision with another train that had left Parkesbury fifteen minutes previous. Twelve cars were smashed, and three thrown over the bridge. Two men at work on the track were killed, the head of one being severed from his body.

The War Department has received from Col. Washington, commanding in New Mexico, the interesting intelligence that he has concluded a Treaty of Peace with the formidable tribe of Navajoe Indians. The tribe numbers from seven to ten thousand souls, of whom between two and three thousand are warriors, who are generally well mounted, and armed with guns or lances, and bows and arrows.

A letter dated London, Oct. 26, says: At length the Cholera may be considered to have been reduced to nil. It appears from the Register General's last Report, that in London 13,538 persons have succumbed to the fearful visitation since its commencement, of whom nearly one half have died within the first 48 hours, constituting cases of what may be termed sudden death. It has cost London £146,000 in funerals.

Parties in the Tenessee Legislature are exactly equal. The Opposition have three majority in one House, the Whigs have three in the other; on joint ballet their is a tie. Hence, when they go into convention for elections, there is a dead lock, and nobody is elected. They tried to elect a Judge on the 19th ultimo, but gave it up after four ballotings, tie and tie all the time.

There is one person, at least, in England, who need not go to California for gold. It is said that Lieut. Col. Gold, of Her Majesty's 4th regiment, will come into possession of the enormous wealth left by Mr. Charles Bullen, the late banker of Liverpool. The property is said to amount to between £5,000,000 and £6,000,000.

The New York Mirror says that several members of Congress of all parties are urging Maryland to petition Congress for the retrocession of the sovereignty of that portion of the District of Columbia which originally belonged to her. The object is to remove from the National Legislature the agitating question of Slavery in the District.

The formation of reading societies would be an excellent method for young workmen to pass the long winter evenings pleasantly and advantageously. By these are meant societies of young persons assembled in an appointed place every evening, each of whom, in turn, should be required to read aloud selections from standard authors.

Endeavor to acquire a temper of universal candor and benevolence, and learn neither to despise nor to condemn any persons on account of his particular modes of faith and worship; remember, always, that goodness is confined to no party—that there are wise and worthy men among all sects of Christians, and that to his own master every one must stand or fall.

There are hundreds of girls in every large city, who parade the streets in feathers, flowers, silks, and laces, whose hands are soft and white as uselessness can make them, whose mothers keep boarders to get a living for their daughters. Mrs. Swisshelm says this.

The Legislature of Virginia offers a premium of $500 for the best plan, with estimates, of a monument to George Washington, to be erected in the city of Richmond. It is to be constructed of Virginia granite, or marble, and may cost $100,000. To be sent in by the first of December next.

☞ On looking over our books, we find that a large number of subscribers have not yet paid for the current volume, although it is nearly half completed. We hope it is only necessary to call call their attention to the subject, to secure prompt and general remittances.

Proclamation,

By HAMILTON FISH, Governor of the State of N. York

A sense of gratitude to Almighty God for his numerous manifestations of goodness during the past year, calls for a public expression of thanks from a People who have experienced the full measure of blessings which have been extended to us.

Peace and quiet have reigned throughout our land. The labors of the husbandman have been rewarded in the return of the fruits of the earth. Industry has pursued its accustomed walks in all its varied employments, and its votaries have enjoyed honest and well earned rewards. Civil and religious liberty continue to be vouchsafed to all within our borders—and the blessings of the Gospel are extended to all who desire to enjoy its comforts and its consolations. A few weeks since, the whole Nation, in humble dependence, united in earnest prayer to Almighty God to withdraw the grievous pestilence which was ravaging the land; that visitation has passed, and the blessing of public health is restored.

It becomes a grateful and Christian people to acknowledge these mercies, and to render thanks to their bountiful Giver.

I do therefore designate Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November, instant, and do recommend its observance by the People of this State, as a day of Public Thanksgiving to Almighty God.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto signed my name and affixed the Privy Seal of the State, at the [L. S.] City of Albany, this first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty nine.

HAMILTON FISH.

By order of the Governor:
ROBERT H. MORRIS, Private Secretary.

New York State Agricultural Society.

The Annual Meeting of the New York State Agricultural Society is to be held at Albany on the third Wednesday of January. In addition to the awarding of premiums on essays, farms, grain and root crops, butter and cheese, an exhibition of winter fruits will be had at the Agricultural Rooms. It is desired that there should be an extensive competition for the premiums of the Society at the Annual Meeting, as well as a large attendance of practical farmers from every section of the State.

The exhibition of fruits at the last Annual Meeting was very superior, and it is hoped that an equally fine display will be made at this Annual Meeting. It is desired that there should be an exhibition from every County in the State, as well as from the adjoining States and British Provinces.

Persons who are willing to aid in this exhibition are requested to have their fruit, properly labeled with its name, and the name and residence of the exhibitor, and securely packed and directed to the Secretary, Agricultural Rooms, Albany, and sent at as early a day as practicable It is also desired that the character of the soil, the exposure of the orchard, and the habits of the tree, as to its thrifty and bearing character, or otherwise, be given.

B. P. JOHNSON, Secretary.

Notice.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of DERUYTER INSTITUTE will take place at the Institute on Tuesday, the 4th day of December next, at 6 o'clock P. M., at which time five Trustees are to be elected in the place of Ethan Stillman, Arza Coon, Matthew Wells, Jr., Edward Whitford, and Robert Langworthy, whose term of office expires on that day.

Immediately after the election, the Trustees will meet and organize for the year.

CHARLES H. MAXSON, Secretary.
DERUYTER, Oct. 28, 1849.

Traveling Agents Wanted,

FOR WOODWORTH'S YOUTH'S CABINET, one of the best and most popular Magazines of its class in America. To gentlemen who possess the qualifications of a good agent, the publisher will offer terms which cannot fail to secure a handsome income. Applicants for the agency are required to produce responsible testimonials as to character and general efficiency, and to invest the sum of $20 in bound volumes of the work, which sell readily at a large advance. The Cabinet is not sectarian in its character, and is equally popular among all denominations, and in every part of the Union. Price of the magazine $1; of the bound volumes, each $1 25. From 50 to 75 gentlemen, in addition to those now in the field, can be profitably employed in different sections of the United States. Now is the best time to obtain subscriptions for the new volume. The initial number, beautifully embellished, will be sent to agents gratis, in advance of its publication. Full particulars respecting the agency will be given on inquiry. Apply immediately, (if by letter, post-paid,) to

Miscellaneous.

From the National Era.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BY JOHN J. WHITTIER.

The South Land has its fields of cane,
The Prairie boasts its heavy grain,
And sunset's radiant gates unfold
On rising marts and sands of gold.

Rough, bleak and cold, our little State
Is hard of soil, of limits straight;
Her yellow sands are sands alone,
Her only mines are ice and stone!

From Autumn frost to April rain,
Too long her Winter woods complain;
From budding flower to falling leaf,
Her Summer time is all too brief.

But on her rocks and on her sands
And stormy hills the school-house stands,
And what her rugged soil denies,
The harvest of the Mind supplies.

The treasures of our Commonwealth
Are free, strong minds, and hearts of health,
And more to her than gold or grain,
The cunning hand and cultured brain!

For well she keeps her ancient stock—
The stubborn strength of Pilgrim Rock;
And still maintains, with milder laws
And clearer light, the Good Old Cause!

Nor dreads the skeptic's puny hands,
While near her School the Church-spire stands;
Nor fears the blinded bigot's rule,
While near her Church-spire stands a School!

CALIFORNIA ON THE OTHER SIDE.

While so many glowing accounts of the gold and glory of El Dorado are filling the public prints, and leading off our fellow citizens by thousands to connect their destinies with the new empire of the Pacific, it is well, says the Independent, to look a little at the other side of the picture, and see at what cost the anticipated benefits of emigration are to be gained. In these removals, and changes, and adventures, there is likely to come up a full measure of the same sort of sufferings and failures that have attended the beginnings of other enterprises of colonization. And as, in the case of California, we are going ahead at railway speed, and doing up in a year or two what used to be the work of a century, it is not strange if we should find, when the account of these two years comes to be summed together, that the sorrows of an age have been as fully concentrated as its labors.

The Christian Inquirer, of this city, publishes the following description, by a yonng man, of some of the sorrows he has seen and shared, in the first few weeks of his residence at San Francisco:—

"Reaching the post-office, a long line was immediately formed, each man waiting impatiently for his turn to come. There are now in this post office half a million of letters! consequently, to every letter in the alphabet, had to be taken down a large bundle of letters; and a whole day was consumed by five or six clerks in serving our company with their letters. Many a tale of sadness is here awaiting the arrival of its intended recipient. We noticed one young man burst into a flood of tears after he had broken the seal of one of his letters—his father was dead! who, six month ago, was in perfect health, and took an affectionate leave of his son as the ship Duxbury was leaving the wharf; and another, a young man, was leaning against the building bathed in tears—his beloved wife was moldering in the dust! and still another young man we saw giving free vent to his feelings—his only brother was gone to his long home! One of the first expressions uttered by the young man who had lost his father was, 'Oh! I must go back to my mother!' This was expressed in such a tone of bitter anguish that many of us wept with him. Ah! how valueless is the gold we have come for so far, compared with the life of our near and dear friends."

Another young man, who was induced to take the overland route, thus writes to his friends at home:—

"I do not know what I can do, as yet, although the old miners who pass me on their way homeward, say a man may get from one to three ounces per day of the dust in the best diggings. Hundreds are leaving for home, who have been here only one or two weeks. They say it is very sickly at the mines, but I must try it till spring, at all events. From what I have seen as yet, I would not advise any one to come here, if he can live in the States. If he wants to die, or suffer privations worse than death, this is the place for him. No person can imagine the extent of my sufferings since leaving home, except those who have passed through similar scenes. I was left upon the desert to die, and my tongue was so swollen that I could but just run it out of my mouth. I crawled to the water over the burning sand, with the scorching rays of the sun pouring down upon me, with not even a shrub to screen me, night or day. I have been obliged to beg for bread where money would not buy it, and to plead like a child for one drop of water wherewith to moisten my parched lips, and could but shed tears when it was either granted or denied me. Of course I have slept only upon the ground for months, and have lain for hours without a dry thread upon me. On one occasion I was aroused, at midnight and alone, by the shrill cries of a panther apparently within twenty or thirty feet of me, without anything to defend myself with within the same distance. I have a journal of all my sufferings, which I will send you by and by, but I cannot write it out now. As soon as I get able I must go to the mines, and try my fortune there. God grant that a 'change may come over the spirit of my dream,' and that my health may be sufficiently restored to enable me to accumulate enough of the cause of my sufferings to reach home with, if no more."

We copy from Zion's Herald an extract of a letter written by Mr. G. W. Carnes, on occasion of the death of his brother, late a respected and useful merchant at Boston, but now a victim of the climate and exposures of California. Having given an account of the voyage, their essays at mining, their consequent sufferings, and the sudden sickness and the afflictive death and burial of his brother, he proceeds to say:—

"Aug. 24th.—I have returned to San Francisco, with the intention to remain only long enough to procure funds sufficient to cancel the little debts incident to Henry's burial, and to return home in the steamer. Such was my intention upon returning to San Francisco; for after this painful bereavement there is not enough gold in all California to tempt me to the mines. Gold is no longer my object. The endearments of home far outshine the most brilliant gems. At the time of writing these lines I am seated in my little tent, on the slope of a hill that overlooks the immense forests of shipping in the harbor of San Francisco. I could almost fain to take passage as a seamen in one of those vessels for Boston or New York, for it has fallen to my lot to experience a new trial since my return to this place. The poisonous plants that have troubled so many others have at last affected me, and perhaps you would scarcely know me at the present time, if you should chance to look in at the door of my tent, my face being so badly swollen. Other parts of my body are also affected, and though no serious injury may result from it, still I apprehend more or less trouble from its effects. Therefore you will not express surprise that I should, under present circumstances, covet even a situation as seaman in some vessel bound for Boston or New York. Though unworthy of any good from that Divine hand that has hitherto kept me, may this effort to return once more to the bosom of kindred friends be favored with success."

EXPERIENCE OF A GOLD-HUNTER.

J. Winchester, of New York, formerly publisher of the "New World," started for California last winter soon after the fever began to rage. A letter from him, dated Aug. 10, and published in the N. Y. Tribune, gives glimpses of mining life which are anything else than pleasant. We copy a paragraph:—

The accounts published in the United States in reference to the mineral region, are exaggerated to a degree almost incredible. In no particular were my anticipations realized. The "lay of the land"—the incredible difficulties and hardships attending the operations of mining, are no more understood in the United States, than are the hieroglyphics upon the Pyramids of Egypt. The country is mountainous—broken up by deep ravines—and everywhere covered with rocks piled upon rocks. The rivers are rapid torrents, often shut in by perpendicular walls of granite, appearing something like the Niagara below the Falls—a thread of water running through an enormous gulf—except that here the mountains are five or six times as high, and covered with scattering oaks, intermixed with pine. It is therefore impossible to work all along the river, for the enormous ledges of rock and precipitous acclivities prevent. It is only on the "bars," formed in the river bed or margin, dry at low water, that the gold can be obtained; and then only by the labor of removing "cords" of big stones, and often having to "pack" the dirt in bags or buckets and carry it from one to ten rods to the water, where the "rocker" is necessarily placed. Not one in ten who come to California with "golden expectations," but would stay at home, were a true state of the case known. So they say—and crowds leave the river, many for home, disappointed, and poorer than they came. I am satisfied that emigration will ere long receive a check, unless the deception is kept up by dishonest letter-writers, who trumpet the extraordinary cases of "luck," as evidence of what all may do in the mineral region. More than this, all the best places on these rivers had the cream taken off last year, leaving increased crowds to content themselves with gleaning. On the bar where we have worked nine days, old Sinla and his Indians took out thousands upon thousands of dollars last summer. Now the richest part is in possession of a company who are cutting a canal across the bend, for the purpose of draining the bed of the river, in which the gold is most abundant; so that all the crowds of new comers—and there have several hundreds arrived since we have been here—can find no place to earn half an ounce each per day.

VEGETABLE PHENOMENON.

Near the house of Hopeton there was a clearing in the forest, exhibiting a fine illustration of that natural rotation of crops, which excites, not without reason, the surprise of every one who sees it for the first time, and the true cause of which is still imperfectly understood. The trees which had been cut down were full grown pines, [pinus anstralis,] of which the surrounding wood consists, and which might have gone on for centuries, one generation after another, if their growth had not been interfered with. But now they are succeeded by a crop of young oaks, and we naturally ask, whence came the acorns, and how were they sown here in such numbers? It seems that the Jay, [garrulus cristatus,] has a propensity to bury acorns and various grains in the ground, forgetting to return and devour them. The rook, also, [coreus americanus,] does the same, and so do some squirrels and other Rodentia; and they plant them so deeply that they will not shoot, unless the air and the sun's rays can penetrate freely into the soil, as when the shade of the pine trees has been entirely removed. It must occasionally happen that birds or quadrupeds, which might otherwise have returned to feed on the hidden treasure, are killed by some one of their numerous enemies. But as the seeds of pines must be infinitely more abundant than the acorns, we have still to explain what principle in vegetable life favors the rotation. Liebig adopts Dr. Candolle's theory as most probable. He supposes that the roots of plants imbibe soluble matter of every kind from the soil, and absorb many substances not adapted for nutrition, which are subsequently expelled by the roots, and returned to the soil as excrements. Now, as excrements cannot be assimilated by the plant which ejected them, the more of these matters the soil contains, the less fertile must it become for plants of the same species. These exudations, however, may be capable of assimilation by another perfectly different kind or family of plants, which would flourish while taking them up from the soil, and render the soil, in time, again fertile for the first plants. "During a fallow," says Liebig, "the action of the sun and atmosphere, especially if not intercepted by the growth of weeds, causes the decomposition of the excrementitious matters, and converts the soil into humus or vegetamold, restoring fertility."

HOW TO SUBDUE A VICIOUS HORSE.

The following fact occurred a short time since. A beautiful and high-spirited horse would never allow a shoe to be put on his feet, without a resort to every species of power and means to control him. At one time he was nearly crippled by being put in the stocks; he was afterwards thrown down and fettered; at another time, one of our most experienced horse-shoers was unable to manage him by the aid of as many hands as could approach. In an attempt to shoe this horse a short time since, he resisted all efforts, kicked aside every thing but an anvil, and came near killing himself against that, and finally was brought back to his stable unshod. This was his only defect; in all other respects he is gentle and perfectly docile, especially in harness. But this defect was just on the eve of consigning him to the plough, where he might work barefoot, when, by mere accident, an officer in our service, lately returned from Mexico, was passing, and being made acquainted with the difficulty, applied a complete remedy by the following simple process:—

He took a cord about the size of a common bed cord, put it in the mouth of the horse like a bit, and tied it tightly on the animal's head, passing his left ear under the string, not painfully tight, but tight enough to keep the ear down, and the cord in its place. This done, he patted the horse gently on the side of the head and commanded him to follow, and instantly the horse obeyed, perfectly subdued, and as gentle and obedient as a well-trained dog; suffering his feet to be lifted with entire impunity, and acting in all respects like an old stager. That simple string, thus tied, made him at once as docile and obedient as any one could desire. The gentleman who thus furnished this exceedingly simple means of subduing a very dangerous propensity, intimated that it is practiced in Mexico and South America in the management of wild horses. Be this as it may, he deserves the thanks of all owners of such horses, and especially the thanks of those whose business it may be to shoe or groom the animals.

FIGHT BETWEEN A BOY AND A LYNX.

We stated a few days since, says the Boston Journal, that a large lynx had been killed in Weare, N. H., by a lad 16 years of age. A gentleman from that vicinity has given us the following particulars of the exciting conflict:—

On Saturday, Oct. 27, a party of individuals in Weare started out on a "squirrel hunt," and among the number was Master Almon Favour, a youth of 16 years, who was armed with a small gun, intended only for squirrels, partridges, and other small game. During the day his dog treed a large Loup Cervier—a species of Wild-Cat or Lynx. The courageous lad, not wishing to lose so good a "count" for his "side," although his gun was loaded with but a slight charge of small shot, drew up the weapon and fired, the charge taking effect in the shoulder of the animal. The animal apparently took but little notice of the wound, and after walking back and forth upon a large limb several times, all the while eyeing his two antagonists below, he deliberately backed down the trunk of the tree and sprang at the lad; but the faithful dog interfered, and a sharp contest ensued between the two animals. At length the dog was overpowered for a moment, when the Lynx made a second spring at the lad, but was again prevented from effecting his object by the interference of the dog, and a second fight ensued between the two. While this was going on, the lad laid aside his gun, and arming himself with a stout club, he in turn went to the rescue of his noble canine friend, and seizing a favorable opportunity, struck the "varmint" a heavy blow between the ears, which laid him dead at his feet. After resting awhile, young Favour shouldered his game, and started for home. Before he had gone far he came across the mutilated carcass of a fresh-killed sheep, upon which the animal had probably breakfasted that morning. The Loup Cervier weighed 27 pounds, and his longest tusks measured 2½ inches in length. The lad received $2 bounty from the town, and also disposed of the skin for a handsome sum, thus making a profitable day's work.

An Extraordinary Operation.—On Monday last, says the Balt. Sun, the extraordinary operation of the complete and successful removal of an enlarged ovarian tumor was performed in the southern section of our city, by Dr. Thomas L. Murphy, assisted by Dr. E. J. Chaisly. The operation was performed at the urgent solicitation of the young lady who had been suffering from the enlargement for the last two years, and who had been thrice subjected to the operation of paracentesis. The tumor had attained a remarkable size, and, although tapping had been performed but a few weeks since, it weighed, when removed, the extraordinary weight of twenty-six pounds. The entire abdominal cavity was occupied by the tumor, which was so enlarged that, although an incision nearly eight inches in length was made along the linea alba, it was found necessary to reduce the volume by puncturing the tumor and drawing off some twenty pounds of fluid before the mass of tumor could be removed. Upon the withdrawal of the tumor from the cavity of the abdomen, it was discovered that no adhersion had taken place between the tumor and the abdomenal parietes, and it only remained, to complete the operation, to apply the proper ligatures around the neck of the tumor and sever its connection with the uterus. This was readily accomplished, with not the slightest hemorrhage, and with the most remarkable display of female fortitude on the part of the patient, who, throughout the operation, exhibited extraordinary courage, and who, up to the present moment, is in excellent condition, and promises, from her present symptoms, a successful termination to this rare operation.

Secret of Beauty.—A lady's beauty depends so much upon expression, that if that be spoiled, farewell to her charms; and which nothing tends more to bring about than a countenance soured with imaginary cares, instead of being lighted up with thankfulness for innumerable blessings. This is the cause of many ladies withering into wrinkles early in life; while nothing renders their beauty so lasting as that placid look of pure benevolence which emanates from a heart full of heaven by affection for those nearest them, and good will towards all mankind.

Interesting Discoveries in Africa.—A French Exploring Expedition has partially ascended the Grand Bassam River in Africa, and has discovered it to be a confluent of the Niger. Captain Boilet, the commander of the expedition, writes that he has discovered two magnificent lakes, where palm oil is so abundant that the ship had not vessels enough to hold it. Now, according to the dealers themselves, palm oil gives a profit of eighty per cent., whilst gold only yields fifty or sixty. The adjoining villages are said to overflow with produce of all sorts. Captain Boilet has, however, visited unknown regions, and established relations in the midst of a country the very center of the gold trade, the only commerce hitherto carried on at Grand Bassam. It being the dry season, the want of water prevented its entire exploration; but in the rainy season there are six feet of water, and the river may be ascended as far as the cataracts of Abouesson, fifty leagues distant. At that place the traveler is within sixty leagues of Sego, the course of the Niger is still continued. When the steamer Guestander proceeds to Grand Bassam, that vessel, which only draws two feet of water, will entirely solve the problem. Thus, a well armed and well supplied vessel will penetrate to the interior of the country, traversing a district of which Captain Boilet has seen a part himself, and which is the entrepot and the passage for the caravans of the gold and silk merchants, and where the gallant Captain discovered, and inhabited for two days, a city more ancient and more important than Timbuctoo. "I must write a volume," concludes the letter, "were I to attempt to relate the dangers and adventures of the expedition."

New Explorations in Africa.—It is said that the Academy of Sciences and the Geographical Society of France have projected an expedition on a grand scale for penetrating the interior of Africa to Timbuctoo. It is to be conducted by scientific men, and will have in view the two-fold purpose of extending our knowledge of this portion of the continent, and of opening new channels for French trade and commerce. It is a singular fact that, notwithstanding the several attempts by Mungo Park, Clapperton, Denham, Oudney, Lander, and Laird, for the exploration of that portion of Africa which lies between the Gulf of Guinea and the Mediterranean, none have yet reached Timbuctoo and returned. The only European traveler who has reached this inland city and returned to give an account of it is Caillé, a Frenchman, some ten years since. The expedition now projected, it is said, will have an escort of 800 armed Europeans and 400 Africans.

Important Discovery in Ventilation.—We learn from the London Literary Gazette, that Dr. Chowne has enrolled a patent for improvements in ventilating rooms and apartments, of the perfect efficacy of which, we believe, there cannot be a doubt, and on a principle at once most simple and unexpected. Without going into details at present, we may state, that the improvements are based upon action in the syphon which had not previously attracted the notice of any experimenter, viz: that if fixed with legs of unequal length, the air rushes into the shorter leg, and circulates up, and discharges itself from the longer leg. It is easy to see how readily this can be applied to any chamber, in order to purify its atmosphere. Let the orifice of the shorter leg be disposed where it can receive the current, and lead it into the chimney, (in mines into the shaft,) so as to convert that chimney or shaft into the longer leg, and you have at once the circulation complete. A similar air syphon can be employed in ships, and the lowest holds, where disease is generated in the close berths of the crowded seamen, be rendered as fresh as the upper decks. The curiosity of this discovery is that air in a syphon reverses the action of water, or other liquid, which enters and descends, or moves down in the longer leg and rises up in the shorter leg!

Personal Habits of Queen Victoria.—It is now perfectly well know, that besides being an early riser, and a great economist of time, the Queen is an indefatigable reader—not merely, as royal personages have been wont to be, of scraps marked out for perusal from which all the disagreeables are carefully excluded,—but of the daily papers, and weekly and monthly, as well as quarterly periodical literature of the day. Her punctuality is such that neither at Review, Levee—or any visit to any institution—was she a minute behind time; and her early rising is so habitual, that being out in the Phœnix Park at half past six, the morning after her arrival, riding with her children,—running races for their amusement,—she attracted the censure of a stately old dame, who recollected the regime, to whom it was told, and who exclaimed, "Then upon my soul and conscience it was extremely unladylike, I must say."

Heroic Act.—The Binghampton Republican tells the following story:—"An incident occurred at the late fire in this village worthy of notice. The devouring element had wrapped the whole of the interior of the store in flames, and the heroic firemen had begun to despair of saving the block, when it was whispered that there was a quantity of powder in the building. The stoutest hearts were quailed before this new danger, when a fireman, Mr. James Halstead, seized a lantern, and forcing the clerk (who slept in the store and knew where the powder was) to accompany him, entered the cellar, and groping his way with his terrified companion, soon appeared again—amid the breathless suspense of the few who knew his fearful errand—bearing a keg of powder, charred with the rapidly advancing flames."

The Reward of Patriotism.—The following is stated to be the condition of some of the liberal leaders of Europe: Mazzini is supporting himself by editing a Review. Garibaldi arrived in Piedmont with one shirt and half a dollar, after enduring the greatest hardships. Manin, of Venice, is now a common laborer. Ayezzana has returned to New York poorer than he left it. The ex-chancellor of Sicily supports himself as a paragraph writer for one of the Paris journals. Marrast is not worth a sous. Cavaignac has nothing but his pay. Louis Blanc lives by his pen. Lamartine drudges with his pen for subsistence, and Caussidiere sells wines in London to the same end.

Three Wise Hints.—Mr. Kennedy, in his recent life of Wirt, gives a letter from the latter to a young lawyer, which contains the three following paragraphs. We commend them to the attention of all legal sprigs, who have just begun to aid Doe and Roe in their quarrels:—

"Cultivate a simple style of speaking, so as to be able to inject the strongest thought into the weakest capacity. You will never be a good jury lawyer without this faculty.

"Never attempt to be grand and magnificent before common tribunals; as the most you will address are common. The neglect of this principle of common sense has ruined ——, with all men of common sense.

"Keep your Latin and Greek and science to yourself, and to that very small circle which they may suit. The mean and envious world will never forgive you your knowledge if you make it too public. It will require the most unceasing urbanity and habitual gentleness of manners, almost to humility, to make your superior attainments tolerable to your associates."

Antiquities of Central America.—The New York Mirror says that at a late meeting of the Ethnological Society, an interesting paper was read by Mr. John R. Bartlett, from the Hon. E. G. Squier our Charge des Affaires at Guatemala. Mr. Squier has already commenced his antiquarian researches, and forwarded several curious relicts to Washington. He gives an account of the recent discovery of an ancient city, buried beneath the forest, about a hundred and fifty miles from Leon, which far surpasses the architectural wonders of Palenque. The Indians everywhere receive him with the utmost kindness, and their chiefs regard him as a heaven-sent minister to protect them from their Spanish oppressors. They are glad to render him every possible assistance in his investigations, on the condition that he will bring no Spaniard into their villages, nor communicate to the priests the secrets they disclose.

The Cousin of Arnold.—"The evil that men do lives after them." Shakespeare was right. A striking verification of the fact may be drawn from a circumstance which we find stated in Zion's Herald. In Norwich, Ct., died June 29th, 1849, aged 82, Miss Hannah Arnold, a cousin of the notorious Benedict Arnold, the traitor. Though aged, sick, and emaciated, she is said to have retained traces of great personal beauty. She evinced great resoluteness of purpose and activity of mind; but she was morose, jealous, and revengeful; and this trait in her character, was undoubtedly attributable to the suspicions, which she and her maiden sister entertained of nearly every body in consequence of their near connection with the traitor. This is evident from a single circumstance. A person once called upon them, and after some general conversation, remarked, "You are related to Benedict Arnold, are you not?" "Well, what are you going to do about it?" one of them replied. Thus ended the colloquy.

Discovery of the Cause of Cholera.—The English papers tell us that Dr. Brittan and Mr. Swayne, of Bristol, have recently discovered a connection between epidemic cholera and fungous organisms—minute microscopic plants—existing in the atmosphere and waters of infected places. Dr. Alison, of Birmingham, and other observers, are said to have detected and "incontrovertibly proved" the existence of these organisms in the air and water of cholera districts, and in the bodies of cholera patients. The sporules, or seeds, of the plants, it is alledged, are found existing without the body. the plants themselves receiving their fullest development in the alvine canal, where they are supposed to produce those deadly results which constitute the disease of cholera. The matter is under investigation by the College of Physicians.

An Irish Rebuke.—A lad from the "Green Isle," whose occupation was that of blacking stoves, fire-places and stove-pipes, bearing upon his arm a pot of blacking, with brushes, and other implements of trade, addressed a denizen of the city, who was standing at his door; "Has your honor any stoves to polish this morning? I'm the boy for that business." The person addressed, not being of a courteous manner, gruffly answered, "Go about your business." Pat moved a few steps off, to be out of the reach of a kick, and replied with a knowing wink, "Your honor would not be the worse for a little polishing yourself, I'm thinking."

Divorces in Connecticut.—A clerical gentleman attended the House of Representatives last spring to read prayers, and being politely requested to remain seated near the Speaker, during the debate he found himself the spectator of an unmarrying process, so alien to his own vocation, and so characteristic of the Legislature of Connecticut, that the result was the following:—

IMPROMPTU,

Addressed by a priest to the Legislature of Connecticut.

"For cut-ting all connect-ions famed,
Connect-i-cut is fairly named!
I twain connect in one, but you
Cut those whom I connect in two.
Each legislator seems to say,
What you Connect I cut away." [Calendar.

The "Man in the Moon," of the London Sunday Times, has been cudgeling his brains of late to discover the meaning of the poetry sung by modern African minstrels. Of all the specimens that have excited his attention, none has puzzled him more than that which directed Old Dan Tucker "to get out of the way." "What," he asks, "what was the danger to be apprehended by remaining where he was?—and where was he to get to?—and out of the way of what?

A fellow writing from somewhere in Germany, says:—"We started for some little town in the vicinity of Holstein; I would not undertake to spell or pronounce the name; but if you take Kickapoo and Ojibeway, and mix them up with Ompompanoostic and Passamaquoddy, and pronounce the whole backwards, you will get within about six miles of the name."

A telegraphic dispatch from St. Louis, dated 6th inst., states that an aggravated case of murder lately occurred near Palmyra, Mo., by a negro wretch, who will be burnt alive on Friday. The wretch's crime was a horrible one, though not more horrible than his punishment.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes. Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery. 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 4 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 4 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

PRINCIPLES OF CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

BY PRESIDENT A. MAHAN.

It is quite common for individuals to assume particular declarations of Scripture, designed only to be applied to particular and specific cases, as giving universal rules to be applied in all cases of every kind. The result is, that one part of inspiration is placed in palpable contradiction to others equally important and sacred. An error of this kind has, in our judgment, been fallen into by a large part of the church, in the assumption that the direction given, Matt. 18: 15—17 was designed as a law universal for discipline in respect to all forms of offenses whatever, whether individual or public; when in fact, as we shall see hereafter, it was given as a particular rule for specified cases, to wit, individual and private offenses. The result of this assumption has been, that directions equally sacred pertaining to offenses of other kinds, have been totally overlooked. The church has also been left without any settled principles which she could intelligently apply to all forms of offenses demanding discipline. Suppose, for example, a member of a church has gone to distant regions and there become a notorious pirate, or robber. The church has proof the most absolute of his guilt. Yet she can, by no possibility, get to him, so as to take the first and second steps with him. What must be done? If the passage under consideration be assumed as giving law universal for all forms of offenses, the church must retain the wretch in her bosom till his dying day. She can pass no vote of censure or suspension in respect to him. Indeed, she can, as a body, take no cognizance of his crimes in any form whatever. For the offense, according to this view of the subject, is never to be so much as named in the church, till after the first and second steps have been taken. The church, therefore, has no right to consider any offense in any form. She has no right to appoint a committee to investigate evil reports, or to take the steps referred to. She has no right to do any thing about the offenses of any of her members, till after the case is submitted to her adjudication, by those who have, as individuals, in their private capacity, taken these steps, and failed to bring the offenders to repentance. To do so, would be to set aside a part of the solemn direction of our Saviour; and if a part may be thus set aside, why may not the whole be?

Further, let us suppose that the offender above referred to, should, every time the church is engaged in celebrating the Lord's supper, appear in her midst, and at the close escape without the possibility of individuals taking the first and second steps in a process of discipline. The church, in that case, would be bound to distribute the elements to him, as a brother beloved, and continue to do so every time she celebrated the ordinance. She can know no individual of her body in any other relation, till after those steps have been taken. Such are the necessary and undeniable consequences of assuming this passage as law universal for discipline in respect to all forms of offenses. More of this hereafter.

Special attention is now invited to a consideration of other passages of Scripture bearing upon our present inquiries, for the purpose of a clear and distinct understanding of the true principles of discipline to be applied in all cases. We will introduce the subject by a reference, as the basis of our elucidations, to 2 Cor. 7: 9—11.

> "Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance; for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death. For, behold this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter."

Here we have the form which true repentance for a sin with which the apostle had charged the church at Corinth, in the preceding epistle, assumed, in consequence of the expostulations contained in that epistle. An individual, a member of the church, had been guilty of marrying the wife of his own father, the father being still alive. Compare verse 12 of the chapter before us, with 1 Cor. 5: 1. The church, instead of excommunicating the offender, as they were bound to have done at once, had not even commenced a process of discipline with him in any form. The consequence of such a sin, persisted in on the part of the church, would be the destruction of the offender himself, in the first instance, and, in the next, the fatal corruption of the church who should retain such a criminal in her bosom.

> "For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such an one to satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that you may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." 1 Cor. 5: 3—7.

"That the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus," that is, the only hope of saving the offender himself is his prompt excommunication. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," that is, you will yourselves, if you do not put him away from among you, become as corrupt and guilty as he himself is. The reader will mark particularly the directions which inspiration required the church to pursue in the case referred to. It was not that they should take the first and second steps in discipline, and, if these failed, then to pronounce sentence of excommunication. It was not that they should attempt his reformation in the church, and thus failing, to proceed to extremities. One direction and only one was given, and that was, that as soon as the church should come together, to pronounce sentence of excommunication upon him.

> "And ye are puffed up, and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you. For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such an one unto satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

The great reason urged for this course was, as we have seen, that it was the only means by which the individual could be reclaimed on the one hand, and the church saved from corruption on the other.

For a more full understanding of this subject, we now turn to a consideration of the effects produced upon the church at Corinth, by the reasonings and expostulations of the Apostle. The first result was deep sorrow and regret on account of the course which they had pursued relatively to the criminal. The next was, that this sorrow, which "was after a godly sort," induced in them a form of repentance in all respects approved of God, a repentance no elements of which they had occasion to repent of. This repentance was followed by a course of conduct in all respects what it should have been. The charactetistics of the repentance induced by the godly sorrow exercised by the church, as enumerated by the Apostle, are the following: Carefulness. "What carefulness it [godly sorrow] wrought in you," that is, what haste, promptitude, earnest effort, forwarduess, to do the thing required, to wit, excommunicate the offender. "What clearing of yourselves," that is, apologizing. Those who had not partaken of the sin of the church in the flagrant neglect of duty, exposed the fact, and showed to Titus, Paul's messenger, that they were innocent in the matter. Those, on the other hand, who had sinned, confessed the fact, and condemned and reprobated the sin of the offender, and their own conduct relatively to it. "What indignation," that is, what deep reprobation of the sin, and the sinner who had perpetrated the sin. "What fear," that is, as Mr. Barnes says, "fear lest the thing should be repeated. Fear lest it should not be entirely removed." It implies a fear, that the entire evil might not he corrected, and their duty in the case not fully complied with. "What zeal," zeal to remove the sin by taking the offender from their midst, and doing all that duty required in the case. "What revenge," that is, what prompt and ready execution of the sentence of excommunication upon the offender. "In all things ye have proved yourselves clear in this matter," that is, the entire state of mind induced by the godly sorrow which you exercised, and the course pursued under its influence, is what it should have been. The following important principles pertaining to the discipline of offenders are clearly deducible from the case before us, as binding the church in all similar cases.

1. The first, and only thing for the church to do in all such cases, is to excommunicate the offender, his guilt being clearly ascertained.

2. Any other course, in such cases, tends to the destruction of the individual, and the corruption of the church, and to no other result whatever.

3. No church is in a state which God fully approves, who is not ready thus to avenge all such offenses. The carefulness, the clearing of themselves, the indignation, the fear, the vehement desire, the zeal, the revenge, exercised by the Corinthian church, is the only state of mind and course of conduct which God approves, and will sanction in respect to all similar offenders.

Now, if we can clearly ascertain the characteristics of the offense under consideration, we shall have developed an important principle of discipline to be applied in all cases of a given character. What, then, are the distinguishing characteristics of this case?

One thing is quite evident in respect to it. It was an offense of such a nature, that it must have been perpetrated with a distinct knowledge of the fact that it was sin. No doubt could have rested upon the mind of the offender in respect to its character as a sin. When he perpetrated it, he did it with a distinct knowledge of its criminality.

Equally evident is the fact, that it was a deliberate offense. The individual did not fall in consequence of having come under some sudden, unexpected temptation. The act was deliberately performed, with a distinct knowledge of its character as a sin.

It was, finally, a crime, perpetrated under such circumstances as clearly to indicate established character. The man had entered upon his career of crime with the purpose, distinctly and deliberately formed, to continue in it. Such a case differs fundamentally from crimes, however aggravated in themselves, which are committed under the influence of some sudden temptation. The latter may, and, as we shall see in the progress of this article, do require a different course of treatment from the former. Now, if we suppose, as all Christians will admit, that the inspired direction of the Apostle in the case before us is of any authority at all in respect to the church at the present time, it will follow, as a necessary consequence, that whenever a case occurs bearing the same fundomental characteristics that this one does, the same course of procedure laid down for this one case, will also bind the church in the case supposed. To deny this, is to assume that inspired directions for specific cases are not law for us in cases precisely similar. This would render entirely nugatory a vast majority of the precepts of the Bible; for they are given in this precise form. Inspiration affirms what is demanded in a specific case, leaving us to apply the principle thus revealed to all similar cases.

What, then, is the principle or law of discipline revealed in the inspired direction of the Apostle in this one specific case, the law which binds the church in reference to all offenses bearing the same fundamental characteristics? It is this. Whenever an individual, professing godliness, is found in the deliberate perpetration of known crime, whenever he is detected in carrying out a plan of acknowledged wickedness, so that his character as a criminal stands revealed as established, as would be true in the circumstances supposed, then his reformation is not at all to be sought in the church. He is to be cast out of it at once, as soon as, on proper trial, his guilt is formally established. The adoption of any other course in such a case, tends not to the reformation, but destruction of the offender, not to the purity, but corruption of the entire church to which he belongs. If any use at all is to be made, as law in cases of discipline, of the inspired direction relatively to the case under consideration, this must be it. No other intelligent use can be made of it.

I will give one or two cases in illustration of the principle under consideration, as I understand it. A superintendant of a Sabbath school, in an eastern city, blasted the virtue of one of his teachers, who, till she fell a victim to his designs, had sustained a most unblemished reputation. On examination of the case, the church found that the fell deed had been the result of a plan systematically carried on for many months. What should be done in such a case? One, and only one thing. Prompt and immediate excommunication. All hope of saving the criminal himself from death, and the church from corruption, depends upon this one course being adopted.

An individual of high standing in the church and community, in one of the towns of New England, had been accustomed for many years to spend a certain portion of each year abroad. Before leaving, he always invited the church to hold a special prayer meeting at his house, and ever took his leave of them with a solemn admonition to be all found walking in the ways of the Lord, on his return. The night following he would leave with one or more stolen horses of his neighbors', and all the treasures he would bring with him on his return were found to be the fruit of crimes rendering him a candidate for the penitentiary. What would be the inspired direction of the Apostle to that church in respect to such a case? It would be this, and this only:—

> 1 Cor. 5: 3—7. "For I verily, as absent in the body, but present in spirit, have judged already as though I were present, concerning him who hath so done this deed, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such an one unto satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us."

What carefulness, yea, what clearing of herself, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge, will every church manifest towards all offenders of such a character, found in her bosom—every church, we say, who is in harmony with the spirit and express teachings of inspiration relatively to sin. The church, as constituted and designed by its divine founder, is the asylum for the penitent, the poor in spirit, and the broken hearted. In it, the bruised reed is not broken, nor the smoking flax quenched. But it is not the hiding-place of crime. The deliberate perpetrator of foul wrong is not to have a place there, no, not for a moment after his crimes have, through proper trial, been ascertained. Nor is the church the place to attempt the reformation of such men. They belong to the world. Among them, therefore, they are to be placed, and if ever re-admitted to the bosom of the church, they are to be received as those who have been converted from the world. The adoption of any other course in such cases, is not only contrary to the express teachings of inspiration, but its tendency is evil and only evil; evil to the offenders themselves, and evil to the church. If the church does not proceed to exercise discipline in such cases, she becomes a partaker of the sin which she tolerates, and her real moral corruption will be equal to that of the criminals whom she fellowships. If she attempts their reformation within her bosom, she presents a temptation to them, almost, if not quite, irresistibly strong, to make hypocritical professions of reformation. An individual who has been perpetrating crime under the mask of religion, will be irresistibly tempted to repeat his hypocrisy in the form of professed repentance, if the church will hold out inducements to it, by attempting his reformation within her bosom. Such a course has no tendency to purify the church from criminals, one great object of discipline, but to fill it with hypocrites. The temptation to a hypocritical profession, it should also be borne in mind, is strong in exact proportion to the grossness of the offense of which the criminal has been guilty. The same is true also of the feeling of remorse, which is likely to be mistaken for repentance. The tendency, then, of attempting to reform offenders within the church, is to generate and then retain in its bosom the basest hypocrites on earth. Such a course tends to no other result whatever. It also tends to divide and distract the church itself. Many members will assume those signs of remorse, which will certainly exist, and professions of repentance, such as practiced hypocrites know well how to make, and certainly will make, in the circumstances supposed, are indications of genuine repentance. Others, of course, will judge differently. Parties will be formed, which will very likely bite and devour one another, until they are consumed one of another.

Contrast with the above, the tendency of strict adherence to the apostolic injunction under consideration. Such a course at once frees the church from all imputations from the world, on account of any crimes perpetrated by her members. Any society, and above all the church of the living God, is honored by the exclusion of criminals from their association. Prompt exclusion of criminals from the church also tends to preserve the conscience and heart of the church in a proper state towards offenses. Offenses, in the estimation of all her members, become fearful things.

Nor is the influence of such a course of less salutary tendency upon offenders. Let those individuals, who, by practicing crime under the cloak of religion, have made her their refuge, be told, that no professions of theirs can have any influence to restore them to the confidence or fellowship of the church. Nothing will do this, but the fruits of holiness in lives of strict obedience to Christ, and the spirit of Christ thus manifested. All motives to hypocritical professions of repentance, the great sin to which they are exposed, are taken away, and they are thrown upon the only influences adapted to secure their real reformation, to wit, the idea of restoration to a standing in the confidence and fellowship of the church, through a life of "righteousness and true holiness." The entire influence of the church is thus brought to bear upon the very point on which their salvation turns. If they can have any hope of restoration to confidence by professed repentance, such professions will certainly be made, and they will remain hypocrites still; yes, if possible, tenfold more the children of hell than before. Their salvation depends upon this temptation being taken away. Let them at once be put out of the church, with the distinct understanding that professions of repentance will not avail to restore them to confidence or fellowship, either, that when they shall by their lives reveal characters worthy of confidence and fellowship, they will be most gladly restored to both, and this temptation is not only taken away, but they are placed in circumstances of all others best adapted to secure their salvation. The strong reprobation manifested in their prompt exclusion from the church, tends above all things else to break the power of their sinful propensities in the first instance, while the hope of restoration to full and cordial fellowship by a life of virtue and obedience, gives to all the motives and influences of the gospel the greatest efficacy in inducing real genuine repentance. This, I can not but think is the true idea of the Apostle in the declaration, "to deliver such a man over to satan," that is, exclude from the company of the faithful, and place among the world, the followers of satan where he belongs, "for the destruction of the flesh," (the breaking of the power of carnal propensities,) "that the spirit may be saved in the day of Jesus Christ," by his real conversion. I sincerely question the fact whether the real reformation of a confirmed hypocrite was ever secured upon any other principles.

An objection against the view of the subject presented above may by some be drawn from Titus 3: 10.

> "A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject."

In this case the reformation of the offender is to be sought in the church. He is to be twice admonished, and that without reformation, before excommunication is to be resorted to. The reason for this direction, in this case, is obvious. The simple fact that important error has been embraced, is not in itself proof of total subversion of character. But remaining in such error, after proper means for recovery have been used, is. Hence such means are to be used until the fact of moral subversion has been ascertained. Then the delinquent is to be rejected, and put out of the church. The direction of inspiration in this case, as contrasted with that given in the case of the offender in Cor. 5: 1—5, developes therefore another important principle of discipline, namely: when an offense has been committed which in itself, and under the circumstances of its occurrence, does not imply total subversion, as the continued deliberate perpetration of crime does, then the reformation of the offender is to be sought within the church, and he is not to be cast out of it, till resistance to admonition proves that he is a subverted man. To this class belong those referred to in Titus 3: 10, and all cases of offenses under sudden temptation. In Gal. 6: 1, the church is directed by inspiration to reprove, rebuke, and exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine, making a difference between such and gross deliberate offenders, pulling the former out of the fire. The manifest fact that inspiration makes this difference between these classes of offenses, demanding immediate excommunication in one instance, and patient, persevering efforts for reformation, before resort is had to extremities, in the other, shows clearly, that we had rightly announced the principles of discipline, thus far.

A BLESSED FAMILY.—Mr. Apisoghom Hachadoorian, the first pastor of the Evangelical Armenian Church in Constantinople, who was so early called away from his labors, was the first of his family who embraced the truth as it is Jesus. Afterwards, chiefly through his influence, two of his brothers were converted, one of whom became his successor in his pastoral office in Constantinople, a station which he still lives to adorn; and the other is now a very promising member of the Theological Seminary at Bebek, having the sacred ministry in view. Since the death of the oldest brother, both the father and mother have become pious, and also a sister, who is now a much-esteemed member in the Female Seminary in Pera. The father, now an aged man, is an office-bearer in the church.

CALIFORNIA.—Southey, in his "Common Place Book," quotes from Wither, an English poet, who wrote in the sixteenth century, the following lines. If there is not much poetry in them, there is a great deal of truth:—

I've heard those say that travel to the West,
Whence this beloved metal is increas't,
That in the places where such miners be,
Is neither grass, nor herb, nor plant, nor tree.
And like enough;—for this at home I find,
Those who too earnestly employ the mind
About that trash, have hearts, I dare uphold,
As barren as the place where men dig gold.

Father Matthew was lately invited to Georgia, by Judge Lumpkin, President of the State Temperance Society, who now writes a long letter revoking the invitation! Something about Slavery is at the bottom.

GENTILITY'S POOR.

BY MRS. M. E. HEWITT.

Oh! not the beggar who seeks your door,
In his tatters, unshamed, bedight;
But Gentility's sensitive, suffering poor,
Shall waken my song to-night.

For boldly the beggar may wear his rags
In the crowded and sunlit street;
And bold at your portal he knocks, and begs
For raiment, and food to eat.

I know he is friendless, and starved, and cold,
And the storm whistles through the chinks;
But never he hoardeth his want untold,
Nor fears what his neighbor thinks.

And never he shrinks in the world's turmoil,
Where Gentility strives for bread;
And nothing he knows of the wearisome toil
Of the secret needle and thread.

The beggar is houseless, outcast, forlorn,
Too wretched to need your curse;
But he knows not the dun and fears not the scorn
That waits on an empty purse.

The beggar is lean—want maketh him so,
Pain causes his sinews to shrink;
But nothing he recks of the brain-wasting flow
Of Poverty's slow pen and ink.

Alas! for the neediness, pride restrained
From the worldly whose sneer we dread—
For the pride, like the ancient criminal, chained
The living unto the dead.

Alas! alas! for Gentility's heir,
Untutored in work-a-day thrift,
Whose portion is poverty, striving and care,
And who lives by making a shift.

JOSEPH WOLF.

This eccentic genius, who has traveled over the Christian and Pagan world, is a true cosmopolite, and feels that all men, Jew, Turk, Scythian, barbarian, bond or free, are brothers to him. He has addressed the following good-natured letter to the Romans.

TO THE CITIZENS OF ROME.

ROMANS,—Many happy days were passed by me within your walls, when I was, in the year 1816 to 1818, first pupil in the Collegio Romans, where I had the honor of studying togother with Counts Ferretti, Mamiani, Menochio and Tosi; and studied Ecclesiastical History under Don Piedro (now Cardinal) Ostini, who, as you are aware, knew skillfully to shift from the party of Napoleon to that of Pius VII., after the latter was restored to his papal chair in the Vatican. I then was transferred to the College of the Propaganda, by the excellent Cardinal Litta, but having argued openly, not only against the infallibility of the Pope, but also against the right of the Church to burn heretics, I was banished from your interesting city in the year 1818, on the 5th of April.

Romans! many things have passed in the world; the "overturning, overturning, overturning," in Ezekiel 21: 27, has commenced; and it will continue until He shall come, whose right it is; and then he shall set up that form of government upon earth to which all nations shall willingly submit and rejoice.

Until that time, neither Louis Napoleon in France, nor the Constituent Assembly in Italy, shall better the condition of the world. But, while I am convinced of this grand truth as to all attempts to reform the state of the world without Christ, I cannot, for that very reason, but call on you, Roman citizens, to begin at once breaking asunder, not the temporal, but the spiritual yoke of the Pope, who, to the disappointment of all his admirers, has acted less in the spirit of a vicegerent of Christ upon earth, and more in the spirit of the Anti-Christ, than the Popes in the middle ages.

Our blessed Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ, was led to the cross. Peter, whose successor the Roman Pontiff affects to be, drew the sword and struck a servant of the High Priest, and smote off his ear; and though the sword was here drawn to save the life of the Lord from heaven himself, the Lord said to him, "Put up again thy sword into its place." But what did Pius IX.? He leaves his children at Rome like a coward, escapes to Gaeta, and from thence he exhorts his children in France to unsheath the sword against his children in Rome; not for the purpose of saving either Christ or his church, but for retaking a paltry temporal dominion, which his predecessors in the dark ages have grasped, and which he blasphemously calls the patrimony of Peter; and after General Oudinot regained it for him, he sends his congratulations.

Romans! therefore proclaim loudly, that you are now convinced that Popery is, and has ever been, a lie; that it can never be reformed, but must be destroyed; and pronounce before the whole world that you are Bible Christians. JOSEPH WOLFF,

Vicar of Isle Brewers, near Langport,

ANECDOTE—FAITH AND WORKS.

On the Frith of Forth was an old ferryman, a man of much thought and observation, but of few words; a constant student of the Bible, and a firm believer in its truths. Among his patrons were two loquacious companions, whose business led them across the river once a week. One of them was, as he supposed, a high-toned Calvinist, while the other imagined himself to be equally well-grounded in the tenets of Arminius. Their conversation always turned upon some doctrinal point. The ferryman was frequently annoyed by the repetition of faith on one side, and works on the other, because they were used in a sense so different from their real import, and so destructive of their scriptural harmony.

At length the patient old man felt obliged to interfere. He said nothing, but fell upon the following expedient. Upon one of his oars he painted the word FAITH; upon the other, WORKS. It was not long before the zealous but friendly disputants applied for a passage over the Forth. Upon entering the deepest part of the river, where the swollen water rushed down with fearful violence, the ferryman took in "FAITH," and pulled away upon "WORKS" with all his might. The boat went round and round, much to the annoyance and terror of the two passengers. "Put out the other oar," said one of them, in a loud and angry tone. "Very well," was the calm reply of the old man, at the same time taking in "WORKS," and relying on "FAITH" alone. The experiment with this oar produced the same result, and drove the witnesses of it to the conclusion, that the ferryman was "out of his head." The old man, however, continued his "practical demonstrations" on the water, until he thought the friends were prepared to see two things in connection. He then called their attention to the names of his oars, "I have tried your way," said he, "and yours; and you have seen the result. Now observe my way." And giving a steady hand to each oar, the little boat soon acknowledged the power of their harmonious strokes, by the straight and rapid flight which she took for the landing. THE BISHOP AND THE BIRDS.

A Bishop, who had for his arms two field fares, with the motto, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?" thus explains the matter to an intimate friend:—

"Fifty or sixty years ago, a little boy resided at a village near Dillengen, on the banks of the Danube. His parents were poor, and almost as soon as the boy could walk, he was sent into the woods to pick up some sticks for fuel. When he grew older, his father taught him to pick the juniper-berries, and carry them to a neighboring distiller, who wanted them, for making hollands. Day by day the poor boy went to his task, and on his road he passed by the open windows of the village school, where he saw the schoolmaster teaching a number of boys of about the same age as himself. He looked at these boys with feelings of envy, so earnestly did he long to be among them. He was quite aware it was in vain to ask his father to send him to school, for he knew that his parents had no money to pay the schoolmaster; and he often passed the whole day thinking, whilst he was gathering the juniper-berries, what he could possibly do to please the schoolmaster, in the hope of getting some lessons. One day, when he was walking sadly along, he saw two of the boys belonging to the school trying to set a bird-trap, and he asked one what it was for. The boy told him that the schoolmaster was very fond of field fares, and that they were setting the trap to catch some. This delighted the poor boy, for he recollected that he had often seen a great number of these birds in the juniper wood, where they came to eat the berries, and he had no doubt but he could catch some.

The next day the little boy borrowed an old basket of his mother, and when he went to the wood he had great delight to catch two field fares. He put them in the basket, and tying an old handkerchief over it, he took them to the schoolmaster's house. Just as he arrived at the door, he saw the two little boys who had been setting the trap, and with alarm he asked them if they had caught any birds. They answered in the negative; and the boy, his heart beating with joy, gained admittance into the schoolmaster's presence. In a few words he told how he had seen the boys setting the trap, and how he had caught the birds to bring them as a present to the master.

"A present, my good boy!" cried the schoolmaster; "you do not look as if you could afford to make presents. Tell me your price, and I will pay it to you, and thank you besides."

"I would rather give them to you, sir, if you please," said the boy.

The schoolmaster looked at the boy, who stood before him, with bare head and feet, and ragged trousers that reached only half way down his naked legs. "You are a very singular boy!" said he, "but if you will not take money you must tell me what I can do for you, as I cannot accept your present without doing something for it in return. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"Oh, yes!" said the boy, trembling with delight, "you can do for me what I should like better than any thing else."

"What is that?" asked the schoolmaster.

"Teach me to read," cried the boy, falling on his knees. "Oh, dear, kind sir, teach me to read!"

"The schoolmaster complied. The boy came to him at his leisure hours, and learned so rapidly that the schoolmaster recommended him to a nobleman residing in the neighborhood. This gentleman, who was as noble in mind as in birth, patronized the poor boy, and sent him to school at Ratisbon. The boy profited by his opportunities; and when he rose, as he soon did, to wealth and honors, he adopted two field fares as his arms.

"What do you mean?" cried the Bishop's friend.

"I mean," returned the Bishop, with a smile, "that the poor boy was MYSELF."

WHRE THEY LEARN IT.—"I don't see where my children learn such things," is one of the most common phrases in a mother's vocabulary. A little incident, which we happened to be an eye-witness to, may perhaps help to solve the enigma. We smiled a little at the time, but we have thought a good deal of it since, and we trust not without profit.

"Bub," screamed out a bright-eyed girl, somewhat under six years of age, to a youngster who was seated on the curb-stone, making hasty pudding of the mud in the gutter; "Bub, you good-for-nothing little scamp, you come right into the house this minute, or I'll beat you till the skin comes off."

"Why, Angelina, Angelina, dear, what do you mean? where did you learn such talk?" exclaimed her mother, in a wondering tone, as she stood on the steps, courtesying to a friend.

Angelina looked up very innocently, and answered, "Why, mother, you see we are playing, and he's my little boy, and I am scolding him, just as you did me this morning, that's all."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 29, 1849.

"NOT THE JEWISH BUT THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH."

At the risk of tiring the patience of our readers, we present some additional strictures upon Mr. Bennett's sermon. The following extract introduces the discussion of his third question:—

"Does God, in his word, command all nations to sanctify the seventh day of the Jewish week? First—It has already been inferred that the precept enjoining the duties of the Sabbath is moral, from its being found in the Decalogue. The inference is inevitable. And from examination of the character and tendency of those duties, they are found to be necessary to the healthy state of our moral natures. An appeal, then, to the fourth commandment, to prove that Sabbatic duties are binding on all, at all times, is, in this place, unnecessary. Still, should that commandment be adduced to establish any particular day as the Sabbath-day, there is reason to examine its pertinence before it is admitted. For the sake of brevity, I will not repeat the commandment. It is familiar to you all. The Sabbath is there said to come on the seventh day, not the seventh day of the week, much less the seventh day of the Jewish week. But unless the commandment specifies when the week for the whole world shall begin, we are left in ignorance on what day in any seven the Sabbath will fall. This would certainly be so, if we were confined to the commandment solely for information on this subject. Sunder the Decalogue from the Bible—carry it to the heathen who have no knowledge of the Bible, nor of those who have been instructed by it—will they be able to determine the day of sacred rest? They would understand, that it was their duty, after six days labor, to rest on the seventh. More than this, they could not learn from the fourth commandment. You must see, my brethren, that if we are in duty bound to begin our reckoning so as to have the seventh day fall on some particular day, to the rejection of all others, the information necessary to our duty must come from some source, outside of the commandment. Since God by precept has established an institution which he willed to be universal, it is reasonable to believe that the precept contains whatever is necessary to the institution. No particular day is specified in the precept, therefore no particular day is necessary to the institution. We all believe there is no positive precept in the Decalogue. We have seen, and it is admitted by Sabbatarians,* that a precept fixing the day on which the cycle shall end, is positive. Now, since the precept, (if there be such,) fixing the day, cannot turn from its positive nature, be admitted in the Decalogue, it necessarily follows, that none of the ten precepts can be plead in favor of this, that, or the other day, as the Sabbath-day. It may here be asked, if the day of rest was not determined for the Jews? Certainly it was. Well, can any divine precept be pointed out, authorizing us to sanctify some other day. No, I think not. Why, then, are we not bound to sanctify the last day of the Jewish week? Because positive duties are not binding on all people, in virtue of their having been imposed on one people.

"Were not the penalties for violating the Sabbath determined for the Jews? Certainly they were. Can any Divine precept be pointed out authorising governments to substitute some other penalty? No, I think not. Why then are not governments bound to exact the same penalties? Because, positive duties are not binding on all people in virtue of having been imposed on one people.

"Let it be noted here, that we do not reject either the Jewish time of rest, or Jewish penalties, for violating it, because they are not referred to in the two tables. Besides those, there are many moral precepts in the Mosiac economy. To love God and our neighbors, to be kind to strangers and the poor, not to oppress the hireling nor suffer sin on our neighbor, are moral. Arising from the relations which man must ever sustain, he will ever have a moral interest in attending to them. All the above cited precepts are not formally re-enacted in the New Testament; although a perfect system of morals, as is that, must embrace, specifically, or in general principles, all moral duties. If we were called upon to decide, without reference to the New Testament, what duties enjoined in the Old Testament are binding on us and what are not, we should be obliged to divide them into moral and positive, or those which have a moral character from the nature and relation of things, and those which have no moral character aside from the precept enjoining them; and after such division, we must regard the former and disregard the latter. Now, since the fourth commandment does not determine when the Sabbath shall be, otherwise than that it shall be the next after six days labor, and since there is no other precept, touching the day of the Sabbath in the Old Testament whose language extends its authority beyond the former dispensation, and since a positive precept, found in that temporary dispensation cannot be, by inference, extended to us, we may ask by what authority, from the Bible, the whole multitude of the church are treated as Sabbath-breakers. Can it still be on the ground that God in his Word commands all nations to keep the seventh of the Jewish week?"

Mr. B. here speaks of the Jewish week, and, on page 46, of the Christian week! "The seventh of the Christian week is that day." Well, why not? The terms Jewish Sabbath, and Christian Sabbath, have become cant expressions in everybody's mouth; and why not also Jewish week, and Christian week? One rests on as good foundation as the other. But our author ought to know, that the division of time denominated week originated in the work of creation—that its beginning and end were then fixed—and that Judaism had nothing to do in determining this matter. We answer our author's question very promptly, therefore. God does not command all nations to sanctify the seventh day of the Jewish week, for the simple reason that there is no such week, and never was. But he does command all nations to sanctify the seventh day of the creation week. Nothing can be plainer than that when God promulged the fourth commandment from Sinai, he commanded the people to keep holy the day which he had already "blessed and sanctified." He referred them to a historical fact, of which they were supposed to be not ignorant, viz., that on a certain day he did rest from all his work which he had made. He declared that he had blessed and sanctified that day, and that day only, "because that in it," and in it only, "he had rested from all his work which God created and made." (Compare Gen. 2: 3.) That day, so blessed and sanctified—that day, in which he himself had rested, was the one—the very one, to the exclusion of all others—which he commanded the people to keep holy in its weekly return. And that day, as a mere child can see, was the seventh or last day of the creation week. Now, if the fourth commandment does not enjoin the observance of the seventh day of the creation week, it enjoins nothing. To keep holy a day which God has not previously constituted holy, is no part of the injunction. And if the time when the creation week begins and ends has been lost, and the knowledge of it never restored, the commandment enjoins an impossibility, and, for that very reason, has no binding force.

But we begin to see the reason why Mr. B. was so anxious to make it appear, if he could, that the precept enjoining the Sabbath is moral, and not positive. "If we are in duty bound to begin our reckoning so as to have the seventh day fall on some particular day, to the rejection of all others, the information necessary to our duty must come from some source outside of the commandment." And this, in Mr. B.'s opinion, would render it a positive precept. Well, it is a fact that the information necessary to our duty does come from some source outside of the commandment; that is, it is from some other source besides the commandment, that we learn where our reckoning must begin, so as to have the seventh in order fall upon the day in which God rested. If this establishes the positive nature of the precept, be it so. But it must not be overlooked, that although the fourth commandment does not embody within itself all the information necessary to our duty, it nevertheless points us to the proper source of information, and thus precludes all mistake. It points us to the historical fact that God rested on the seventh day of the first week of time; and as that fact is an important part of the inspired record, it is just as necessarily a part of the sabbatic law as if it were embodied in the commandment itself. But our author seems to have started with the notion, that a positive precept could not be admitted into the decalogue, with any propriety—that it would be absurd to have it there, "intrenched in the midst of those which are confessedly moral and indestructible." Our first article exposed the error of this notion. Then, because he finds the precept enjoining the Sabbath in the decalogue, he concludes that it must be moral in contradistinction from positive. And now he sets forth the very plausible idea, that "since God, by precept, has established an institution which he willed to be universal—[he uses the word universal in the sense of moral]—it is reasonable to believe that the precept contains whatever is necessary to the institution." He will not allow us to go "outside of the commandment" for any part of the information necessary to our duty. When he gets our consent to be tied up in this way, he puts on an air of triumph, and says, "Sunder the decalogue from the Bible—carry it to the heathen who have no knowledge of the Bible, nor of those who have been instructed by it—will they be able to determine the day of sacred rest? They would understand, that it was their duty, after six days' labor, to rest on the seventh. More than this they could not learn from the fourth commandment." Thus, to his own satisfaction, and, doubtless to the satisfaction of all others who are willing to be confirmed in error, Mr. B. has proved, that the fourth commandment requires nothing more than that we rest one day after six days' labor!

Another Slavery Project.—The New York Post says that "a subscription has been started, which it is proposed to extend indefinitely, as a joint stock for the purchase of negroes in Maryland, giving them their freedom, but requiring them by indentures to work for five years in the California mines for gold. The Attorney General Johnson is said to be one of the promoters." We doubt whether the slaves will gain much by this project. It is said that seven years labor on a sugar plantation will use up the average of negroes. If so, we would not give much for what will be left of a negro after five years digging in the gold mines.

Welcome to Elihu Burritt.—On the evening of Fifthday last, Nov. 22d, Elihu Burritt, the editor of the Worcester Christian Citizen, and more generally known as the "learned blacksmith," received a public welcome at the Tremont Temple, Boston. Ex-Mayor Quincy presided, and the meeting was addressed by several Delegates to the recent Peace Convention at Paris, and by Mr. Burritt himself. Mr. B. appealed to America to lead the Peace movement, because all other fields of distinction had been pre-occupied, and gave many plausible reasons in favor of the Peace movement and the brotherhood of men. Hon. Amos Tuck, the Representative of the 1st Congressional District of New Hampshire in Congress, expressed a hope that his auditors would all live to see a World's Peace Congress assembled at Faneuil Hall.

MR. STEPHENSON ON THE SABBATH—AGAIN.

Mr. Stephenson's Second Discourse was preached from Acts 20: 7—"And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight."

After giving a synopsis of his former discourse, Mr. S. deduced the doctrine, That the Sabbath has, by divine appointment, been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. He first proceeded to remove objections, to make the way, as he said, more easy.

1st Obj. That those who favor this doctrine are opposed to the Sabbath institution. This objection is in the following words: "I could not forbear asking myself, why is there now such bitter opposition to an institution that was once the delight of both God and man? Why do men hate with such perfect hatred what Jehovah made, and blessed, and sanctified, before sin had entered into the world? Why should this daughter of innocence be spurned from every door, and loaded with the damning reproach of Judaism, while her twin sister, marriage, sucks the breasts, and is dandled upon the knees of orthodoxy?" (Vindication, pp. 12, 13.) Now, said Mr. S., no person can hate an institution without a motive. But what motive could we have for hating that to which we give so much attention? Do we not spend as much time in Sabbath exercises as those who keep the seventh day? Do we not conscientiously devote the seventh part of our time to the service of God? And do we not take great pleasure in our Sabbath exercises?* This author's design was to cast odium upon us.

2d Obj. That the change of the Sabbath implies the abrogation of the fourth commandment. "The law written on the heart of man said nothing about keeping holy any other day but the seventh; for all admit that, had Adam not fallen, there never would have been any other holy day. If, then, this law does not now require the sanctification of the seventh day, the fourth commandment must have been annihilated." (Vindication, p. 31.) Mr. S. then repeated what he had said before, that the fourth commandment does not, in the moral part of it, require the sanctification of any particular day of the week, but of the Sabbath institution. It is not the seventh day that we are to remember, but the Sabbath day, which, like a fast day, or a thanksgiving day, may be any day of the week. The fourth commandment remains, and, if the Sabbath can not be proved from it, it can not be proved at all.

3d Obj. That the reformers did not teach the change of the day by divine authority. A passage was quoted from the "Vindication," p. 7, in which it is asserted, 'that the early French and Genevan reformers, with Calvin at their head, had taught the abrogation of the fourth commandment, as a ceremonial institution;' and 'that even Turretin, at a later period, had taught that the fourth commandment is partly ceremonial, and that it was necessary to change the Sabbath from the seventh day, in order to put a difference between Jews and Christians.' Mr. S. admitted all these assertions to be true, but said that the reformers were placed in peculiar circumstances, and had to do with two very different classes of men. He added, that the author of the "Vindication" designed to convey a false impression, to the disadvantage of the reformers.

4th Obj. That our Lord and his Apostles put honor upon the seventh day. So they did, before the resurrection of Christ, but not afterwards. There is no evidence that Christ met his disciples on the seventh day, after his resurrection, as he did on the first. It would be hard to prove, from the New Testament, that the Sabbath is the seventh day; but this we admit. The Apostles did meet with the Jews and Gentiles on the seventh day, but not to put honor upon it, as a divine institution. They preached on that day because it was the usual day of worship among the Jews.

5th Obj. There is no positive command for keeping the Christian Sabbath. True, there is not. Nor is there for many other things that are easily inferred. There is no positive command for admitting infants to the seal of God's covenant, nor for admitting females to the communion table; but these things are easily inferred. So it is with the Sabbath. The Apostles did not say to the Jews, 'Thus saith Jesus Christ, keep the Christian Sabbath,' because they did not believe in him, and to have done so would have excited their prejudices. The Christian Sabbath was left to come in gradually, along with the other ordinances of the New Testament dispensation.

Mr. S. then proceeded to argue the question—1. From prophecy. Ezekiel 43: 27—"And when those days are expired, it shall be, that the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt-offerings upon the altar, and your peace-offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God." This text refers to New Testament times. The services of the people of God were then to be offered, not on the seventh day, or Jewish Sabbath, but on the eighth day, or first day of the week, and so forward, without any change, to the end of time. Several texts were quoted to prove that the altar, priests, and offerings, are terms applicable to New Testament times. Psalm 118: 22, 23, 24—"The stone which the builders refused is become the head-stone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes. This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." Jesus Christ entered into his rest on the day of his resurrection, and it was then that he became the head-stone of the corner, when he was declared to be the Son of God with power. I know some tell us, that he entered into his rest, and became the head of the corner, when he ascended into heaven; but I think little of that theology that would send him wandering in a kind of purgatory for six weeks. True, the place of his rest, and some attendant circumstances, are to be referred to his ascension. But this is the day of gladness—the day of his glorious resurrection; and let us rejoice and be glad in it. It was on this day, too, that the time of commencing the Sabbath was changed. The Jewish Sabbath began in the evening. The Christian Sabbath begins at midnight. Christ arose, probably, about midnight, and what an hour of darkness! How significant of that darkness when, at midnight, the children of Israel came out of Egypt! There was a chasm of about six hours between the last Jewish and the first Christian Sabbath. An awful chasm, indeed! And how significant! Thus those who begin their Sabbath at sundown, begin their gladness six hours before there is any cause of joy.*

2. Christ put signal honors upon the first day. (1.) He rose on that day, and changed the time of commencing it, as above stated. The two disciples who traveled to Emmaus, seven and a half miles from Jerusalem, took their evening meal there, and then returned to Jerusalem. It must have been long after sundown when they arrived at the city, yet they found the disciples assembled, and it was still the first day of the week. John 20: 19. (2.) He met with the disciples on that day. He appeared to them on the day of his resurrection, and again after eight days, which we know means on the next Lord's day. But some say that the disciples were not met for worship, but for fear of the Jews. This can not be; for, if they had wished to avoid the persecution of the Jews, they would have floated with the tide, and avoided assembling together.† (3.) He poured out the Spirit on the first day upon the disciples. Acts 2: 1. The day of Pentecost was certainly the first day of the week, as can easily be proved. And it is a remarkable fact, that it was on this day that the Apostles first publicly proclaimed the gospel. I know some tell us, that Christ poured out his Spirit on this day to signalize the day of Pentecost; ‡ but is it likely that he would thus signalize an abolished feast of the Old Testament dispensation? No; it was to put honor on the Lord's day, the first day of the week.

3. I plead apostolic precept and practice. And first, the text contains an apostolic example. The Apostles had been at Troas seven days, and there is no evidence that they had honored the Jewish Sabbath. This was a sacramental occasion. Why did they not honor the Jewish Sabbath by celebrating their communion on it, and commence their journey on the first day, if the Sabbath had not been changed? 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2, contains a precept. The Apostle gives a general command to all the churches of God to take collections for the poor on the first day of the week. It was the custom of the Jews to do this on their Sabbath, and so it ought to be the custom of Christians on theirs.

4. The Lord Jesus Christ claims this day as his own, (Rev. 1: 10.) It is the Lord's day. Mr. S. here gave a feeling description of the Apostle John in the Isle of Patmos. This Lord's day must be the first day of the week, because Christ never signalized any other day by doing any great work upon it. ||

5. It has been the universal practice of the church to keep the first-day. This of course is no conclusive argument, but it is of some consequence. Mr. S. did not attempt to prove the assertion, but appealed to the history of the church, and to the fact that in the Apostle's days no one ever objected to keeping the first day in place of the seventh. It was in the fourth century, when the church had become very corrupt, and many had begun to Judaize, that the Council of Ladocea was first called upon to condemn the custom of observing the seventh-day. It was in this time of darkness that a compromise was proposed, similar to that proposed by some in our days. Keep both days, say they. But these compromises in religion are almost always wrong, and especially in this case. The fourth commandment says as plainly, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work," as it forbids work on the seventh. But this compromise says, "Five days are enough to work; rest on two days." Compromises are bad things.

6. Finally, God has signally blessed this day to the conversion of sinners and the building up of saints. Can it be possible, asked Mr. S., that God has permitted his church to go on in the observance of this day, and blessed them in it, if we have been not only holding up a human institution, but neglecting one of his own appointing? No. He who destroyed Nadab and Abihu, when they offered strange fire, would not permit such a state of things.

The discourse was then closed with two earnest appeals to the congregation—1. Brethren, prize the Sabbath (Lord's day.) You look for its weekly return with holy delight. It is the greatest blessing you enjoy here, and you esteem it so. And O, remember, if you are turned away from the Christian Sabbath, you will never get any other. You will lose all these precious privileges. 2. Be not soon shaken in your minds. These are shaking times, and you may depend upon it, whatever is not founded on God's Word will go down, and the sooner the better. Do not, then, be alarmed, though you may even be nonplused by a subtil objector. If you find any difficulties, go to your knees, and ask the Spirit to aid you in understanding your duty. Then read the Bible carefully. But do not read first, and then pray. And when you meet with what you can not understand, go to those who are over you in the Lord, and who have a right to instruct you.

Religious Lectures to Young Men.—The want of sufficient accommodations, in the churches of New York, for young men, strangers in the city, has long been felt, and a means for supplying the deficiency has recently been devised. A committee of young men, selected from several denominations, has made arrangements by which, during the winter, when the city is especially crowded with young men, who have resorted hither for business or professional studies, on each Sunday evening, some church, in a central position, will be opened for their especial use. The use of several churches has been freely tendered. On every occasion, when thus opened, the body of the church will be reserved for young men, and all the seats will be free. Some of the most popular preachers in this city, and the neighboring cities, have consented to preach on these occasions. Among them is Bishop Potter, Drs. Spring, Potts, Bethune, Cheever, Hutton, Krebs, DeWitt, Tyng, Williams, Peck, and Rev. Messrs. Thompson, Styles, Bedell, and Curry.

Protestantism in Hungary.—The Protestants of Hungary have suffered greatly in the recent revolution. Many of the clergymen were put to death with the most atrocious cruelties, and one of the Austrian generals, nominally a Protestant, publicly avowed his opinion, that it was necessary, in order to subdue the nation, to exterminate the Protestant religion. The reaction, however, which must inevitably follow the inhuman butchery of so many devoted pastors, cannot fail to deepen the attachment of the people to the religion of the martyrs; and as the Bible has been freely circulated in Hungary while the doors were open, we anticipate the rapid spread of a pure evangelical piety throughout the nation.

Sunday Legislation.—The Old School Presbyterian Synod of New Jersey—despairing, we suppose, of accomplishing the object by moral and religious means—has determined to ask the Legislature of that State to help put down Sunday traveling. At its recent meeting, "Rev. Drs. Janeway and Magie were appointed a committee to prepare a memorial to the Legislature against the desecration of the Sabbath by the canals and railroads; the memorial to be sent to each minister, with a view of obtaining the signatures of their people."

Fatality at an Idolatrous Festival.—Late English papers give accounts of a terrible loss of life which occurred not long ago at Trichinopoly, India. At an idolatrous festival, held at the top of the high rock, which was attended by an immense concourse of people, a sudden panic occurred, and the multitude from above pressing upon those below, upwards of 400 were suffocated or trodden to death.

Encouraging from Liberia.—A letter from the President of Liberia says that in consequence of a strict blockade by the British squadron, and the rapid extension of American influence at Gallinas, the natives of that territory have determined to abandon the slave traffic, and several hundred captives have been delivered up, which had been collected for exportation.

Toleration in Austria.—The new Constitution ratified in Austria guaranties perfect toleration to all religious sects, and Prince Schwartzenberg, who fills the place of Metternich in the cabinet, has avowed his intention of adhering strictly to its provisions.

A Jew's Sermon.—Rev. Dr. Raphael, a distinguished Jewish lecturer from abroad, is now in this city, and has delivered several discources at the Elm-street Synagogue. Of one of these discourses we find the following report in the Tribune:—

The lecturer chose for his subject the narrative of Abraham sacrificing his son. He reminded his hearers of the special importance of this narrative in the Jewish religion, proved by the frequent mention of this extraordinary act of Abraham in their present supplications for the mercy of God. He then proposed the arrangement of his remarks under these three inquiries: 1st. How does this act of Abraham prove his sincere and most exalted faith and piety? 2d. Why is this narrative given us in sacred Scripture, as Abraham did not carry out his purpose? 3d. What is the practical use to which the subject naturally leads us?

Under the first inquiry, he presented Abraham vividly before us as distinguished for his renown, his wealth, his heroism, and his intimacy with God. Kings and conquerors have obtained an immortal name from their connection with Abraham—have become visible to all subsequent ages in the light of Abraham's glory. His glory, however, consists chiefly in this, that he had frequent communications from God, and was the friend of God. The strongest of all natural feelings could not stand in the way of his obedience to God. It is his extraordinary act in its connection with the clear command of God, and not the act in itself, which reflects so much credit on his faith and piety.

The answer to the second inquiry is, that this narrative has been transmitted down to us, to teach us, first, that true religion requires sacrifices, and triumphs over the mightiest obstacles; secondly, that the sacrifices of true religion are only in appearance, that, in the end, they are precious privileges and even rewards.

Two of the lecturer's hearers were just thirteen years of age, and they had in the preceding service read portions of the law and gone through the ceremony which declares them "sons of the commandment." The lecturer, by a special address to them, availed himself of this opportunity of making an impression on their youthful minds, which probably will be as lasting as life.

Proclamation,

By Hamilton Fish, Governor of the State of N. York

A sense of gratitude to Almighty God for his numerous manifestations of goodness during the past year, calls for a public expression of thanks from a People who have experienced the full measure of blessings which have been extended to us.

Peace and quiet have reigned throughout our land. The labors of the husbandman have been rewarded in the return of the fruits of the earth. Industry has pursued its accustomed walks in all its varied employments, and its votaries have enjoyed honest and well earned rewards. Civil and religious liberty continue to be vouchsafed to all within our borders—and the blessings of the Gospel are extended to all who desire to enjoy its comforts and its consolations. A few weeks since, the whole Nation, in humble dependence, united in earnest prayer to Almighty God to withdraw the grievous pestilence which was ravaging the land; that visitation has passed, and the blessing of public health is restored.

It becomes a grateful and Christian people to acknowledge these mercies, and to render thanks to their bountiful Giver.

I do therefore designate Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November, instant, and do recommend its observance by the People of this State, as a day of Public Thanksgiving to Almighty God.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto signed my name and affixed the Privy Seal of the State, at the [L. S.] City of Albany, this first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine.

HAMILTON FISH.

By order of the Governor:
Robert H. Morris, Private Secretary.

Thanksgiving.—The Presbytery of Brooklyn have issued a circular to their churches, endorsing the Governor's Proclamation for Thanksgiving, and explaining and recommending the proper observance of the day, condemning folly and wantonness, gluttony and inebriation, ungodly indulgences or impious pleasure, extravagance, intemperance, excess in meats or drinks, and all godless or reckless gratification. They also remind the people, that if the cholera has mercifully subsided—if inundation and conflagration and drouth are held in check—if wrecks and explosions and terrific accidents are becoming less frequent, in God's merciful providence, it is not that they may become athiestic and presumptious; other evils are ready at his bidding; he is still the God of Judgment, by whom actions are weighed and spirits are senn; still his quiver is full of arrows; and he can select his mark, and awe the Universe with the contrasts and the severity of God. They, therefore, recommend a religious observance according to the excellent and primitive order of the Church, in dutiful and appropriate ways, obedient to God's Word, so as to secure and enjoy his benediction.

President Taylor on "Thanksgiving."—Many of the secular and religious newspapers have expressed a hope that the President of the United States would anticipate the Governors of the several States, and issue his Proclamation for a National Thanksgiving. Letters of that purport have also been addressed to the President himself. To one from New York City, he replies as follows, under date of Nov. 6:—

Sir,—Your communication of October 12th, in relation to a proclamation for a day of national thanksgiving, was duly received, and, with many others of the same purport, has been considered with the attention which its importance demands. While uniting cordially with the universal feeling of thankfulness to God for his manifold blessings, and especially for the abatement of the pestilence which so lately walked in our midst, I have yet thought it most proper to leave the subject of a thanksgiving proclamation where custom has so long consigned it—in the hands of the Governors of the several States. This decision has been strengthened by the consideration that this is the season usually set apart for that purpose, and that several Governors have already issued their annual proclamations accordingly.

Petition for Peace.—The Corresponding Secretary of the American Peace Society has issued a circular containing a from of petition, such as that Society desires to have sent in to Congress, at its approaching session, from all parts of the country. We copy the petition, and hope that the friends of the cause will see that it is extensively circulated in their respective neighborhoods, and then forwarded to their Representative in Congress for presentation.

Petition.

To the honorable Senate (or H. of R.) of the United States:

The undersigned, inhabitants (or citizens, or legal voters) of ——, in the State of ——, deploring the manifold evils of war, and believing it possible to supersede, in most cases, its alledged necessity, by the timely adoption of wise and feasible substitutes, respectfully request your honorable body to take such action as you may deem best, in favor of Stipulated Arbitration, or a Congress of Nations, for the accomplishment of this most desirable end.

The Slave Trade Suppressed.—The Republic of Liberia has purchased the territory of Grand Cape Mount and Manna, and the Government is taking efficient measures to suppress the slave trade. In a letter to the Rev. Mr. McLain, dated Sept. 23d, President Roberts says:—

"I have the satisfaction now to inform you, that the slave trade at Gallinas is on its last legs, in consequence of the strict blockade of that territory by the British squadron, and the rapid extension of our jurisdiction in that quarter. The natives have determined to abandon the traffic in slaves, and the chiefs have actually delivered to Captain Dunlop, of Her Majesty's ship 'Alert,' all the slaves that have been collected there for exportation, numbering several hundreds, to be taken to Sierra Leone. The foreign slavers have also taken advantage of Captain Dunlop's kindness, and left the Gallinas in one of Her Majesty's vessels for Sierra Leone, having promised Captain Dunlop never again to return for the purpose of engaging in the slave trade."

Lecture on the Sabbath.—On Third-day evening of last week, in the small chapel of the New York University, Rev. J. W. Morton delivered a lecture on the subject of the Sabbath, setting forth his reasons for abandoning the observance of the first day and adopting the seventh day in its stead. The audience was not large, but those who were present were well paid for their attendance.

General Intelligence.

LATEST EUROPEAN NEWS.

By the steamer Caledonia, which arrived at Boston on Sabbath last, we have seven days later news from all parts of Europe.

The English papers contain a great deal of matter relative to Sir John Franklin's Expedition; the general opinion being, that he is safe, and will soon be heard from direct. The Government had appointed Nov. 15 for a day of general thanksgiving, on account of the abatement of the cholera.

In France all is tranquil, and satisfaction is expressed with the new Ministry and the new position of the President.

The Pope, it is said, is about to return to Rome, and a French ship has been sent to transport him from Portici. He returns the absolute sovereign of the Roman people, with his throne founded on foreign bayonets! We are told that the shop-keepers of the city wish for his return, because their craft cannot thrive otherwise.

The Emperor of Russia, though he yields to the popular feeling in relation to the Hungarian refugees, expresses a good deal of dissatisfaction with England and France on account of their interference in the matter.

Several executions have taken place in Austria since the previous dates. One of the victims was accused of having put to death seventeen Wallachians whom he had orders to transport to Wallachia. On the other hand, Haynau published at Presburgh, on the 29th of October, an amnesty, which includes all those political prisoners whose sentence does not condemn them to more than a twelvemonth's imprisonment. Fifty-six of the numerous prisoners in Hungary were liberated in consequence of this amnesty. Thirty-four fresh condemnations had been pronounced in Gallicia, the sentence varying from confinement with hard labor for the term of four years down to the term of two months. The Austrian "official" prints portray the sufferings of the refugees at Widdin as being very great, and state that from fear of being obliged to embrace Mohammedanism, a great number of them desired to return to their own country. From 2,000 to 3,000 had already returned, and were to enter the Austrian service. Generals Bem and Guyon were using every exertion to prevent others from following their example. The Jesuits are fast returning to Austria. Some of them have already arrived at Konigsgratz, and preparations were being made in Vienna for the reception of the female Jesuits of the order of the Redeemer.

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY IN MACAO.

The Secretary of the Navy has received a letter from Commodore Geisinger, dated U. S. Flag Ship Plymouth, Aug. 6, 1849, from which the following is an extract:—

I have the honor to communicate to the Department information of a horrid tragedy, attended with circumstances of unusual atrocity and barbarity, which occurred in the immediate neighborhood of the City of Macao, on the afternoon of the 22d inst. His Excellency, J. M. Ferreira de Amerel, Governor of Macao, who was taking his customary evening ride on horseback, accompanied by his aid-de-camp, both unarmed, was waylaid by some six or eight Chinamen, and brutally assasinated on the public road at a short distance within the barrier gate that separates the Portuguese from the Chinese territory. His body was much mutilated, and his head and hand (he had formerly lost his right arm) were cut off and carried away. No clue has yet been had to the perpetrators of this foul deed.

By this deplorable death her most faithful majesty has lost an energetic and trusty servant, and the Colony of Macao an upright, public-spirited, and much-loved Governor.

You will perceive from the protest of the Council of the Government, (a translation of which is herewith inclosed,) that allusion is made to placards that have appeared from time to time at Canton, offering a large reward for the Governor's head, and that suspicion is cast upon the Chinese authorities of Canton, of conniving at and sanctioning the crime.

The audacity of this cruel and premeditated murder filled the public mind with astonishment and consternation; and so great were the apprehensions of the foreign community here, that (at the request and with the consent of the authorities) I instantly ordered a force, necessarily small, to be landed from the Dolphin for the protection of our countrymen on shore in case of need, and dispatched a fast boat to Whampoa with orders for the Plymouth to repair to this place with all dispatch.

The following additional paragraph is copied from an English paper: The sight of the mutilated corpse, which was brought to the town in the carriage of an English resident, exasperated to the utmost the soldiers of the garrison, with whom the deceased Governor was deservedly popular. They demanded to be led against the barrier—a request with which, three days afterwards, the authorities thought it prudent to comply. The wall and a fort behind it were carried by assault, and seventy-four Chinese put to the sword; and the infuriated soldiers, in retaliation for the outrage perpetrated upon the corpse of their murdered Governor, cut off the head and left hand of the mandarin in command, and carried them back to the town, where they were stuck upon a pole in front of the Government House.

Fine Blood Sheep.—The ship Louisiana, arrived at New York from Bremen last week, brought twenty-five Saxony sheep, imported by D. W. Catlin, of this city, and C. B. Smith, Esq., of Litchfield Co., Conn., and are intended as an addition to their flocks in Torrington and Harwinton, Conn. They are from the flock of Maximilian Baron de Speck Leitchens, near Leipsic, Saxony. They combine every requisite in a fine sheep, fine form, good constitution, compactness and weight of fleece, and fineness of fibre. A shepherd accompanies them, with a well-trained shepherd-dog, with a view of introducing, as far as practicable, in this country, the system of raising and training sheep, as pacticed in Germany.

The Steamboat Explosion at New Orleans.—The Picayune gives full particulars of the terrible steamboat explosion at New Orleans, which we noticed briefly last week. The steamer Louisiana was completely destroyed, and the steamers Bostona and Storm had their upper works wrecked, their chimneys carried away, and their cabins shattered. The loss of life is variously estimated at from fifty to two hundred men, women, and children. The Mayor thinks that at least 150 persons perished. The editor of the Picayune says:—

"On our arrival, a number of bodies, in every conceivable state of sad mutilation, had been dragged from the wreck, which were surrounded by the dense crowd that had assembled. Hacks and furniture-carts were sent for, and the wounded were conveyed to the hospitals. The sight of the mangled bodies which strewed the Levee on all sides, and the shrieks of the dying, were appalling, making the blood curdle with horror. We saw one man with his head off, his entrails out, and one leg off. A woman, whose long dark hair lay wet and matted by her side, had one leg off above her knee, while her body was shockingly mangled. A large man, having the skull crushed in, lay a corpse, his face looking as if it had been painted red. Others, of both sexes, also with legs and arms off, mere trunks, lay about in different places. Two bodies we found locked together, brought by death into a sudden and close embrace. But it is utterly impossible to describe all the revolting sights which met our view. Suffice it to say, that death was revealed there under almost every variety of appalling horror. The Louisiana sunk about ten minutes after the explosion, and it is supposed that many who went on board to assist the wounded were carried down with her."

Cheap Postage.—A Washington letter-writer says that the subject of cheap postage will constitute a prominent feature in the forthcoming Message of the President, as well as in the report of the Postmaster General, and the prosperous condition of that important department of the Government will justify Congress in carrying out the suggestions that will be made in support of a reduced and uniform system of postage. At the end of this fiscal year the surplus of Post-Office revenue on hand will not fall short of half a million of dollars, and may amount to six hundred thousand dollars. The rate of postage recommended will be five cents on all letters, without regard to the distance of transportation, and if we had a silver coin of the denomination of three cents, which they have in other countries, it might with safety be reduced to even this standard. There could be no doubt in regard to the matter if some of the most flagrant abuses of the franking privilege by Members of Congress were corrected. The amount of free mail matter transmitted during the past Congress reached nearly the enormous weight of nine hundred thousand pounds, excluding all that was sent tqrough committees and otherwise. Not only had this large bulk in weight to be transported by the Government free of charge, but the United States had virtually to pay to Postmasters SIXTY THOUSAND DOLLARS for the delivery of this free mail matter after reaching the various points of destination.

Methodist Church Difficulty.—The National Intelligencer says that a rupture having taken place in the large Methodist Church in Alexandria, on the Northern and Southern question, the case came before his honor Judge Scott on the claims of two sets of trustees to the church property, the church edifice having been shut for some months, and the two congregations worshiping in different halls. The Judge speedily gave his decision, ruling out both boards of trustees, and directing that the property be placed in charge of three trustees of different denominations, viz: Phineas Janney, of the Society of Friends; A. C. Casenove, Presbyterian; and William Fowle, Episcopalian, until a compromise shall be effected, or the right of parties secured in the course of law.

Extensive Robbery.—Jacob Smith, of Albany, a Jew peddler, was robbed of a box containing jewelry to the amount of $4,000, at Dansville, Livingston Co., on the night of the 15th inst. It seems that Smith put up at the American Hotel, a respectable house. He retired to bed and locked his door, and during the night a man named Boughton, a porter in the house, who had secreted himself under Smith's bed, got possession of the box and decamped. Mr. S. offered a reward of $500 for the arrest of the thief, who was finally taken, and all the property was found upon his person. Two other hard cases, named Ezra Saxburg and Van Campen Stout, were also arrested as parties concerned in the robbery. The above facts were gathered from the Rochester American.

Stage Accident from Intemperance.—A letter from a traveler, dated Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 10, 1849, says:—

The stage following the one we were in, fell over a precipice so steep that it was impossible for any one to walk either up or down it, and variously estimated at from 100 to 150 or 200 feet deep, with a rapid river, the Youghhany, flowing at its base. Providentially the coach was caught by a tree some fifty or sixty feet from the top; otherwise, I think, all the passengers must have been killed. When we reached them by scrambling down on our hands and knees from bush to bush, we found seven of the passengers able to help themselves, but all more or less bruised and cut; and after much difficulty we succeeded in getting them up to the road, when we were informed that there were still two passengers missing—one quite an old man, Mr. Clarke of Cincinnati, was found in the coach totally helpless, and it was as much as eight or ten men could do to get him up the bank, owing to its steepness. It seemed the general impression that he could not live. The other man was found some sixty feet below the coach, insensible and scarcely alive. Thus, probably, two persons have lost their lives, and all owing to nothing but the most gross carelessness or drunkenness of the driver. He had a flask in his pocket, and drank three or four times in the course of eleven miles, and several times, when two coaches came together during the night, they would stop and take a drink.

Pickings from Private California Letters.—The following items are selected from the first batch of the thousand and one letters published in the country papers, after every arrival of a mail from the gold regions:—

A writer from San Francisco says, If I wished to return now, I could not, from the fact that the passages are all taken up for six months to come, mostly by persons who have just arrived, and are disgusted with every thing.

They have good eating at the hotels in California; turtle soup, $1 a plate; fish 50 cents; mutton, 75; cold ham, 50; sausage, 75; potatoes, 25; cabbage and sausage, 75, and so on in proportion.

A bowling alley in San Francisco rents for $1,000 per month. One would think they were too busy there to waste time playing at bowls.

Mining tools are costly. Picks, $5; pans, $5; cradles for washing gold, three feet long, worth about $2 in the States, sell for $40.

An individual from Taunton says he is at work in Sacramento for G. W. F., from Boston, in a bakery, being paid at the rate of $10 a day and found. He also practices as a physician when he can be spared from the dough. With all this, he says, I shall not stay in this miserable, unhealthy, dreary, country for more than one year. Hundreds have died at the mines whose friends will never hear or know of their fate.

Fare from Sacramento to San Francisco, (Sept. 16,) 150 miles, $35. Postage on letters from Sacramento to the mines, 60 miles, $2. Fare in the hourly (a wagon) $1 a mile. Boards $500 per 1,000 feet. Tin plate workers make extravagant wages here.

A Dr. Oatman writes that his profession is of no account in California, as half of the emigrants seem to be doctors.

Latest Market News from California.—A letter dated San Francisco, Sept. 30, 1849, gives the following prices of articles in common use:—

"Onions are selling at 25 cents each; cabbages from 37c to $1 each; turnips, 75 cents each; radishes, 25 cents for 4; potatoes, 25 cents per lb.; lettuce, 25 to 37 cents per head, and ohter vegetables at the same rate. A man who would keep a few cows, and bring the milk to town and sell it, could make an ounce, or even more per day. Milk is now selling at $2 the bottle, which is nearly $10 per gallon. Bricks are worth from $30 to $40 per M., and there are some fine locations on our bay for making them. Lime is not to be had for less than $12 to $15 per barrel, and the country is full of lime-stone, with plenty of wood to burn it. At this moment five barrels cannot be bought here. Fruit, which would grow here luxuriantly—such as pears, peaches, grapes, &c. sells at enormous prices; grapes, $1 per bunch; pears, 4 cents each, &c.; pumpkins, $3 to $4 each, and cucumbers at $1 each; melons, $1 to $2 20 each, &c. Abundance of lumber can be had in a range of fifty miles of this place, yet it is selling at from $275 to $375 per M."

Shocking Accident on the Sabbath.—As a Mr. Jackson was out gunning on Saturday, Nov. 17, near Springfield, N. J., he was most shockingly, if not fatally, wounded by the accidental discharge of his gun. It appears he was in the act of stooping to tie his game more firmly together, when his foot touched the trigger of his gun, causing it to be discharged, and the contents lodged in his face and shoulder, lacerating both in a most shocking manner. A friend, who was with him at the time, gave the alarm, and the wounded man was conveyed home, where he received medical attention, although but little hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Cowhiding.—The wife of Hon. Lewis C. Levin, M. C. from Pennsylvania, is figuring quite largely in a curious trial now in progress at Baltimore. Mrs. L. is charged with a violent assault upon a young man named Fite, the son of a wealthy merchant. The assault was committed on a public road leading from the city. Fite, riding in a buggy, passed the carriage of Mrs. Levin and looked in—expecting, as he says, to see one of the family with whom he was acquainted; but failing to recognize who was within, he drew up and allowed the carriage to pass again. Mrs. Levin, immediately, taking his conduct as an insult, ordered her footman to seize the young man, which he did, and held him while she cowhided him.

Thompson's Bank Note Reporter says there are counterfeit $100 bills on the Broadway Bank, altered from genuine 2's. The genuine 100's have "100" and the Controller's die on the left end. The altered notes read, "will pay one hundred dollars to the bearer." The genuine read, "will pay one hundred dollars to the bearer on DEMAND." 500's, on the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, altered from genuine 2's—vignette, blacksmith, two females, &c. This Bank has no genuine bills of a higher denomination than 100.

The Albany Knickerbocker states that on Saturday a young man, named Henry Dodge, accidentally run a pin into his arm just below the elbow, which was instantly extracted, and it was anticipated that nothing serious would occur from the slight accident, but on Tuesday his arm began to swell most alarmingly, from the effects of the poison, and though medical attendance of the best character was secured immediately, the swelling extended to the belly, and on Wednesday he was no more.

Capt. Fikiob, of the schooner Dorcas, from Jackmel, Hayti, who arrived last week, says that all is quiet in the Emperor's dominions, and that the Emperor was cheerfully arranging the nobility, making some lords, some dukes, &c. He further states that the people were much pleased and laughed at what they called the Emperor's folly.

The Auburn Advertiser is urging upon the citizens of that place the importance of constructing a railroad from Auburn to Binghamton. It regards the construction of this road as essential to the continued prosperity of the former place. It says, if the city of Auburn will loan its credit to the amount of three or four hundred thousand dollars the road can be built, and not otherwise.

SUMMARY.

Sylvester Roberts, paper maker, of North Amherst, accidentally fell into a cauldron of boiling liquid which had been prepared for bleaching purposes, on the 12th, and the flesh was almost literally scalded from his body. He died the next day. His age was 41, and he leaves a wife. An only child came to his death in a similar way not long since.

Thomas Cunningham, alias Thomas Conroy, the fellow who, in September last, snatched from the counter of the Suffolk Bank, Boston, $2,000, which had just been counted out by the teller to Messrs. James M. Beebe & Co.'s boy, has been sentenced to four years' confinement in the State Prison at Charlestown.

M. Soyer, the most celebrated French cuisinier in London, says that an egg for eating should be boiled from two minutes and a half to three minutes; and for sauces, &c., from eight to ten minutes. Eggs should not be cooked till eight or ten hours after they are laid. No substance is more indigestible than a hard-boiled egg.

The Poughkeepsie Telegraph says that Prof. Morse has made a gift to the Presbyterian church in that place of one hundred shares of the Washington and Louisville Telegraph stock, the par value of which is $5,000. Notice.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of DERUYTER INSTITUTE will take place at the Institute on Tuesday, the 4th day of December next, at 6 o'clock P. M., at which time five Trustees are to be elected in the place of Ethan Stillman, Arza Coon, Matthew Wells, Jr., Edward Whitford, and Robert Langworthy, whose term of office expires on that day.

Immediately after the election, the Trustees will meet and organize for the year.

CHARLES H. MAXSON, Secretary.

DERUYTER, Oct. 28, 1849.

New York State Agricultural Society.

The Annual Meeting of the New York State Agricultural Society is to be held at Albany on the third Wednesday of January. In addition to the awarding of premiums on essays, farms, grain and root crops, butter and cheese, an exhibition of winter fruits will be had at the Agricultural Rooms. It is desired that there should be an extensive competition for the premiums of the Society at the Annual Meeting, as well as a large attendance of practical farmers from every section of the State.

The exhibition of fruits at the last Annnal Meeting was very superior, and it is hoped that an equally fine display will be made at this Annual Meeting. It is desired that there should be an exhibition from every County in the State, as well as from the adjoining States and British Provinces.

Persons who are willing to aid in this exhibition are requested to have their fruit, properly labeled with its name, and the name and residence of the exhibitor, and securely packed and directed to the Secretary, Agricultural Rooms, Albany, and sent at as early a day as practicable. It is also desired that the character of the soil, the exposure of the orchard, and the habits of the tree, as to its thrifty and bearing character, or otherwise, be given.

B. P. JOHNSON, Secretary.

A Card.

TO THE PATRONS OF GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE. The close of the current Volume is deemed a proper period to announce to the patrons of this Magazine, that arrangements have been completed which cannot fail to increase its attractions during the coming year. The best writers in the country will continue to enrich our pages with their productions, and our engravers—who stand foremost in their profession—will put forth the best efforts of their art to make this peculiar department of the Magazine more beautiful than ever.

Promising unremitted exertions to merit a continuance of the favor bestowed upon the Magazine, we respectfully solicit a renewal of the subscriptions of all its old patrons, and the addition of the names of all who desire to avail themselves of the satisfaction of reading what is universally conceded to be "THE BEST MAGAZINE IN THE COUNTRY."

Attention is called to the following list of Terms, which are unquestionably more advantageous to subscribers than those offered by any other work of the kind.

TERMS.—For $3 in advance, (par money in the States from which it is remitted,) one copy of Graham and a copy of a large and magnificent print, by a distinguished Engraver, and which may be considered one of the most beautiful specimens of art ever presented by any Magazine publisher, and also a new and beautiful Engraving, suitable for framing, of a Sacred subject, "Bearing the Saviour to the Tomb," prepared expressly, and at a very heavy cost, as a Premium Gift to new subscribers to Graham's Magazine. Or, if desired, we will furnish in lieu of either of the above Prints, a complete set of our Mezzotint Portraits of the American Heroes of the Late War with Mexico. For $5, two copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints to each subscriber. For $10, five copies for one year, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person forming the club, and either of the above Prints, or a set of Portraits, to each subscriber. For $20, eleven copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints, or a set of Portraits to each subscriber, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person sending the club, with a copy of each of the large Prints as an additional Premium.

☞ Any person forwarding a club of 20, or upwards, shall receive for his trouble a complete copy of W. H. Graham's "American Historical and Biographical Library." SAMUEL D. PATTERSON & CO.,
No. 98 Chestnut-st., Philadelphia.

Miscellaneous.

ANOTHER GOLD-DIGGER'S EXPERIENCE.

A New York lawyer, who went to California in search of a fortune, gives the following account of his experience in the way of gold-digging:—

I have been in the mines over two months—long enough to give you some idea of gold-digging, and the prospects here, which are not so flattering as they seemed when in New York. The party I am in company with have realized but very little above the expenses of living. They have averaged about $4 a day since their arrival. I joined them three weeks ago. The first week we dug in all about $90; the next, $120; and the last three days we have dug $320. These amounts are to be divided among six. The work is very laborious. We rise at 4, eat our breakfast, consisting of coffee, slap-jacks, and some times meat—work till 12—rest an hour or two, and then work till sundown. We are constantly in the water. Our mode of obtaining the gold is thus: A hole is dug in the bed of the creek, from four to six feet square, and from two to six feet deep. One of us bails out the water, two get out the dirt, one carries it to the machine, and two wash the dirt in the machine. Twenty-five pans of dirt are washed in the machine, thereby reducing the quantity to three pans, which is taken and washed in a pan till nothing remains in the pan but gold. In this way we succeed in washing about 300 pans of dirt per day. We frequently work two or three days and find no gold. Then, again, we may take out from half an ounce to eight ounces per day. We frequently sink two or three holes and find nothing. It is all lottery. If a man is fortunate, he will strike a vein, and take from two to twenty pounds out of a hole. But this happens very seldom. The gold runs very irregularly, and can be procured only by hard labor, equal in every respect to sewer or canal digging. Some men do well—the majority poorly. Thousands come here without money, hear the story which each digger has to relate, and become discouraged. Some return as soon as they have seen the mines, others go to work, having no alternative but starvation.

In order to live as cheaply as possible, we eat nothing but flap-jacks, meat, and coffee, morning, noon, and night. All miners eat, sleep, and live like hogs. We sleep on the ground, covered with dust and dirt; have our table on the ground, among ants and bugs of all descriptions. I have not slept one single night without my clothes since I left home. The country has no attractions. The earth is parched, the air very dry. At night it is very cold—in the middle of the day as hot as a coal fire. The water is poisonous. The slightest cut will not heal in two or three weeks, and frequently causes the severest suffering. The diarrhea is prevalent, brought on by drinking the water.

THE DEAF AND DUMB INSTITUTION.

The Board of Directors made their Regular Quarterly Visit to the Deaf and Dumb Institution, near New York, one day last week. From an account of the exercises prepared for the N. Y. Tribune, we clip the following paragraphs:—

The presence of two young children, new-comers in the Institution, gave an excellent opportunity for the President to expound the first principles of their peculiar education—a subject which has awakened no little public curiosity. These new inmates were bright and cheerful little ones, a brother and sister, whose mother had lately died, and whose father is now a missionary at an Indian station 500 miles above Calcutta. The children were placed here for instruction but a few weeks since; but have already mastered a sufficient number of ideas and expressions to write and converse with a good degree of rapidity.

The stranger pupil, when first introduced, is frequently unable to form a communication with any one around him. His education is at once begun—not by books, but by primary signs. He is shown a book, and asked its use; he endeavors to seize the object of the inquiry; the light breaks in, and he a last defines it. Other objects are then shown him—a key he finally represents by turning the hand in imitation of unlocking the door; a pen by pantomine writing; and so through the catalogue. The pupil having a clue to all these meanings, he is called upon for representations of prominent objects. The next step is to write the names of objects upon large slates—cause the pupil (now become a scholar,) to construct sentences therefrom—call in other adjuncts for the fuller development of his understanding—and finally place him on the high road to knowledge. Such is in brief the history of his progress. It is easy to note the yearly results.

On the occasion of this visit, the youngest and the oldest, and the two intermediate classes, were all that were examined. They were exercised as usual in the definition of common properties from single ideas, or, in some instances, isolated words, and grammatical structures. The present number under instruction is about 220, who are divided into the customary eleven classes, according to their several abilities—one Teacher being detailed to each, and the whole under the watchful superintendence of the President of the Institution.

Among the persons present, were Dr. Raphall, the distinguished Jewish Rabbi from Europe. At the conclusion of the exercises, Gen. Prosper M. Wetmore, in a few neatly-turned remarks, introduced to the audience this distinguished guest. Dr. R. responded in a fifteen-minute speech of unexcelled point and appropriateness—remarking that he could not forbear contrasting these institutions, as conducted in the Old World and in the New. Here, they are supported by the State—there, by private munificence. Here the unfortunate claims his education as a right—there, he receives it as a charity. He complimented the officers of this Asylum on the high success of their labors, and considered the invention which placed them thus in contact with their fellows bereft of the pleasures of the tongue and ear, as a triumph of intellect no less mighty than the victory of David over Goliah. [This scene had previously been finely acted in pantomine, by Mr. Gamage, a graduate, and now a teacher in the Institution.] The Dr. further expressed his gratification and pride in the first dircovery of that mode of communication by one of his own nation—a Hebrew; and closed with a hearty acknowledgment of the pleasure afforded him by the spectacle he had now witnessed, of the practical workings of that system of instruction, thoroughly developed and applied.

PRESERVING FRUIT.

In the first number of the Transactions of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, there is an account of a new mode of preserving apples and pears. The inventor of the mode, M. Paquet, of Paris, has received from the Royal Society of Horticulture, a medal. He presented on the 13th of June one hundred pears and apples, which it is stated had not only preserved their beauty, freshness, and flavor, but even their perfume. His fruit-house is described as a circular building, with an inner wall and an outer wall—the size of the building being whatever is convenient. The distance between the outer wall and inner wall is about three feet six inches. There are windows in both walls, a diffused light being preferred to darkness. The inner room, which is the depository of the fruit, is kept at a constant temperature of about 50 degrees (Fahr.;) as low as 39 would not be injurious, but 66 to 73 destructive. Boxes are made with drawers of oak; that wood being easier to be cleaned from the remains of fruit which might decay. "In these drawers," says the account, "the fruits are placed, with a small interval between each, on a slight bed, one-sixth of an inch thick, of saw-dust, (not pine, which would communicate an unpleasant flavor,) highly dried in an oven, eight parts, and one part of very dry pulverized charcoal; and with this mixture the interstices between the fruits are filled to about two-thirds of their height, leaving one-third exposed." This mode is deemed greatly preferable to keeping fruits in moss, cotton, paper, or other substances.

The fruit should be gathered with the greatest care, and not in the least bruised; the fairest and finest specimens selected. It should be gathered ten days before it is ripe. After it is gathered, it is directed to leave it in an open airy situation for about fifteen days, to sweat, and on no account to be wiped previous to being deposited in the fruit-house.

A DESPERATE FELLOW CAUGHT.

It will be recollected, says the New York Tribune, that a diabolical attempt was made, in the month of May last, to take the life of Thomas Warner, Esq., of New York, and his family, by means of a box filled with explosive combustibles, which was sent to his house, during his absence at Philadelphia; and, upon being opened by Mr. Warner, exploded, throwing down the partition wall between his dining-room and hall, damaging the ceiling of the room, and throwing the windows into the street, Mr. Warner and family escaping just in time to avoid destruction. Since that time, Mr. Warner, Mr. George Wilkes, and officer A. M. C. Smith, have been indefatigable in their exertions to ferret out the perpetrators of this outrage; and, about two months since, Samuel Drury, Jr., in a conversation with an individual (which was overheard by Mr. Wilkes and officer Smith,) said that his father had prepared the infernal machine, and that he (the son) had, disguised as a Spanish negro, delivered it at Mr. Warner's house, also saying that he was sorry for it, and regretted doing it. The evidence thus obtained was sufficient to implicate the son, but farther testimony was necessary to connect the father, (who, since the occurrence, has been suspected as being the perpetrator of the plot,) in such a manner as to warrant his arrest. Last week this evidence was obtained. In conversation with two notorious characters in the upper part of the city, Drury, Sen., was overheard by officers Jenkins and Crasseau to say that he had constructed the infernal machine, and had used every means in his power to make it effectual in destroying the lives of Mr. Warner and his family, and regretted extremely that he had been unsuccessful, and urging them to take the matter in hand. In the course of conversation with these men, he reverted to his success, and that of others, in passing off a large quantity of altered bank bills of the Eagle Bank of Bristol, N. J., for which offense a man by the name of Ashley, and a young woman named O'Connor, were arrested in Boston some time since. He also conversed about the price of dies, plates for the counterfeiting and altering of bank bills, and for manufacturing spurious, coin, &c. On this information being obtained, the necessary affidavits were made, a warrant issued, and officer A. M. C. Smith and Mr. Geo. Wilkes arrested Mr. Drury and his son at Brooklyn. Immediately on the arrest, one of them dropped four $10 altered bills on the Eagle Bank, which were picked up by the officers, who conducted them to the Tombs, where they were locked up. The officers proceeded to his house, in Astoria, and upon searching it, found a large number of dies for counterfeit doubloons, and other Spanish and American coins, vignettes and other apparatus for counterfeiting and altering bank bills, and several thousand dollars worth of gold watches, silver spoons, &c., the greater part of which is supposed to be the proceeds of a burglary committed at Roxbury, Mass., some time since.

THE LONDON MARKET.

The number of oxen consumed in London yearly, is estimated at about two hundred and fifty thousand; of sheep about one million, of lambs about four hundred thousand, of calves three hundred thousand, of pigs about a quarter of a million, besides various animals used as food. Considerable quantities of butcher's meat have lately been imported from Scotland and the provinces to London, in addition to what is bought at Smithfield and the other markets. It is reckoned that about one million pounds sterling per annum is a fair computation of the value of live animals sold in Smithfield market alone. Eight hundred thousand gallons of milk are consumed in London annually, supplied by about ten thousand cows. It is said that nearly five hundred thousand pounds per annum are paid by milk retailers to cow-keepers for the produce of their cows; and that from the additions per cent. added to the original cost of the produce, independent of the loss caused by adulteration, the citizens of London pay nearly one million sterling for milk alone. Upwards of ten thousand acres of land are under cultivation round the city, in order to supply the regular vegetable market; and about four thousand acres are devoted to the cultivation of fruits and flowers. Nearly seven hundred thousand pounds sterling are paid at market for garden stuffs, and upwards of four hundred thousand pounds for fruit alone; and when we take into consideration that the retailers advance the price of these more than two hundred per cent., we shall find that the Londoners disburse above three millions of pounds yearly for esculent vegetables. The annual consumption of wheat in London is above one million quarters, each quarter containing eight Winchester bushels. About one million chaldrons of coals are consumed, each chaldron containing thirty-six bushels, or one ton and a half. Nearly two hundred and fifty thousand barrels of ale and porter annually are brewed and sold in the city, each barrel containing thirty-six gallons. About twelve millions of gallons of spirituous liquors and compounds, about seventy thousand pipes of wine, about three million lbs. of butter, and about thirty millions of pounds weight of cheese constitute the articles of general use. In Billingsgate market alone—that famous theater of eloquent persons, who from their dress and demeanor might be supposed to constitute a third sex—upwards of three hundred thousand tons of fish are annually disposed of, and nearly one hundred thousand pounds are paid for poultry during a season by the rich.

THE EXTENT OF LONDON.

It is absolutely impossible to communicate to one who has not seen it, any just idea of it. I have said to myself several times, "Well, now I have seen the whole," yet I soon find out that I have seen nothing. You can travel eighteen, miles from Brentford to Strafford, through an uninterupted succession of thickly planted houses. I have rode on the driver's seat on omnibuses, and there has been a constant succession of squares, parks, terraces, and long lines of single houses for miles, and continuous blocks and single palaces in the very heart of London, occupying acres of ground. I do not speak, of course, of the large parks, which for their trees, their verdure, their neatness, their embellishments, their lakes and cascades, their waters swarming with fish, and covered with a great variety of waterfowl which they have been able to domesticate, and their grazing flocks of sheep and cattle, and their national monuments, and the multitudes of well-dressed pedestrians, and of elegantly mounted horsemen and horsewomen, and of carraiges and equipages as splendid as gold and silver can make them, are beautiful beyond my most romantic dreams. I do not exaggerate; I cannot go beyond the reality.

A SCENE IN BOSTON.—The Chronotype thus describes a scene in the Police Court of Boston on a recent Thursday:—

The North watch scoured the purlieus of Ann street on Wednesday night, and the result of their diligent labor was the arrest of thirteen females, eleven of whom were young girls, from fifteen to twenty years of age. Twelve of the thirteen were charged with being prostitutes! All but two of them had been up before, upon a similar charge.

The youngest of the number is 15 years old. She is the mother of an illegitimate child. She did not seem wholly "lost to honor's voice," though she evidently felt a > "* * * chilling heaviness of heart," when the indictment was read to her, and to which she pleaded guilty. The Judge then sentenced her to two months in the House of Correction.

Next came a girl of 16, with heavy knobs dangling from her ears and her fingers decked with rings. She belongs in Lowell. Three months in the House of Correction was her fate.

The third wore a rich scarlet velvet bonnet and a fashionable shawl. When the indictment was read, she said she was guilty, and wept bitterly.

In like manner, one after the other of the unfortunate wretches was brought up and disposed of, until the complement was complete.

Upon the features of all of them has intemperance "fixed what time can ne'er erase." Indeed, a girl cannot lead the life of a prostitute without using liquor. It is the oblivion in which she buries the blighted hopes and sunny recollections of the past.

DISCOVERY IN CALIFORNIA.—The following is an extract from a letter written to his wife by a New Yorker, now working in the mines of California. The letter bears date Aug. 26, 1849:—

"There was a gold mine discovered here (what is called Murphy's Diggings) one week to-day. It is evidently the work of ancient times—210 feet deep, situated on the summit of a very high mountain. It has made a great excitement here, as it was several days before preparations could be made to descend to the bottom. There was found in it the bones of a human being, also an altar for worship, and some other evidences of human labor. From present indications it is doubtful whether it will pay to be worked, as it is mostly all rock, and will require a great outlay for tools and machinery to work it."

This discovery, if properly pursued by competent observers, may prove of the highest historical importance. It will establish the fact that the mineral wealth of that region has been known to preceding generations, and the relics which have survived may enlighten us as to the nationality of the people who first pierced this mountain two hundred and ten feet, and will doubtless suggest an inquiry into the reasons for abandoning the pursuit of gold in a country in which it seems to abound, and where its discoverers had found encouragement to make such extensive excavations in former times. [Post.

AN EXEMPLARY TOWN.—W. Chase, Esq., of Ceresco, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, writes to the Westchester Advertiser, that that town has not now, and never had, a pauper or a drunkard. It has been organized five years, and during all the time there has been no ardent spirits retailed in the town, and no law-suits between the inhabitants, who all live by labor. At this time about twenty persons are combined in putting up a large store for a Protective Union, at which it is expected at least three hundred families will sell their wheat and buy their goods.

COOLEDGE THE MURDERER.—The Boston Times has the following extraordinary paragraph, received by the editor of the American Union from a former resident of Maine. This letter is dated Shert Bar, 30 miles from Coloma, September 3, and may be genuine or not:—

"Yesterday morning there came up here three strangers from Sacramento City, one of whom I recognized as the notorious Dr. Valorus P. Cooledge, formerly of Waterville, Me., the alledged murderer of Edward Matthews. Could I be mistaken? How came he here? Has he escaped hanging? I knew Cooledge well, at Waterville—and if this is not him, than I never saw the man. His beard was very thin, and scattered over his thin, narrow face, but it had grown out two or three inches in length. He passed here by the name of Wilkes or Wilkins. His eye I could not mistake. He appeared well, but in no other way altered, save that he was meanly dressed, and looked a little harder than usual. I told my belief to W., and the next morning Cooledge was gone. Where he has wandered I cannot guess—but I feel sure that it was him. If you ever write, tell me what this can mean. Or am I deceived?"

IGNORANCE AND CRIME.—In Preston (England) Jail, on an examination of the prisoners, more than sixty per cent. of all persons committed, including adults, were unable to name the months of the year. The same average could not tell the name of the reigning sovereign of the country. Nearly sixty per cent. had no idea of such words as "vice" and "virtue;" they were unfamiliar with them, and knew not their sense. Thirty-seven per cent. were ignorant of the Saviour's name. Fifty-five per cent. were unable to repeat correctly the Lord's Prayer, even by rote, and many who could repeat it did not understand its meaning. One woman of thirty-three read the second clause, "A'll be wed i' thy name." Of sixty who professed to know it, and to be able to write it, on being asked to set it down without copy, one only did it correctly; twenty-two produced imperfect versions; fifteen exhibited gross ignorance of the text, and twenty-two were barely intelligible. And these, be it remembered, were nearly all adults! In the case of youth the ignorance is, if it can be, still more profound.

TWICE MARRIED.—The Brooklyn Advertiser relates the following bit of romance:—"We have heard of a somewhat remarkable occurrence in domestic life that has taken place in this city within a few months past. A lady of respectable and wealthy family, who was married to a young man of somewhat dissipated habits, was prevailed upon by a relative to sue for a divorce from her 'leige lord,' to which overture she, after much hesitation, gave a reluctant consent, and by due process of law a judgment of final separation was pronounced by one of the law tribunals of New York. The decision produced much unhappiness to both, and each seemed as if the future were to them a wretched blank. By the kind interposition of mutual friends, they were once more introduced together, and the result of the well-intended reconciliation has been a second marriage between the parties, who now, we are told, regret their temporary alienation, and are henceforth resolved to forget and forgive any trifling errors or indiscretions that either may be guilty of."

THE JENNINGS ESTATE.—Some weeks since a meeting was called in Nashville, Tenn., of the heirs and descendants of William Jennings, who died in England, in 1779, leaving an immense estate, for which no legal heirs have been found. A brief notice of the affair, in the Evening Post of New York, has brought to the editor a letter purporting to be from a solicitor in London, who says that he is in the employ of certain parties in England, who claims to be the heirs of the said William Jennings (or, more properly, Jennens,) who died in 1779, intestate; that they are descendants of Humphrey Jennens, grandfather of William, who died in 1690, and that a coöperation with American claimants is desirable. He says:—

"I am convinced, if there is the heir at law in America, and he can prove himself to be such, he is entitled to extensive freehold estates, and that there is a large personal estate divisible among the next of kin of William Jennings, deceased, wherever they are."

ESCAPE FROM A SHARK.—A British transport vessel, on nearing the coast of India, was sailing under a gentle breeze, when a young lady, who was sitting on the bows, in attempting to reach something to an officer, lost her balance and fell over-board. The officer immediately plunged in and seized her, and kept her afloat until a rope was thrown them, and they were towed near the bows in order to take them on board. While in the act of hoisting them on board, the sentinel on duty observed a shark glide from under the ship, and approach them, turning upon his side to seize them. Poising his gun and bayonet, he leaped down, and with his weight, drove his bayonet into the body of the monster, who darted away, all equipped, while all three got safely on board.

SEMINARY FOR COLORED PEOPLE.—M. J. Wilkinson, a colored clergyman, is now in Toledo, O., acting as agent for the collection of funds to assist in establishing, on a permanent foundation, a manual labor seminary for the country. The seminary is under the auspices of the African Methodist Episcopal Church for the Ohio District, and it has been incorporated by the Legislature of Ohio. A sufficient sum has been raised from the colored citizens of Ohio to purchase 200 acres of land 12 miles west of Columbus.

NEEDLES.—These indispensable little things were first made in London by a negro from Spain, in the reign of Mary; but he dying without teaching the art, it was lost till 1566, when it was taught by Elias Grorose, a German. Insignificant as this little instrument appears, there are but few commodities which in their manufacture require more skill, and provide labor for a greater number of artisans.

Many have been the curious experiments in grafting plants upon each other. A Frenchman of Lyons inserted on the same stem red and white grapes, peaches and apricots. Plutarch tells of an olive grafted on a juniper, a peach on a myrtle, pears on an oak, and apples on a plane tree.

HOW YOUNG MEN IN OUR CITIES ARE MADE DRUNKARDS.—"Mr. Delavan told me," said Governor Briggs, in a temperance address, "that when he was a young man, in the city of Albany, he counted among the number of his associates, fifty young men. There was a refectory in the city, to which all used to resort, and procure, at a small price, a piece of pie or a tart. In a room adjoining, liquor was sold. 'I,' said Mr. Delavan, 'resorted there frequently, and sometimes went into the dram shop. After reaching home one evening, I resolved not to go again. The next evening I found myself on the way thither, before I was aware of it. I paused, reflected a moment, and exclaimed aloud—Right about face! Within a few years I have examined the history of those fifty young men. Forty-three of them lie deep in the drunkard's grave.'"

Variety.

The Albany Knickerbocker pithily says: "Three of the most expensive luxuries nations can possibly indulge in, are wars, bass drums, and heroes;" and, in proof, states that in England "the Duke of Wellington, since 1811, has received in military pay, bounties, grants, &c., about $14,000,000! or some $400,000 per year—more than we pay Congress, Senate, President, and thirty-one State Governors. Why, that great sum would educate some 25,000 of the poor children of the English peasantry."

It is thought 15,000 emigrants to California by the Plains, will have to winter at the Mormon settlement at the Salt Lake, owing to the earlier emigrants having set fire to and burned the grass. They will fortunately be able to obtain subsistence there, as the Mormons have raised immense crops of grain, their farms extending eighty miles in length, and more than twenty in width, though they have been there but two years.

In India there was once a custom for the priest, in marrying a couple, to cut off one joint of the lady's third and little finger, and anciently both husband and wife sacrificed a joint, but the Brahmins decided, that as this mutilation unfitted men for certain employments, the woman should lose two joints, which would answer for both.

A Chinese belle bedaubs her face and hands with a white stone, ground to powder, used as a cosmetic, until her complexion is an agreeable mixture of dry white and saffron. No people rely so much on foreign aid as the Chinese woman do, for they are literally one mass of paints, false hair, oils, and pork fat.

It is marvelous in how many ways the seeds of plants are distributed over the surface of the earth. Some seeds have wings; some are carried by birds and cattle; some by the winds, some by streams—and dropping in fitting soils, take root and spring up. Though the whole race of men should be swept from existence, the fields and forests would still renew themselves, and bear year after year.

Lady Blessington patronized Miller, the basket-maker poet, and did him substantial service. Miller himself, says:—"Often have I been sitting in Lady Blessington's splendid drawing-room in the morning, talking and laughing as familiar as in the old house at home; and in the same evening I might have been seen standing on Westminster bridge, between an apple-vender and a baked-potato merchant, vending my baskets."

Isaac Harris, Esq., an old merchant of Pittsburg, publishes a note in the Gazette, in which he estimates the population of Pittsburg, at 120,000. He says there are in the city about 25,000 from Ireland, England, Scotland, and Wales, and about the same number from Germany and France. The number of Americans by birth he estimates at 70,000. He adds, within this circle we have about 100 churches.

It is not what we earn, but what we save, that makes us rich. It is not what we eat, but what we digest, that makes us healthy. It is not what we read, but what we remember, that makes us learned. All this is very simple, but it is worth remembering.

In a late number of the British Banner, the following statement is made respecting the attendance on public worship in London: "The population of the city is calculated at 3,353,111. The whole number of places of worship is 797, with sittings for 601,518 persons. They need 1,176,555 sittings to be provided, to accommodate the whole population."

"What salary do you expect?" inquired a down-town merchant of a youth who was applying for a situation. "Enough to keep me from wishing to steal," was the frank rejoinder, and it pleased the merchant so well that a bargain was soon struck.

Sir Wm. Molesworth stated in the British Parliament last year, that the wars with the Kaffirs in India, which cost the British nation £1,500,000, ($7,500,000,) was occasioned by the loss of one axe and two goats, which were alledged to have been stolen by the Kaffirs.

The Paris Presse estimates the number of Conscripts for the French army from 1761 to 1813 at 4,500,000 men. Of this number Napoleon levied 2,476,000. In twenty years, the Presse states the total number of persons slain in war or in butcheries, at ten millions.

The following government loans are sought to be obtained in Europe: France, 200,000,000 francs; Austria, 120,000,000 francs; Piedmont, 105,000,000 francs; Tuscany, 24,000,000 francs. All these sums are to be raised in the course of a year.

Among the articles exhibited at the late fair in New York, were chairs made of paper, prepared by a process that renders it harder than wood, with a surface like polished glass, and richly inlaid with ivory.

A German Journal announces a young authoress, called Baroness de Clokekrakerstocca Pickalkreneen. If her works are as crooked as her name, people will want a double set of jaws to read them.

Oscar, king of Sweden, has turned teetotaler and is sending teetotal missionaries throughout his country.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 4 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 4 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

PRINCIPLES OF CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

BY PRESIDENT A. MAHAN.

[Concluded.]

We are now prepared to consider the real meaning of our Saviour in Matt. 18 : 15—17. The class of offenses here referred to are specific ones, to wit, individual and private offenses. The design of our Saviour is to reveal the principle which binds us as law universal for the redress of such wrongs. The principle here revealed was never designed as a law of discipline for the church in respect to public offenses. The design of the Saviour was, to designate a line of conduct which, as individuals, we are to pursue for the redress of individual and private offenses. This I argue from the following considerations :

1. This is the identical case specified. "If thy brother trespass against thee, go, tell him his fault between him and thee alone." The case is a definite and specific one, and specific directions are given for its adjustment. Nothing is more contrary to all correct principles of interpretation, than the application of such a direction as law universal for all offenses whatever.

2. On the supposition that this is the principle to be applied in all cases, the church, as we have seen in the commencement of this essay, can take no original jurisdiction of any offenses whatever. She can not even appoint a committee to investigate evil reports, or to reclaim offenders. This would imply a public adjudication of them, in some form, and in the case last named, would imply a positive judgment, that wrong had been done. Else why appoint a committee for the reclamation of the offender? The church, on the other hand, can take no cognizance of the conduct of her members, till after cases are submitted to her by individuals who have taken the first and second steps without redress. Now, who can suppose that the Head of the church has left discipline in such a state as that? In case of public offenses, the entire church are directly aggrieved, and who should take cognizance of the case if she does not?

3. It would, as we have also seen, be perfectly easy for the grossest offenders to put themselves in such relations to the church, as to render discipline absolutely impossible, if the passage before us be understood as law for the administration of discipline in respect to public offenses. Suppose a member of a church has become a notorious pirate upon the high seas. Neither the church nor any of its members can get to him to take the first and second steps. Nor can they communicate with him by letter. What must be done? Must the wretch remain in the bosom of the church? He must, if he chooses to do it, according to this view of the passage under consideration.

4. But suppose that the church is permitted by this passage to take up public offenses, but is required to take the first and second steps before proceeding to adjudicate upon it. This makes our Saviour's command the height of absurdity. The precept would in that case read thus :—If an individual trespasses against the church, (as in the case of all public offenses,) let the church go and tell him his fault between her and him alone. If he neglect to hear the church, through her committee if you please, let the church take with her one or two more, that is, one or two more churches. If he neglect to hear them, let the church tell the thing to the church, that is, to herself. Such is the real meaning of this command, unless we restrict it, as its language requires, to individual and private offenses.

5. The case, if possible, is still worse, if we suppose that public offenses are, in the first instance, not to be taken up by the church as a body, but by individuals. According to this view of the subject, every member of the church is bound, though their number may consist of thousands, to commence a process of discipline. I can not delegate my duty to another. The duty devolves, if not upon the church as a body, upon each individual in particular. Every one, whatever others may have done, or be doing, is bound to commence the process of discipline. Or, if the fact that one is before the rest, binds them to suspend efforts, those who ought to be the last to interfere are most likely to be the first, and the whole process to be conducted as badly as it can be. Who can suppose that the Saviour has given such direction as that?

6. Finally, this view of the subject places the command of our Saviour under consideration in palpable contradiction with other parts of Scripture given also by inspiration of God, with 1 Cor. 5 : 1—5, for example. Paul certainly would not have been inspired to give the direction he did in the above passage, if the command of our Saviour in Matt. 18 : 15—17 was designed for law universal in respect to all cases of discipline whatever. I conclude, then, that this passage, according to its obvious literal import, has to do with individual, private offenses only, and should never be applied as law for discipline in any other cases.

The following, then, may be laid down as the principles of discipline which bind the church in all cases whatever :

1. Discipline is in no case whatever to be exercised, but for moral offenses. Errors in doctrine, and external acts, are to be subjects of discipline, only on the ground of indicating moral guilt. Discipline for any other purpose, is usurpation in the church of Christ.

2. For the adjustment of all private individual offenses, the direction in Matt. 18 : 15—17 binds us. Excommunication is to be resorted to, only when the efforts of the individual, and of the church superadded, have failed to reclaim the offender, and he remains incorrigible under them all.

3. In all cases of public offenses which do not imply established character for crime, such as sin committed under sudden temptation, the reformation of the offender is to be sought within the church, in the use of all the means best adapted to secure that result. Excommunication is to be resorted to, only when the offender has, by resistance, revealed the character of incorrigibility.

4. In all cases of gross offenses deliberately committed, especially when individuals professing godliness are detected in carrying out plans of known wickedness under the cloak of religion, they are at once to be put out of the church, as soon as on trial had, their guilt has been ascertained. Trial is, then, to be held for one object only, to ascertain the guilt or innocence of the accused. Discipline then would indeed be a terror to evil doers.

Such, then are the principles of discipline in the household of faith, as revealed in the scriptures of truth. The whole subject has thus become plain, and of ready application. The want of such an understanding of the subject has occasioned many great evils in the church. Discipline, in the first instance, is commonly exercised for offenses not regarded as involving sin at all. Perhaps a majority of cases adjudicated in ecclesiastical courts, are of this character, as, for instance, depositions on account of imputed errors in doctrine. All such acts are usurpations in the house of God, just as much as the denial of the Scriptures to the brotherhood is in the Catholic church.

The next and greatest evil is, that discipline in the church has ceased in a very great degree to be a terror to evil doers, and a praise to them that do well. This will continue to be the case until the true principles of discipline are fully settled in the estimation of the church. For the same reason, excommunication is almost unresorted to for any offenses in some churches. Instead of being regarded, as the Apostle affirms it to be, a necessary means of grace, in desperate cases, excommunication is regarded by some as almost equivalent to the final reprobation of offenders. Hence, suspension, a form of discipline unknown in Scripture, has been substituted, in the place of the form of punishment directly prescribed for presumptuous sins. I was once very forcibly struck with a fact that I witnessed, that clearly indicated how little the principles of discipline have been fundamentally understood in the church. When the question of excommunication once came before a particular church, the pastor, who is seldom in darkness on any such subject, expressed the greatest conceivable horror at its being resorted to, even in cases in which it is positively required in the Bible. He spoke of this form of penalty as placing the criminal in a state of almost hopeless reprobation, and adduced with manifest approbation, the example of a distinguished pastor, who, for that reason, never did resort to this fearful expedient. The case recorded in 1 Cor. 5 : 1—5, was brought up, to show that inspiration prescribes the infliction of this penalty, in the case when it is demanded, as a necessary means of grace to the criminal and the church both. The pastor started the inquiry, how delivering an individual over to satan could be the means of his reformation. Was not this the meaning? he asked. As God and the church have both failed to reform him, now turn him over to the devil, and see what he can do with him. The Apostle, it should be borne in mind, does not refer to any thing done after the offender is delivered over, as the means of his restoration, but to the act of the church in thus delivering him over. The deep reprobation thus heaped upon his crimes, operates to break the power of flesh, and thus secure the salvation of the spirit in the day of Jesus Christ. It was this act which was effectual to the reformation of the offender, in the case referred to by Paul. "Sufficient unto such an one is the punishment inflicted by many." The united reprobation of the church poured upon his crime broke his proud, rebellious spirit, and that to such an extent that Paul subsequently called upon the church to show him special kindness, "lest he should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow." Let the discipline be administered upon proper principles, and it would always powerfully operate for the sanctification of the church, and the reformation of offenders. As now generally administered, it is neither, as I have before said, a terror to evil doers, nor a praise to them who do well.

We close this article with a remark or two on the manner in which the act of excommunication should be performed. On this point we have heard some things which we by no means approve. A series of essays, for example, appeared upon the subject, some years since, in the Oberlin Evangelist. In these essays, it was very strongly urged, that whenever such an act was performed, there should not only be the avoidance of haste on the part of the church, but a day of fasting and prayer should be held, as preparatory to the act, and as a means of giving it solemnity and power. There is no question, but that the exclusion of an individual from the communion and fellowship of the church should be regarded as a solemn act, and should be performed in such a manner as to make as deep an impression as possible upon the offender, the church, and the world. We are by no means persuaded, however, that the expedient above referred to, if generally adopted, would operate to the production of such a result. Wicked men love notoriety. To obtain it, they will even perpetrate crime, as in the case where one of the seven wonders of the world was destroyed by an individual for the purpose of being known to posterity. Now, let a church of many hundred members come together to hold a day of fasting and prayer, every time offenders in her communion become incorrigible, and it would operate to generate in them a sense of self-importance. Such individuals would be among the first to call for such a day when about to be put out of the church, and would be greatly offended, if they should not receive their exclusion through such ceremonies. Instead of being ecclesiastically buried with such pomp and circumstance, gross offenders, in most instances, should rather be "dragged forth to the burial of an ass." In other words, the penalty of exclusion should be promptly executed, as soon as the offense stands revealed before the church. The highest efficacy of the act depends upon this. Thus the reprobation expressed for the crime is likely to be felt. If the church will hold days of fasting and prayer on account of offenses, it should be, as a general rule, on account of their frequent occurrence, and not with reference to specific cases.

ENGLISH TACITURNITY vs. FRENCH LOQUACITY.

The French traveler, Volney, gives the following amusing contrast between the development of the English and the French settlers whom he saw in Canada. His philosophical speculations as to the great effects of the taciturnity of one class, and the loquacity of the other, are acute, and will suggest matter of interesting reflection to those who have not yet learned the importance of timely silence.

"The American settler, slow and silent, does not rise very early, but when he has once risen, he spends the whole of the day in an uninterrupted series of useful labors. At breakfast, he coldly gives orders to his wife, who receives them with coldness and timidity, and obeys them without contradiction. If the weather be fair, he goes out, ploughs, fells trees, makes fences, or the like; if it be wet, he takes an inventory of the contents of his house, barn, and stables; repairs the doors, windows, or locks; drives nails, makes chairs or tables, and is constantly employed in rendering his habitation secure, convenient, and neat. With these dispositions, sufficient to himself, he will sell his farm if an opportunity offer, and retire into the woods, thirty or forty miles, to form a new settlement. There he will spend years in felling trees, making for himself first a hut, then a stable, then a barn; clearing the ground and sowing it, &c. His wife, patient as himself, will second his endeavors on her part, and they will remain sometimes six months without seeing the face of a stranger. But, at the expiration of four or five years, they will have acquired an estate that insures a subsistence to their family.

"The French settler, on the contrary, rises early in the morning, if it be only to talk of it. He consults his wife on what he shall do, and listens to her advice. It would be a miracle if they were always of the same opinion; the wife argues, opposes, disputes; the husband insists upon or yields the point, is irritated or disheartened. Some times his house is irksome to him, and he takes his gun, goes a shooting or a journey, or to chat with his neighbors. At other times, he stays at home, and spends the time in talking with good humor, or in quarreling and scolding."

"This alone, is one of the most distinguishing and characteristic features of the two nations; accordingly, the more I reflect on the subject, the more I am persuaded that the domestic silence of the Americans is one of the most radical causes of their industry, activity, and success in agriculture, commerce, and the arts; and the same applies to the English, Dutch, and other people of the North, from whom they are descended. In silence they concentrate their ideas, and have leisure to combine them, and make accurate calculations of their expenses and returns. They acquire more clearness in their thoughts, and consequently in their expressions. Hence there is more decision in their conduct, both public and private, and it is more to the point. On the contrary, the Frenchman, with his perpetual domestic chattering, evaporates his ideas, submits them to contradiction, excites around him the tattling of women, backbiting, and quarrels with his neighbors, and finds at length that he has squandered away his time, without any benefit to himself or his family."

"This moral and physical dissipation must have a particular efficacy in rendering the mind superficial; for, having several times questioned the frontier Canadians respecting the distances of times and places, or measures of magnitude or capacity, I have found that, in general, they had no clear and precise ideas; that they received sensations without reflecting on them; in short, that they knew not how to make any calculation that was ever so little complicated." "But there is not a single American settler who does not give with precision the number of miles or hours, and weights and measures in feet or yards, pounds or gallons; and who does not very readily make a calculation of several actual or contingent elements. Now this kind of practical science has very important and extensive consequences in all the operations of life; and it may surprise my reader to be informed, that it is much less common among the French, even in Europe, than he would be disposed to imagine."

TRUE TO SLAVERY.—No cruelty or injustice, however monstrous, can be an abuse of slavery. Nothing but mercy or humanity is inconsistent with it. The resolutions below, adopted at a large meeting in Gallatin, Mississippi, are in the true slaveholding spirit :—

Resolved, That inasmuch as circumstances have rendered it impolitic for slaves to be taught to read in this State, and without some degree of learning the doctrines of the Bible cannot be profitably taught, it is highly improper for slaves to congregate for the purpose of meetings, except when a regular authorized minister or ministers attend, and superintend and perform the services.

Resolved, That the law relating to free negroes, slaves, and mulattoes, should be so amended as absolutely and unconditionally to prevent slaves from selling or bartering any commodity or article whatever, whether the product of the soil or labor, thereby effectually preventing their rasing cotton, corn, potatoes, peaches, melons, pigs, poultry, &c., for sale, under any pretence whatever.

HEIGH-HO! THE RAIN!

Heigh-ho! the rain,
The wild, tempestuous rain!
Hear how it raves at my window-pane!
Hurrying down with mad commotion,
Mad as the din of the storm-lashed ocean,
Sweeping the mountain, pelting the plain—
Heigh-ho! the wild, impetuous rain!

Heigh-ho! the rain,
The chilling, querulous rain!
Hear how it scolds at my window-pane!
See on the boughs that are well nigh breaking,
Hundreds of leaves in their terror shaking;
Seeming to murmur this sad refrain,
"Heigh-ho! the chilling, querulous rain!"

Heigh-ho! the rain,
The restless, tremulous rain!
Hear how it beats at my window-pane!
Beats like a heart with fear affrighted,
Beats like a heart with love delighted;—
Half in gladness and half in pain—
Heigh-ho! the restless, tremulous rain!

Heigh-ho! the rain,
The pleading, pitiful rain!
Hear how it sighs at my window-pane!
Type of a breast that is full of sorrow,
Sighing for peace, and a brighter morrow;
Sighs that are uttered too oft in vain—
Heigh-ho! the pleading, pitiful rain!

Heigh-ho! the rain,
The weary, desolate rain!
Hear how it sobs at my window-pane!
Sobs like a child that has lost its mother,
And never, never can find another
To love and cherish like her again!
Heigh-ho! the weary, desolate rain!

Heigh-ho! the rain,
The dainty, delicate rain!
Hear how it taps at my window-pane!
Gratefully sweet, like Love's moist fingers,
Laid on a brow where fever lingers,
Drip the cool sounds on my heated brain—
Heigh-ho! the dainty, delicate rain!

Heigh-ho! the rain,
The lovely, musical rain!
Hear how it chants at my window-pane!
Hushed is the tempest's petulant chiding,
Gently and gracefully now 'tis gliding
Into a calm and beautiful strain—
Heigh-ho! the lovely, musical rain.

Heigh-ho! the rain,
The fitful, vanishing rain!
Now it has ceased at my window-pane.
Through the torn edge of a cloud just parted,
See! one tremulous star has started!
Putting to silence the dull refrain,
"Heigh-ho! the fitful, vanishing rain!"

LO! THE POOR INDIAN.

New Orleans papers of October 15th contain late advices from Tampa Bay, to the effect that the Florida Indians had refused to leave the country, and that Gen. Twiggs was preparing to hunt them out with all possible dispatch. Read, in connection with this announcement, the simple but affecting speech of Assumwha to Gen. Twiggs, in reply to the latter's demand that the Indians should abandon their country :—

"We did not expect this talk. When you began this new [removal] matter, I felt as if you had shot me. I would rather be shot. I am old, and will not leave my country. Gen. Worth said he spoke for [illegible] was authorized to make peace and quiet in our country; and that so long as our people preserved the treaty, yours would. For many years you have had no cause to complain; and lately, when a few bad young men broke the law, a thing that cannot be prevented among any people, did we not hasten to make atonement? We met you as soon as we could, and promised to give ample satisfaction; and from that day we have not rested. We have killed one of our people, and have brought three others to be killed by you, and we will bring the fifth. There has been much trouble and grief, but we have done justice, and we came here confident that you would be satisfied.

"Now when you ask us to remove, I feel as though you had killed me too. I will not go, nor will our people. I want no time to think or talk about it, for my mind is made up. As for the delegation, (alluding to a delegation proposed to be composed of members of the tribe heretofore emigrated to Arkansas, and brought to Florida to induce their friends to follow them,) I did not invite them to come and see me. Some Seminoles went to Arkansas many years ago. We were then sorry to lose them; but we have now got over that sorrow long since, and now they are nothing to us, and we do not desire to see them. I did not expect this talk, and had I done so I would not have helped to deliver up those men to you."

Read also the words of Billy Bowlegs, another chief, on the same occasion :—

"We have now made more stringent laws than we have ever had before, and I have brought here many young men and boys to see the terrible consequences of breaking our peace laws. I brought them here that they might see their comrades delivered up to be killed. The business has caused many tears, but we have done justice.

"I now pledge you my word that, if you will cease this talk of leaving the country, no other outrage shall be committed by my people; or, if ever, hereafter, the worst among my people shall cross the boundary and do any mischief to your people, you need not look for runners or appoint councils to talk. I will make up my pack and shoulder it, and my people will do the same. We will all walk down to the sea-shore, and we will ask but one question—'Where is the boat to carry us to Arkansas?'"

It is known that these Florida Indians have an undying, overpowering attachment to their country; they fought desperately against tremendous odds, for years, to escape the horrors, as they accounted them, of expatriation; and it is a solemn truth, that the territory which they now occupy was assured to them for ever, or as long as they should live, as the price of peace and of the partial surrender of their native land. It is true that murders have been committed by a handful of their young men; but it is as true that the chiefs have, in the language of Assumwha, "hastened to make atonement." They have put one of the offenders to death, and given up three others to die on the gallows of the white man. They have done justice; fancy what would be the answer of the white men, if the white murderers of an Indian were demanded by an Indian chief! Would the justice of the pale faces decree that the shedder of Indian blood should yield his life to the demand of Indian vengeance? Let the murderous scenes that are daily enacted on our western and south-western frontiers give the answer. [Com. Adv.

THE DERVISHES.

I went the other day to witness the performances of the celebrated Rufai, or howling dervishes, who exhibit twice a week at their convent in Scutari. After removing my shoes, I was admitted into a small plain room, consisting of a central area for the dervishes, and lobbies and galleries at the sides for spectators. I found about twenty of the sect assembled; they had no distinctive dress or badge, and were of all ages, from the gray-headed man down to the mere boy of eight or ten years. After prayer by the Sheikh, all of the devotees, excepting the Sheikh and three or four players on instruments, rose from their cushions, ranged themselves in a line, and interlocking their arms, commenced in measured cadence the repetition of their profession of faith, "La allah illallah," (there is no God but Allah,) keeping time to the words by bending their bodies backwards and forwards. They soon began to gather excitement. Each moment the utterance of the syllables became more rapid, and the movements of their bodies correspondingly more violent, till at the end of some twenty minutes they had wrought themselves up to a perfect phrenzy, and the scene became like some frightful orgies in pandemonium. Amid the din of tambourines and tom-toms, naught could be heard but the wild spasmodic howling of the word Allah, broken now and then by some piercing shriek of ecstasy. Reeking with sweat, they all continued in file, furiously rocking their bodies upwards and downwards, save one here who sank to the floor overpowered with bliss, and another there who in delirious transports leaped high into the air as if spurning this gross earth forever. This scene was kept up until finally the question became with me, not whether the men were mad, but whether they were actually creatures of flesh and blood; for it became almost incredible that human frames could endure such tremendous violence. At the height of these ravings, little children were brought in to the Sheikh, who all the while had remained seated on a lambskin at one side of the room, to receive his blessing. This blessing was administered by extending the children on the floor, and standing like an imponderable spirit on their bodies. I saw mere infants subjected to this without the least apparent suffering. At length, when nature seemed pushed to the very verge of complete exhaustion, a signal by the Sheikh arrested the devotional [illegible]ments; the performers all took tambourines and joined in a solemn chant, and another prayer concluded the exercises. The room was hung about with swords, daggers, hooks, and pikes, with which the dervishes formerly, in their holy paroxysms, cut and pierced themselves without injury; but this part of the exhibition is now omitted. Many of the performers are not fully initiated into the order, but are mere novices; and some of them are notorious scamps from the city, who join in the devotions out of sheer deviltry. The whole sect is generally regarded by the Mohammedans themselves as a pack of impostors and fanatics. The Meyleri or whirling dervishes, whom I have often seen exhibit at Pera, are of a different character, being moral, sincere, and some of them even learned men. Many of the better class of Turks attend their devotions, and even the Sultan himself is a frequent visitor. They wear sugar-loaf hats, and large flowing gowns; and their exercises consist in prayer and in revolving on their bare feet simultaneously on their own axes and around a common center, imitating thus the dance of the spheres, and whirling all of their senses and faculties into rapt abstraction from the material world.

The foregoing was written from Constantinople. Writing at a later date from Damascus, the same writer says :—

A day or two since, we saw a procession of devotees on its return from escorting to the mosque two children of a rich man to be circumcised. It was a sight that merits, at least, a brief description. First came on horseback, with iron pikes in their hands, several boy dervishes, foaming like sybils at the mouth, and, as if overcome by supernatural influences, either exhaustedly swinging their bodies from side to side, or else desperately struggling to quit the group of men who held them, and mount to the skies. Next, a swarthy, hideous-looking rascal, with a huge beard, his head entirely shaven, except a scalp-lock at the crown, and his body completely naked, except a coarse cotton cloth round the loins. With a long hammer he insanely beat the air, and wildly danced to the music of tambourines. Three or four fellows followed, stripped to the middle, each with his cheeks pinned together by iron skewers, which perforated them through and through, and with his back plentifully spitted with iron quills, running transversely under the flesh for inches, and one withal with his abdomen drilled by a huge pike. Then, a couple of stalwart, half-naked worthies, slashing the air and pounding the pavement with iron-spiked bludgeons, in savage battle with invisible demons. A devotee came next, with a large sword sticking unsupported from his stomach, which it apparently pierced for inches. Then, an immense green flag, which, as if instinct with celestial buoyancy, could scarcely be prevented, by the hard exertions of many men, from soaring aloft. A holy sheikh, sitting composedly on his horse, but with cheeks puffing with heavenly ardor, brought up the rear. The big green flags of the Prophet waved along the whole procession, and at short intervals were squads of players on tambourines and tom-toms, chanting vociferously in unison with the howlings of the devotees, and rending the air vocal with their instrumental din. Hundreds of half-phrenzied men, women, and children, followed the procession, all shouting and shrieking with excitement. A more infernal scene I have never witnessed. Our Arab dragoman was greatly frightened for our safety. We were the only persons in Frank dress present, and the people stared at us in wonder and scowled with hatred. We coolly kept our stand at the side of the street, till at length the crowd passed, and we went on our way unmolested.

A QUESTION IN CASUISTRY.

The church in A. became a little embarrassed, and found it very difficult to defray their expenses, by appealing to the Christian principle, or the manly generosity of the congregation; and after much consultation and some discouragement, they concluded to get up a Fair, for the purpose of appealing to different passions for their relief. Some articles were made, some were begged, and some were bought, and the most attractive arrangements were made for the sale. Splendid decorations, rich entertainment, a large cake with a gold ring in some fortunate piece, and many other things designed to make a merry time of it, and to tickle the shillings out of pocket, were provided. The effort was effectual, it called the masses together, and the desired funds were raised. It was talked of for several days as a splendid affair.

The church in B. were in similar pecuniary difficulties, and hearing of the successful operation in A., they determined to employ some expedient of the kind for raising money. On inquiry, however, they found that several prominent persons in the congregation were very much interested in theatrical exhibitions, and that something of this kind would be more likely to kindle up a liberal spirit. Accordingly, they concluded to make appropriate preparations, and employ a small company of Actors, for a few evenings, and get a profit from the entertainment. Having settled all the bills, they found a net gain equal to their most sanguine expectations.

There was a church at C., in about the same circumstances as the others; but from what they heard of the proceedings of their neighbors, they thought that there was a little too much mental dissipation and sportiveness in such proceedings for a religious object; and they must devise some method which would have more appropriate sobriety; and they concluded to get up a Lottery, publish the scheme, and have the whole matter conducted with the utmost honesty and decorum. The treasurer should sell the tickets in the most quiet manner, and the pastor and deacon should see that the drawing was most honorably conducted. They trust the whole matter to the [illegible]tune, or of Providence as it might better be called, and keep the whole community in their usual sedateness. The plan succeeded admirably, the tickets met with ready sale, and the desired amount was realized.

Now, Mr. Editor, will you, or some of your philosophical correspondents, decide, with due argument, which of these methods best accorded with the spirit and the instructions of the Gospel, and which can be most safely and profitably recommended. Many of the churches in this quarter are somewhat embarrassed, and would be glad to know the best method of relief. If we could find some more successful method of raising money, we might do much more in aid of the great objects of benevolence.

THE BIBLE BURNER.

The people of this country a few years ago were shocked by a scene which occurred at Champlain, a town in this State, on the borders of Canada. There was here gathered quite a population of Canadian French, and among them came some Jesuits lately arrived from France, who took measures for extirpating at once such seeds of Protestantism as they imagined might endanger the fidelity of these people to the Romish Church. Protestant benevolence had distributed among those Canadians a large number of copies of the Holy Scriptures, and these Scriptures became the special objects of Jesuitical dread and hostility. The people were not only required to confess the possession of the Scriptures, but to bring the volumes to the Jesuits, who proceeded to make a public bonfire of them, in spite of the protestations of the Protestants, who desired that if the Canadians were not to be permitted to read them, they might at least be returned to the donors. No—these professed ministers of religion (!) would do no such thing—the Bibles must be burnt, and were burnt.

A chief agent in this Bible-burning was a tall Canadian, a man who had possessed, and had now surrendered, a copy of the sacred volume. He aided in kindling the fire, and stirred the burning heap with a pole to make it burn more freely. But mark the power and the grace of God. Dr. Côte discovered among the congregation at the Grande Ligne Mission chapel, last winter, a new but not an unfamiliar face. Believing that he recognized the person, he advanced towards him and said, "Have I not seen you before?" "Yes," replied the man; "it was I who aided at the burning of the Bibles, and my heart has never ceased to reproach me. If I had known the value of that book, I should never have participated in that horrible act. I have found another copy of the Holy Scriptures, and I have prayed to God for Christ's sake to forgive me my sin." God had overruled his share in that nefarious work to his awakening and conversion, and he now solicited baptism at the hand of the missionaries. In due time his request was complied with, and himself and his wife are members of the mission church at Grande Ligne. [N. Y. Recorder.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 6, 1849.

"NOT THE JEWISH BUT THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH."

We continue, this week, our review of Mr. Bennett's sermon.

"Our opponents assert, that Israel, at the time of the Exodus, had a knowledge of the Sabbath. Well, for a moment, let us admit it. Now, let it be noted, that the term 'holy Sabbath' conveyed to a Hebrew the same idea that holy rest does to us; and hence, if they knew the name of the institution, they had a knowledge of the manner of celebrating it. To deny that they knew one day in seven to be a holy rest, is equivalent to saying that they had no knowledge of the institution itself. On such a supposition, all they could have known was, that some institution, of some unknown character, was formerly celebrated one day in seven. They had, then, a knowledge of the name of the institution. But having a knowledge of the name, they had also a knowledge of the duties of the Sabbath; for the name is an unmistakable description of those duties. No one, however, will object to all this. But we are informed, that God gave the Sabbath to Israel, Ezek. 20: 12. If they had a knowledge of the manner in which the Sabbath should be celebrated, there was nothing more to give them, except the day of celebrating it. And that which was given, was to be a sign between God and Israel through all their generations. It is said, Neh. 9: 14, that God made known (revealed) the Sabbath to them, by the hand of Moses. From this declaration one of two things is certain, either the sabbatic institution itself was then revealed, or the day on which they and all their generations should celebrate it. If it were the institution itself, the assertion, that Israel at the Exodus had a knowledge of the Sabbath, will be given up. If it were the time of which they were ignorant, then no one can determine on what day the septenary cycle, which would just measure the days of time, should begin. And the day being revealed, is to the Jews a peculiar sign or memorial. On the Jews the Sabbath imposed no other duties than those imposed on us, on all, as our Lord's reply to the Pharisees abundantly shows, (see Matt. 12: 1—8, Mark 2: 23—28, Luke 6: 1—5.) Their peculiar institution required duties every day not required of us, and the bigotry of a blind Pharisee might make the observance of the day more rigorous; yet it is an undeniable fact, that the duties of the Sabbath simply, were the same then as now—a cessation from secular business and devotion to religious exercises. It is not true, then, that Moses made known to Israel some sabbatic duties, such as were peculiar to the Jew, but not necessary to the general sanctification of the day. The very title of the day describes all its duties under the law. Now to sum up the argument: God did, by Moses, make a revelation to Israel of something appertaining to the Sabbath. This must have been the day, or its duties, or both. But, my brethren, our opponents will not admit that it was both, and we will not dispute them. Was it then the duties of the Sabbath? If, at the Exodus, they knew not the duties, they knew not the name of the Sabbath, and if they knew not the [illegible] the institution itself to them. This will not be admitted. Then it was the day of the Sabbath. And to me, it is beyond a doubt, that God by Moses appointed a day to the Jews as their Sabbath day. This was peculiar to the Jews, and in this respect it was a sign between God and them, through all their generations."

In reply to this, we say, that it is not true, that "having a knowledge of the name, they had also a knowledge of the duties of the Sabbath." It is not true, that "the name is an unmistakable description of those duties." What is its name? Answer, "The Sabbath of the Lord thy God." All, then, that the mere name denotes, is that the Sabbath day is the day on which Jehovah rested. It does not necessarily denote that man ought to rest from his labors on that day. In the absence of any injunction to rest, the mere name would but doubtfully intimate the duty. It is only from the express injunction, "in it thou shalt not do any work," that we clearly ascertain our duty to lay aside all secular business. By this injunction we learn, not only that the seventh day of the week was Jehovah's rest-day, but that it is also, and ought to be, man's resting day. And we are not even ready to admit, that because the Israelites knew that "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it," (Gen. 2: 3,) they must have, therefore, known that it was to be commemorated by abstinence from labor. As we showed in a former article, this fact simply showed them that the day was holy—that it was to be observed by man—that it was to be celebrated in some form or other. Hence we may admit, without any prejudice to our argument, that the Israelites, on coming into the wilderness of sin, knew the fact that God had blessed the seventh day, and thus rendered it obligatory on man to regard it in some manner or other; also that they knew the name of the institution as "the Sabbath or rest of Jehovah their God;" yet in order that they might unmistakably know their own duty with reference to it, it was necessary to inform them that God would not permit them to labor on that day. This, however, is on the supposition that they had lost the knowledge of the proper manner of celebrating the institution, or that God had never before revealed the manner of celebrating it. Whether they actually had lost the manner of celebrating it, is another question. Yet what we have said shows that Mr. B.'s argument, "that the name of the institution is an unmistakable description of the duties pertaining to it," is very far from being logically correct. That the Creator did, when at the close of creation he "blessed the seventh day and sanctified it," and so set it apart to be regarded by man as holy, also, in some way, cause man to know the right manner of celebrating it, admits of no reasonable doubt. True, we cannot point to chapter and verse, as containing the proof. But neither can we point to the proof that the other duties of the law were enjoined upon him. Nevertheless, we know that, in some way, he was made to have a knowledge of them. Every duty contained in the Decalogue had been before conveyed to the understanding of man, in some way or other. It would be strange if the fourth commandment were an exception. Especially would it be strange, when we consider that the blessing and sanctification of the seventh day made it the duty of man to regard it in some way. Very strange indeed, that God should make it man's duty to regard it, and yet not inform him how or in what manner he must do so! We can conceive, as well as Mr. B., that "God, in his all-wise, but inscrutable providence, suffers millions of our race to die without a knowledge of many moral precepts and duties, in which they had as great interest as any fallen man can have." P. 30. But we cannot conceive that God should clearly intimate some positive duty, and yet deny to man the means of knowing how he may perform the duty acceptably.

But to the question, whether the Israelites had lost the knowledge of the Sabbath? for of this Mr. B. makes considerable capital. God gave the Sabbath to Israel. Ezek. 20: 12. He made known the Sabbath to them by the hand of Moses. Neh. 9: 14. "From this declaration," says our author, "one of two things is certain, either the sabbatic institution itself was then revealed, or the day on which they and all their generations should celebrate it. If it were the institution itself, the assertion that Israel at the Exodus had a knowledge of the Sabbath will be given up. If it were the time of which they were ignorant, then no one can determine on what day the septenary cycle which would just measure the days of time should begin."

As for the testimony of Ezekiel, showing that the Sabbath was given for a sign between God and the children of Israel, we have shown in a former article, that it was no proof that God intended the Sabbath only for the Israelites—that it was a sign, in the sense of being a token, that the God for whose service they were "sanctified," or set apart, was Jehovah, the self-existent Creator, and not one of the pretended deities of the heathen—and that it necessarily becomes a sign of the same thing in regard to any nation that renounces idolatry and acknowledges the God of Israel. We may here add, for Mr. B.'s special benefit, that it is no proof that God intended the day only for the Israelites. If it was the day of the institution, that was a sign that Jehovah, the self-existent Creator, was their sanctifier, then the day becomes a sign of the same thing to any people that embraces and acknowledges the God of Israel. Hence the day—that [illegible] Mr. B. believes to be the Jewish Sabbath—is the Sabbath of Christians also. In regard to the testimony of Nehemiah, it no more proves that the Israelites first received the knowledge of the Sabbath after the Exodus, than it does that they first received a knowledge of God's "right judgments and true laws, good statutes and commandments," at mount Sinai, v. 13. Mr. B. himself would hardly pretend that the Israelites had no knowledge of the duties imposed by the other nine precepts of the Decalogue, previous to their promulgation from the mount. He would say—what every reasonable man would say—that they had some knowledge of all these duties before—that the transaction upon Sinai was not intended to reveal them as new duties, or duties never before understood, but only to place them in a clear and unmistakable light. And this is the sense in which God is said to have given them right judgments and laws. In the same sense, we understand Him to have made known his holy Sabbath. He rectified all their errors concerning it; he cleared it from all obscurity; he placed before them the right manner of observing it, and settled it upon a sure basis, so that they should make no mistake concerning it. This is all that can fairly be inferred from Nehemiah's testimony. We are not unwilling to admit, however, that during the latter part of their bondage the Israelites may have been prevented from observing the Sabbath, and hence have lost their reckoning, so as to be uncertain about the true time of keeping it. But how the conclusion that Mr. B. draws from this holds good, we are not able to see. "If it were the time of which they were ignorant, then no one can determine on what day the septenary cyle, which would just measure the days of time, should begin." If we could admit, with our author, that the limits of the week were definitely fixed by the falling and withholding of the manna, without any regard to its limits as previously fixed by the work of creation, we would acknowledge the correctness of his conclusion. But this admission we cannot make. We believe that the seventh day on which the manna was withheld, was that very seventh day in its weekly return, upon which God rested at the close of creation—that in withholding the manna, God had respect to his own Sabbath of rest, and that He thus restored the true time of it to those who had lost their reckoning. Our author, however, seems to anticipate this method of meeting the subject, as follows:—

"But it is said, if man had forgotten the day on which the weekly Sabbath returned, God had not forgotten it; and he would do no violence to his own time. It should, in reply, be remarked, that a privious institution of the Sabbath with man is yet open for discussion; for, after all that can be stated, pro and con, honest and truth-loving minds will be of different opinions; hence an earlier institution can not be assumed as an established premise." p. 41.

But our readers will please to take notice, that although Mr. B. considers this an open question, about which "honest and truth-loving minds" will entertain "different opinions," he has not the least difficulty in considering it a settled question, when it suits his purpose. Turn back to page 37, and you find him resting upon the assumption that the Sabbath was instituted in the wilderness of Sin.

"In Exodus, chapter 16, the Jewish Sabbath is instituted, and there is not the remotest allusion to any event of general interest to mankind, as the foundation or authority for observing the Sabbath. But when from Sinai God proclaimed the Sabbath for man, it was enforced by allusion to a great work, in which all had an interest. Now, if Moses had only been enforcing the observance of a sacred day, which Israel knew was such by virtue of the divine injunction delivered at creation, would he not have alluded to the original authority? The silence of Moses, on this occasion, in reference to the creation, strongly indicates, that the Jewish rest was, in some respect, peculiar and temporary."

But perhaps the author will consider himself relieved from inconsistency here, from the fact that he speaks of the Jewish Sabbath, and not of the Sabbath for mankind! We will, therefore, let this pass. But we must insist that the proof is ample, to any unprejudiced mind, that the Sabbath was instituted when God finished the work of creation. What means the assertion of the historian, "that God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it?" Gen. 2: 3. The term sanctified means that the day was set apart for holy use. This Mr. B. admits on page 30. But for whose use was it set apart? Not for God's; for, according to Mr. B.'s own showing, he needs no such institution. Not for the angels; at least, Mr. B. can not take this ground, for, according to his principles, holy beings have no occasion for a Sabbath. He thinks that even man had no occasion for it in a state of innocency. See page 29. Not for devils; for the means of grace are withholden from them altogether. For man, then, most undoubtedly, the day of God's rest was sanctified. Mark 2: 27. And the term blessed—what does it mean? If the term has any meaning at all, it must mean that God rendered it a day peculiarly happy for man. Here, then, we have the most indubitable proof, that the day of Jehovah's rest was, in the beginning, set apart for man's use, and that a pledge was given him that he should be blessed in the use of it. Mr. B. meets this, by saying, "that this setting apart, according to the sacred historian, was an act in the mind of God, and not by the deeds of men. Moses did not intimate that [illegible] But does Mr. B. suppose that the holiness of a day depends upon the act of man with reference to it? The day was holy, whether man so regarded it or not. And it will ever continue to be holy, let man do as he will about it. Where was it ever maintained, except in the Sabbath controversy, that the binding force of a law depends upon the disposition of man to obey it?

But in regard to the assertion that the Sabbath was instituted at the falling of the manna. Does it not strike Mr. B. as somewhat singular, that in all the subsequent injunctions upon the Israelites to keep holy the Sabbath day, not once is the falling of manna alluded to as the foundation or authority for observing it? To our mind, this is utterly inexplicable, if the Sabbath was then, for the first time, instituted. When the Sabbath was proclaimed from Sinai, it was enforced by allusion to the work of creation, in which the Israelites had an interest, in common with all mankind. When it was afterwards rehearsed by Moses in the plains of Jordan, it was enforced by allusion to their bondage in Egypt. Deut. 5: 15. But never once was it enforced by allusion to the manna. How is this? The giving of the manna six days, and the withholding of it on the seventh, the foundation on which the Sabbath rests, so far as the Israelites are concerned, and yet never enforced upon them by allusion to the circumstance! Verily, we do not understand this.

[To be concluded next week.]

CHEERING NEWS FROM CHINA.

The ship Samuel Russell, from Canton, which arrived in New York last week, brought letters from our missionaries bearing date of July 13, 1849—two months later. They mention letters for the Board, sent by way of San Francisco, which have not yet come to hand. From a letter of Mrs. Carpenter to a friend in New York, we are permitted to copy the following paragraph:—

"Ere this reaches you, you will have heard, that already our hearts have been made to leap for joy, in the hopeful conversion of four dear heathen, one of them a female. Can you imagine the joy you would feel at hearing a heathen pray, and feeling that the sacrifices and prayers of our brethren at home, have been blest to this glorious result? Whose prayers, whose alms, have been thus blest we know not, and it is of little moment, since to God belongs all the glory. How we would love to introduce some of our sisters to Ne-May, and let them hear from her own lips how ardently she is attached to the blessed Bible, how she loves to trust in the true God, and how she hopes in heaven to converse with those who she may never see, and thank them for all their kind interest in her people. Is not this that we have felt and known, worth coming to China for? Yes, though we should never live to see another cast away his idols. But we believe there are blessings yet in store, which prayer and faith may claim. You would love to attend our Sabbath prayer-meetings in China—to hear Mr. Wardner's teacher read and explain the Scriptures. I believe the poor man would be terribly frightened if he supposed that he was preaching, but he is only explaining the Book to those less familiar with the book style than himself; so it all comes very easy to him. To us who listen, it is as good as a sermon; but he is a remarkably modest, retiring man, and never dreams, that in being the servant of all, he is in fact our minister. Do you not already love those that we love so much? Do you wonder that we can ask your sympathy for joy as well as sorrow?"

SECRET SOCIETIES—No. 3.

Secret Societies, of somewhat different sorts, seem to wish to have it understood, that the obligation of secrecy imposed on their members, only extends to keeping the password and signs as secrets. But I ask, does not the keeping secret of the password and signs serve to make all the transactions of the Society a secret? It may be replied, that these Societies publish their doings, and that their members are allowed to make known the same. But must not this be altogether optional with the Society? It has met and transacted business secretly, for the very purpose of enjoying the advantage of keeping those transactions secret if it pleases. Will it not act accordingly? Will it claim or exercise no right to dictate its members in relation to that point? If a member should claim the right to divulge any particulars, on the ground even of duty to his God, country, or family, as contemplated in an assurance given, when he was about to be initiated, that no claim of the Society should require any violation of duty growing out of those relations, would not the Society assume, at least for itself, to judge whether the plea of the member were a just one in view of his obligations to the Society? Most certainly it would. So, the reserved individual rights of the member are likely to be very heavily encumbered by the dictation and power of the Society. The contract, on the part of one who becomes a member of a Secret Society, must amount to this, viz., that he will keep secret such things as the Society may require him to, or lay himself liable to the rules of the body in such cases provided. To show that the obligation of secrecy extends to the business of the Society, I will introduce one or two extracts.

"Any member who shall divulge the name of a brother who has voted against any person proposed to become a Son of Temperance, or misrepresent the discussions of the Division, so as to cause disturbance or angry feelings among the brethren, or reveal private business done in this or any other Division, to a person not a Son of Temperance, shall be fined not less than fifty cents, suspended, or expelled, [illegible] determine."

This is the eighth article of the by-laws of the New York Division, No. 1, of the Sons of Temperance of the State of New York, published 1845. The fifteenth article of the by-laws of the "Mount Zion Encampment, No. 24, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the State of Pennsylvania," published in 1846, contains the following language:—

"Any member who shall behave improperly in the Encampment, refuse to obey the presiding officers, betray or divulge any of the secrets or business of the Encampment, ... shall, upon satisfactory proof thereof, be fined, suspended, or expelled, at the option of the Encampment."

When a man has become a member of such an organization, what can be the worth of any guaranty it can give him, that he shall never be required by the Order to violate his duty to his God, country, or family. It may be admitted, that the Society really intends never to do any such thing. It may be allowed to judge that it never does, and with that view to put in requisition all the motives it can command, and all the power it can wield, to subjugate the member to its decisions. And the covenant of secrecy may furnish the body with its principal and triumphant advantage over him; while he is convinced that the demands laid upon him are in violation of paramount obligations. He too may be right, and the Society wrong; for it is not infallible. But what has become of the valued guaranty? Why, it has been evaporated, by the heat of opposite opinions and interests. Now the man finds that he has been erecting an engine of power, and, having given to it the attribute of secrecy, he cannot escape or elude its force. The scheme of secrecy, furthermore, takes off from those who are covered by it, so far as it does cover them, those powerful checks, and restraints, which always attend an open and public course of action. And thus the evil principles of the human heart, which often prove too mighty for all the restraints that can be laid upon them, being relieved from the pressure of the outer, universal, social atmosphere, (to use a figure,) will naturally distend the hearts which inclose them, and spread, and operate with a freedom and activity proportioned to the diminution of the outward pressure or restraint. But wherever Christianity exerts an influence, it not only plies the heart with the most powerful, direct, internal checks, but also increases and heightens the power of public social restraints. And, stripping its votary of the least protection from them, exposes him, as it were, naked to their concentrated force, and bids him meet and endure it all unimpeached thereby, or acknowledge himself unworthy to be a representative of its claims.

I dwell upon this point, because I have undertaken to show, that the scheme of secrecy is, in its very nature, adverse to Christianity, and that independent of any actual results. That is to be attended to hereafter. I dwell on this point, because I intend that it shall be seen, that the adverseness of this scheme to Christianity is real and radical. And I dwell on this point, because there appears to be a disposition not to look at this matter, but, when it is presented, to begin to talk of the vast amount of good done by these organizations, which, if true, is nothing to the purpose; for it is just as clear that a bad instrument may be used for a good purpose, as it is that a good instrument may be used for a bad purpose. Nor can the observation of that man be worth much, who has not learned, that in order to palm an evil contrivance upon society, the main thing to be attended to is to associate it as much as possible with every thing good and lovely. But the nature of things cannot be changed in such a way, though to some it may be hid. Many persons persist in affirming, that card-playing, ball and theater going, are not contrary to Christianity—that they cannot see any thing wrong in such practices—nay, that they are quite necessary and useful in many respects. They go on the same plan who say, that they cannot see why the scheme of secrecy is not in harmony with Christianity. If men will think of the known and necessary bearing of these sources of influence, upon their minds, it is just as easy to see the adverse nature of these things to Christianity, as it is to see that water will wet a man if he gets into it, or that opium will produce the death-sleep if taken in certain quantities. Can a man who will take the trouble to think on the subject fail to see, that when he has an assurance that what he is about to do will not be known publicly, he is more liable to yield to sin, or feel less able to resist temptation, than when he knows the transaction will be known at large? Who does not know that the same is true of men universally? Must not every one see, then, that the condition of secrecy in a society will loosen the restraints of evil, and that, therefore, it must be essentially adverse to Christianity, the grand object of which is, to increase those restraints and render them absolute?

As the individual who becomes a member of a Secret Society obligates himself to keep the secrets of the Order, and as it is impossible for him to know what those secrets are before he pledges himself, or what they may be henceforward, even when he has pledged himself; it follows, that the individual agrees to keep secret he knows not what, but some thing that shall be revealed to him—some thing which the Society shall require him to keep. The making such an agreement is not an upright act. This want of uprightness consists partly in thus renouncing the right and duty of acting according to our own convictions, after due consideration, and partly in putting ourselves in the power of others, and augmenting that power, by our own contributions of influence and money thereto, when we know not what advantage may be taken of the same. How can a man be justified in agreeing to keep secret any fact whatever, before he knows what it is? Or, how can a man be justified in giving his money and influence to make strong a body of men, and then concede to them the right to employ that strength to cause him to keep secret such things as they may please to dictate to him? I think, a man cannot be justified in such an act. There is a violation of moral obligation and moral right in the transaction. The man exposes and leads himself into temptation by such a course; he voluntarily creates an extra liability of being powerfully urged or influenced to do wrong, and runs the risk of meeting said liability. He does this knowingly, for he knows the Society may, and that possibly unwittingly, require him to keep secret what he must make public or sin against both God and man. It will not meet this point to say, that the man is not obliged to obey the Society in such a case. It is not that he is obliged to obey the Society, of which I now speak, but that he must feel its power. This he pledges himself to. The act is wrong, and its principle is wrong. Here we see, that at the very threshold of this Temple of Secrecy, the candidate is trained to practice delinquencies from rectitude and individual moral obligation. For he makes and exposes himself to danger without any need or reason for so doing. He agrees to what he has no right to agree to; and gives to others authority over him, which, being exercised within its legitimate limits, (that is, according to contract,) may require of him what he has no right to yield.

It may be said, that my definitions of the extent of the obligations imposed by Secret Societies on their members, are very indefinite. I grant that such is the truth. But this is chargeable to the thing itself. The undefinable, or, which is the same thing, the unlimited nature of these obligations, is the very thing I complain of; and this is alone sufficient show that they are wrong. But it may be said, that the plan of secrecy is adopted only to avoid imposition. I reply, that true goodness expects to be imposed upon; and that it is one of her most distinguishing traits, that she is so intent on benefiting others, that she never thinks of building herself a castle of defense against such imposition as is incidental to her mission; but goes right on, distributing her benefits to the needy, not hoping to receive as much again. And if she or her favors are abused, satisfied with the consciousness of having intended good, and of having attempted to accomplish it according to her best abilities, she sighs over the corruptions and miseries among men, which her efforts may fail to remedy, and still goes on to indulge her favorite disposition of good to all.

Having, as I think, made the truth of the proposition, that the scheme of secrecy is in its nature adverse to the scheme of Christianity, appear, I will, in my next, take up the second proposition proposed for discussion. A MEMBER OF THE CONFERENCE.

BIBLES FROM ENGLAND.—It is said that 100,000 English Bibles have been imported and sold in this city by one house. They are of the Cambridge imprint. In addition, large numbers of Oxford Bibles are imported at Boston. This is the result of the overthrow of the monopoly of Bible-printing in England; the progress of the age having given at once cheap bread and cheap Bibles—cheap food for mind and body.

EDUCATIONAL TROUBLES AMONG THE BAPTISTS.—At an Educational Convention of Baptists in the State of New York, held recently at Albany, an amicable compromise of the difficulties between Hamilton and Rochester was proposed, by which Hamilton was to continue the seat of theological education, but relinquish the University Charter, and allow a collegiate school to be established upon it at Rochester. The plan was not consummated, because the delegates from Hamilton did not feel authorized to agree to it without first consulting their constituents. They have now consulted them, and decided not to accept the compromise. Thus the whole matter is thrown back where it was, and the question is again open for discussion and agitation. Already these difficulties have greatly embarrassed Madison University and the cause of education. If they continue much longer, the Baptists of New York will have a great work to undo the mischief which has resulted from this discussion.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY IN NEW MEXICO.—The New York Recorder says that intelligence has been received at the American Baptist Home Mission Society's Rooms, confirming the intimations that the Rev. H. W. Reed, missionary to California, had been induced to stop on his way, and raise the standard of the cross at Santa Fé. The only Protestant missionary in the Territory, he is received with great cordiality by the Protestant population, and a deep interest in the "new religion" already manifests itself even among the Mexicans. Mr. Reed's support is provided for on the spot.

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—The committee of the American Tract Society met on the 19th ult. The receipts of the month were $20,844; total since April 1, $146,989. The number of new colporteurs commissioned during the month was 31, of whom 26 were for the Southern and Western States. Since April 274 colporteurs have been commissioned, including 153 students for vacations. The number now employed exceeds 350, including those in Canada, Mexico, and California. The issues from the depository for October amounted to $29,079. Gratuitous issues since April, 22,712,239 pages. The expenditures average nearly $1,000 a day; and the daily product of books is about 3,500, and of smaller publications not far from 30,000, exclusive of 145,000 copies of the American Messenger, monthly. The number of printers and binders is 236. Power presses employed, 14. At the meeting letters were presented from Canada, various parts of India, China, and the Sandwich Islands, asking for large appropriations to sustain the Christian press abroad. In view of these and other appeals, the following sums were appropriated, to be raised and remitted before April 1, viz: For France and Belgium $1,000, Germany and Hungary $1,000, Italy $1,000, Turkey, Russia, Greece, Syria, and the Nestorians, $3,000, Southern India $3,000, Northern India $2,000, China, Siam, Assam, Burmah, and the Sandwich Islands, $3,000, and other claims $1,000; total $15,000.

ITEMS OF RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The German Reformed Synod of Pennsylvania, during their recent sessions, were occupied in an animated debate on the subject of the preparation of a Liturgy for the use of their churches. To a limited extent this Church has used a Liturgy, but the proposition was for one more full and extended. It met with some opposition, which in the end was overruled, and a committee appointed to report a plan or schedule.

The members of the Rutgers-st. Presbyterian Church, New York, of which Rev. Dr. Krebs is pastor, have in a few days, it is said, subscribed $15,000 to liquidate their church debt. This sum is the whole amount of the debt on their church structure, which originally cost $55,000.

The Advocate of Moral Reform sends forth a circular petition to be presented to our Legislature, asking a law to compel town and city officers to provide mental, moral, and physical education, for the thousands of infant vagrants known as street children.

It is stated that Rev. Dr. Pise, recently of St. Peter's Church, Barclay-st., New York, has purchased Emanuel Church, Sidney-place, in Brooklyn, lately belonging to the Episcopalians, under the ministry of Rev. Mr. Goddard. The cost of the building was $10,000.

The children of the Sunday School of Rev. Dr. Rice's Church, in Cincinnati, have resolved to support one missionary, under the care of the General Assembly's Board of Missions, and have selected Rev. Lyman B. Crittenden, of Farlow's Grove, Ill.

The General Minutes of the Methodist Annual Conference state that that Church, within the last year, has been blessed with the large increase of 23,294 members and probationers, and 106 preachers, traveling and local.

Within the past week there have been two or three incipient meetings of Catholics from different sections of New York for the immediate purpose of obtaining a course of lectures to be delivered in some convenient part of this city.

A series of Catholic Lectures is in progress in Boston. Dr. Cummings of New York gave the opening lecture.

A farewell missionary meeting for Rev. Dwight W. Marsh, about to sail for Mosul, Western Asia, was held in the Church of the Puritans, New York, on Sunday evening last.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The steamer Canada arrived at New York on Sixthday last, with one week later intelligence from all parts of Europe.

The most gratifying feature of the week's news is the interview between the President of France and Mr. Rives, the American Minister, at the Elyée Nationale. The American Minister made an address adapted to the occasion, but observed a total silence respecting the misunderstanding between France and the United States growing out of the conduct of M. Poussin. The President, however, alluded to the affair, in terms flattering to the American Minister and his country—adding that in consequence of that misunderstanding, if Mr. Rives had been a monarchial ambassador, instead of a republican minister, he, the President, would have been deprived of the honor of receiving him.

The dispute between the Emperor of Morocco and the French seems to increase in violence. The French Consul at Magadore has been treated harshly and ignominiously, and a French frigate has been sent to his relief, There is now every probability of this affair ending in the bombardment of Tangier.

From Hungary we learn that fresh condemnations are taking place, and no fewer than 15 additional executions at Arad are threatened daily. General Haynau is carrying on his unrelenting cruelties unchecked by higher authority. The Jews at Pesth are once more threatened with violence unless they pay up the contribution demanded, which seems to be beyond their power.

From Rome we have but little certain or interesting. It seems, however, that the Pope really meditates an early return to Rome, and indeed his arrival at one moment was actually announced.

Advices received at London on the afternoon before the steamer's sailing, with news from Constantinople to the 1st ult., state that a British fleet was at anchor in Aboukir Bay, and would remain there till the arrival of the courier with the answer of the Czar to the communication of Fuad Effendi. Should that answer prove unfavorable, the fleet will proceed at once to Constantinople. Sir Stratford Canning has communicated to the Turkish Government that the English Cabinet had unanimously agreed to form an offensive alliance with the Porte, in the event of hostile proceedings on the part of Russia. A similar communication has been made by General Aupick in behalf of the French Government.

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY IN BOSTON.

On Sixthday, Nov. 23d, Dr. George Parkman, a wealthy and esteemed citizen of Boston, mysteriously disappeared. No trace of him having been found after much inquiry, his brother-in-law offered a reward of three thousand dollars for any information that would lead to the knowledge of his whereabout, if alive; if he had been murdered, that sum would be given for information that should convict the perpetrators of the deed; one thousand was offered for the simple recovery of the body, if dead. It was not till Sixthday last, however—one week after Dr. Parkman's disappearance—that any clue to the mystery was obtained, when the horrible and heart-rending facts described below led to the arrest of Dr. John W. Webster, as implicated in a deed which staggers the imagination.

It seems that a note of $450 against Dr. Webster had been held by Dr. Parkman, secured on real estate in East Cambridge. This had been due for a long time, and Dr. P. had urgently insisted on its payment. After being several times put off with excuses, he applied to the officer who disposes of Dr. Webster's tickets to his course of lectures in the Medical College, to know if there was a sufficient balance in his hands to take up the note. This proceeding greatly excited Prof. Webster, who, on the morning of Nov. 23d, called at Dr. Parkman's residence, No. 8 Walnut-st., and left the message, "that if he wished to receive the money on that mortgage, he must call at the Medical College about 1 o'clock that afternoon." Dr. Parkman is known by several citizens to have gone to the College at the hour designated. He was seen to enter the College, but was never seen to come out of it. A person, who had some business to transact with him, watched for a long time to see him come out of the College, but in vain.

It is admitted by Prof. Webster, that Dr. Parkman called on him at the College, according to the above statement, and that he paid him the amount of the note, taking a receipt for the money. This receipt, it is said, has not been produced.

After the alarm had arisen on account of the disappearance of Dr. Parkman, several circumstances produced a suspicion in the mind of Mr. Ephraim Littlefield, who has charge of the buildings and grounds of the Institution, that Dr. Parkman had never left the College alive. He hardly dared to breathe his surmises, but kept up a vigilant watch.

It was noticed that Prof. Webster was in his private room and laboratory several hours on Sixthday afternoon, Nov. 23, with the door locked, where he is supposed to have remained during the night. The heat proceeding from his room was so intense as to attract the attention of several inmates of the College, and two barrels of pitch-pine kindling wood disappeared. For several days afterwards, the chimney of his room sent forth an uncommonly dense and constant cloud of smoke. During the whole of the week, it was observed, that Prof. Webster had kept himself almost entirely secluded, with his rooms at College constantly locked, a thing so unusual with him as to occasion remark.

From these and similar circumstances, Mr. Littlefield was so strengthened in his suspicions, that on Sixthday evening, Nov. 30, after Prof. Webster had returned to Cambridge, where he resides, he was induced to break the partition wall to the vault, in the basement directly under Prof. Webster's room in the College, and connected with it by a staircase and door, which was never known to be opened except by the Professor himself. Upon entering the vault, a terrible spectacle was disclosed. There was the lower part of a human body, in a state of dreadful mutilation, one leg being gone, and also the foot of the other leg. The appearance of the remains indicated that they had been in that place but a short time.

These appalling facts were instantly made known to the proper authorities. They proceeded to the College, and on extending their search to Prof. Webster's room, found farther proofs of the most startling character. On examining the furnace and the ashes which it contained, they discovered several bones and pieces of bones, belonging to a human body which appeared to have been recently burned, so that the muscles and cords were entirely consumed. There were also found some coat buttons, particles of silver and gold apparently from a watch melted down, and a portion of a human jaw with several false teeth, filled in with gold round the edges, in a manner corresponding with those known to have been worn by Dr. Parkman.

All these circumstances, taken in connection with the fact that Prof. Webster was not an anatomist or surgeon, but only a chemist, with no professional concern in the dissection of bodies, were deemed sufficient to warrant his arrest.

The officers accordingly, proceeded to Cambridge in a private carriage, and reached the residence of Prof. Webster, at some distance from the University, at about 7 o'clock in the evening. Without stating their real business, they informed him that a new search of the Medical College had been decided on, which required his presence. After getting into the carriage, he was informed of the suspicions that had been aroused against him, which threw him into a state of agonizing excitement, and he fell back several times into the arms of the officers. During the ride, he gave way to violent exclamations, and uttered piteous groans and shrieks. He also made use of expressions of a doubtful nature. Among other language of a similar import, he is said to have used the following: "Can it be that that infernal scamp" (supposed to refer to some accomplice) "has betrayed me." He was lodged in Leverett-st. goal on Friday night. In the morning he was somewhat calmer, and expressed a wish to see his friends, though he remained in such a state of excitement throughout the day, that his physicians pronounced it useless to bring him out for examination.

A coroner's inquest was immediately called "to inquire into the identity of the parts of the body found, and by what means it came to its death." Without agreeing upon a verdict, however, the inquest was adjourned to Fourthday of the present week.

Dr. Webster has been Professor of Chemistry in Harvard University since the decease of the late Dr. Gorham, a period of over twenty-five years. In this capacity he is a member of the Faculty of Medicine in the Harvard Medical School, which has its location in Boston. He is probably not far from 55 years of age, although his manners and appearance are those of a much younger man. His reputation in his profession is respectable, but not brilliant. He is a man of varied accomplishments and of elegant tastes. As a member of society in Boston and Cambridge, he has always enjoyed an unusual popularity. His musical talents are of a high order, and he has done much to elevate the standard of musical taste in Boston. His house has been distinguished as the seat of generous hospitality, where, surrounded by a singularly lovely family, he has appeared to enjoy the highest delight in the courteous entertainment of a numerous circle of friends. With a mild, kind and unassuming disposition, with eminently social feelings, and manners of uncommon affability, he probably had not an enemy. His character was far from any stain—he was the last man in the world who would be thought capable of committing a crime. There is no doubt that he labored under one defect, which may have led him to the dreadful deed of which he is accused. With expensive habits and a love of luxury, he had no skill or ability in the management of pecuniary affairs. Hence, he is known to have been generally in a state of great embarrassment.

The deceased was about sixty years of age. He belonged to one of the wealthiest and most distinguished families of his native city. He had received a thorough medical education in early life, and was much interested in medical science, but the care of his large estates, induced him to confine his practice to a limited circle. The establishment of the Hospital for the Insane and of the Asylum for the Blind, was greatly forwarded by the zeal and energy of Dr. Parkman. He had the reputation of a skillful financier, had realized large gains by investments in real estate, and was exact and methodical in his business habits.

WESTWARD TRAVEL.—The editor of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from Sandusky, Ohio, under date of Nov. 25, says that preparations for an early and signal increase of speed on the great Northern avenue between the East and the West, are being pushed forward with great confidence and vigor. In the first place, the Albany and Buffalo lines of Railroads, have resolved to run their Express Trains through in ten hours next season, instead of from fourteen to fifteen as at present. Whenever the Hudson River Road shall be completed, the Express Trains will leave Buffalo at 6. A. M., and deliver their passengers and baggage in Chambers street, a little inside of 9 P. M. the same day. This is the immediate prospect; how much improvement ten years will make upon that I do not venture to predict. The Erie Railroad route is already regarded with favor throughout Western New York and beyond. I understand passengers will next month be conveyed from New York to Geneva by this route for $5, which is less than half the former Winter charge, and not two-thirds the Summer rate via Albany. The time required by this route will be considerably less than that by Albany until the Hudson River Railroad is finished; after that, I suspect the Albany route, though longer, will not be beaten."

Mr. Belmont, the agent of the Rothschilds n this city, has married Miss Perry, daughter of Com. P. Before the marriage, he made a settlement of property worth $200,000, in the hands of trustees, for the exclusive use of his intended wife.

AN EXTRAORDINARY RESOLUTION.—The following resolution was passed by an anti-slavery meeting recently held at Oberlin, Ohio. The framer of it may hate slavery, but we are inclined to think he hates something else worse:—

"Resolved, That this convention is full of joy at the declining state of American religion, as seen in the absence of revivals, the drooping condition of all the popular churches, and the utter extinction of many of them; the small number of candidates for the ministry, at the theological seminaries; and the frequency with which the ministers escape from the sectarian pulpit into less mischievous and far more honest and laudable occupations. And we cannot but hope and pray, that as its terrible sacraments on the hearts, the hopes and happiness of millions of slaves, whose enslavement it has so long sanctified by its fellowship, its sermons, and prayers, shall end, and it shall sink into a speedy and ignominious grave, that then it shall be followed by the coming of the kingdom of righteousness and peace, when man shall no longer lift up the sword or the shackle against his fellow man, when a slave or a slaveholder shall no more be known; but when, emphatically, every man in every face shall meet a brother and a friend.

INDIAN DISTURBANCES.—The Indian disturbances on Lake Superior have been making some noise during the last few days. The origin of the difficulty is as follows. The copper lands on Lake Superior were sold to the mineral companies without leave asked or obtained of the Indian tribes, whose property they were. The Indians claimed compensation—it is said £1,250 per annum. The Government sent their deputation back to their homes, and assured them they would send commissioners to treat with them. They did send, but the season was so late, and so many of the Indians were off at their hunting grounds, that no arrangement could be made this season. At a conference with a few of the chiefs, however, there was some difference as to a Mr. McDonald, whom the Indians had chosen as their agent. This person was offended, and it is said stirred up the Indians to make an attack on the works of the Quebec Mining Company, of which they took possession. They did no harm to person or property, and it was probably only done to secure a speedy adjustment of their claims, and perhaps a larger sum. The Government has received £10,000 from the mining companies, and will receive some £40,000 more, and can well afford to give £1,250 per annum to the proper owners.

FROM NICARAGUA.—Recent intelligence from Nicaragua announces the destruction of the Musquito town of Quamwatla, by a party of Americans from the brig M. C. Draper, which was wrecked in August last about a hundred miles north of San Juan. It appears that the Indians attacked the camp of the wrecked mariners, and carried off their provisions and clothing. The captain demanded redress, and warned the Indians that in the event of non-compliance he would attack their village (Quamwatla) within the space of three days. His demand was unheeded, and accordingly, when the time was up, the whites went up to attack the town—some thirty miles in the interior—armed with sundry offensive weapons; fire was set to the houses, and the village was laid in ashes. News of this event was conveyed to San Juan, and the Musquito King, accompanied by his commissioner, Mr. Coates, started up the coast to collect the evidence in the case. It was obtained, but rebutting testimony was put in; and so the matter rested.

THE CHEROKEE INDIANS.—The National Council of the Cherokee Indians has passed a resolution instructing the Superintendant of Public Schools to make out and forward to the Secretary of the Interior, in Washington, a full exhibition of the number of their public schools, pupils in attendance, &c., and another resolution authorizing John Ross, principal chief, to procure and forward a suitable block of Cherokee marble to the Washington Monument Association, as an offering from the Cherokee Nation in aid of the construction of that great work.

THE PORTUGUESE EXILES.—The arrival of the Portuguese Exiles at Jacksonville, Ill., on the 12th Nov., is said to have been an occasion of deep interest. The sight of nearly 300 exiles, men, women and children, mounted upon some 15 tons of baggage, in seven open cars—brought to the station crowds of people, and moved all hearts in one common sympathy, drawing tears from eyes unaccustomed to weep. They seemed to vie with each other in showing them every possible kindness, opening their houses to the sick and the children; giving up their own rooms and beds, sending in provisions of every description, and giving to all a hearty shake of the hand, as a token of the sympathy and warmth with which they welcomed them to their new home.

GUTTA PERCHA.—A company, chartered by the Legislature of New Jersey, is about to invest in that State $250,000 for the manufacture of this valuable article. Heretofore, the work has been limited to machine bands and ornamental articles, owing to the want of a cheap and perfect solvent. A practical chemist of New York has recently discovered the desideratum in the volatile principle of coal naptha, by which gutta percha, without the application of heat, can be held in perfect suspense, and reduced to any desired consistency. This improvement the company will adopt, and thus be able to produce a thin, delicate, impermeable film applicable to water-proof garments and a great variety of purposes.

POLITICAL CLERGYMEN.—The New Orleans Presbyterian, referring to the announcement of Rev. D. Winans as a candidate for Congress, makes the following statement:—

"Within a few years past, we have known of fifteen ministers of the gospel in Mississippi, occupying the political field as party candidates, of whom eight were Episcopal Methodists, three Cumberland Presbyterians, two Campbellites, and one Baptist; and they were aspiring to the following posts, viz.: Governor, Chancellor of the State, Congress, State Senate, House of Representatives, State Treasurer, and Auditor, besides county officers."

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.—The First Session of the Thirty-First Congress of the United States opened on the 3d of Dec. Seldom has a National Legislature assembled, in the proceedings of which so deep an interest is felt. A thorough discussion of the question of Slavery, Cheap Postage, a Railroad to the Pacific, &c., is generally looked for. We shall keep our readers informed of the progress made.

RELIC OF WASHINGTON.—The administrators of the late David Claypoole, the veteran printer of Philadelphia, will sell at auction, on the 12th of February, the original manuscript of Washington's Farewell Address. It should be purchased by the Smithsonian Institute as a precious relic of the Father of his Country. It is thus described:—

"This paper—in the hand-writing, and bearing the signature of Washington—was presented by him to Mr. Claypoole, the then editor and proprietor of the Daily Advertiser, which gazette Gen. Washington had selected for its first publication. It makes a small quarto book of 30 pages, all in the author's writing, with sundry erasions and interlineations by his own hand."

OUR SCHOOLMASTERS ABROAD.—A son of the Hon. James C. Birney is Professor of the English Language and Literature, at the College of Bourges, in France. Many of our Common School teachers are more competent to fill these Professorships than many who now fill them, who being natives can never fully master our tongue. There is a great demand for teachers of our language in the Colleges on the Continent. A Foreign Correspondent says:—

"Any young man of energy and foresight, leaving this country with a hundred dollars, may take the tour of Europe, returning at the end of five or six years, not only with the principal modern languages well acquired, but with perhaps more money than when setting out. The route indicated is England first, then France, afterwards Germany and Russia, Italy and Spain, according to circumstances or taste."

SUMMARY.

An interesting little girl of 2 1-2 years, daughter of James Dawson, one of the assistant foremen in the N. Y. Sun establishment, came to its death a few days since in the following singular manner: The little creature was playing around the supper table, when, at a moment unobserved, it reached up its tiny hand and tipped over a cup of tea which stood on the edge of the table. The child was so severely scalded that it died the same night.

It is stated in Washington papers, from an official source, that in the amount of revenue requisite to meet the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal years ending the 30th of June, 1850, and to 30th of June, 1851, there will be a deficit of between fifteen and twenty millions of dollars. This deficit will not have been occasioned by any insufficiency of the current revenue to meet the ordinary expenditures, but by the expenses growing out of the Mexican war and the late treaty of peace with that country.

The splendid mansion of Mrs. Anna Jenkins on Benefit street, Providence, R. I., was recently burned to the ground, and, most melancholy to relate, Mrs. Jenkins [and her eldest daughter perished in the flames. The house was one of the oldest and most substantial in the city, and contained an immense amount of valuable furniture, plate, jewelry, and money, as Mrs. Jenkins was considered one of the wealthiest persons in the city.

Speaking of defaulters, a Washington letter-writer says: "I have seen a list of twenty-four defaulters whose accounts have been transmitted from a single bureau to the Solicitor of the Treasury for suit. The balances against them vary in amount from twenty-two thousand dollars to sums under a hundred.

On the morning of Nov. 8th, the court-house of the parish Claiborne (at Athens, La.) was consumed by fire, together with all the public records belonging to the parish since 1828, embracing mortgages, marriages, sales, conveyances, judgments, and every description of records, belonging to the offices of the Clerk, Sheriff, and Recorder of the parish.

The Philadelphia agency of the Camden (N. J.) Bank was recently robbed of $6,243, which included four $500 notes, and $3,000 in 50 and 100 dollar notes, dated Jan. 1, 1846, and much defaced. New notes of all these denominations have been issued, so altered as to enable the public to be on its guard against the thieves.

The Fond du Lac Republican mentions the discovery of native copper near the village of Dartford, Marquette Co., Wis. The first piece found weighed 30 lbs. 4 oz., and perfectly pure. It was discovered among rocks, the verdigris distinguishing it at the first glance. It is the third piece found in Dartford.

The Supreme Court of Vermont has recently decided that a firm doing business in the City of New York, and who, in the State of Vermont, made a contract with an inn-keeper to forward him, by common carrier, spirits which they knew he intended to sell in violation of the License Laws of Vermont, cannot recover the price of such spirits in the Courts of Vermont.

A man named Thomas was arrested at St. Louis, the other day, for counterfeiting Land Warrants. In his possession, or in possession of the woman of the house, to whom he had confided them, were found five large packages of counterfeit "Soldiers' Land Warrants," about one hundred in all. Some of them were filled up, signed, and even had a counterfeit seal of the proper office at Washington.

Geo. H. Hickman, a young Baltimore lawyer, has been arrested and held to bail in the sum of $1,000 on a charge of procuring money and land on land Warrants, to which were attached forged and fraudulent powers of attorney.

Advices from Chihuahua, to the 24th Sept., state that the cholera was raging there tremendously, having broken out two days previously, carrying off from fifty to sixty persons a day, and that out of a population of about 15,000 souls. The inhabitants are in the greatest consternation, and business was quite at a stand. In Durango, out of a population of 20,000, fully 3,000 had been swept away by this dreadful scourge.

In an official report to the War Department of the civil affairs of California, Gen. Riley estimates the number of persons actually employed in digging for gold at ten thousand, while the number of persons engaged in other employments at the placers would greatly increase this amount. The report in question will probably accompany the Message of the President.

Barnum, the curiosity hunter, recently bought at Sheriff's sale, in Philadelphia, Peale's large collection of rare and curious things at the Masonic Hall, formerly known as the Philadelphia Museum, and in its day the most complete collection of wonders ever exhibited in the United States. The whole collection was bid off for $3,500; it probably cost originally, near $100,000.

Freight from Buffalo to Albany, on the Erie Canal, a distance of 330 miles, has been for some weeks 72 cents a barrel for flour, and 20 cents a bushel for wheat. Grain is at present carried from New York to Liverpool, a distance of 3200 miles, for 7 or 8 cents a bushel; and during the summer and early part of autumn, flour was taken as low as 12 cents a barrel.

We understand, says the N. B. Union, that by the death of the late John Porter, his son-in law, Commodore Stockton, has received an addition of $24,000 per annum to his already enormous income. The annual income of the Commodore can hardly be estimated at less than one hundred thousand dollars, and probably more

Mr. George C. Little, of Bridgeton, West Jersey, sailed from New York last summer with a California company in the ship Clarissa Perkins. After a long and perilous voyage, and when the ship was fast approaching San Francisco, he fell overboard while leaning over her side fishing, and was instantly lost. The boat was launched to find him but in vain.

The Erie Railroad Company have determined to push the road forward to Hornellsville, 42 miles west of Corning, to which point the road is nearly completed. This extension will probably be ready for working by the 1st of September, 1850.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and ~~Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M.~~ or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 4 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 4 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

Sabbath Tracts.

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day—A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy—The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment—False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct, in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Miscellaneous.

THE SLAVE IN THE DISMAL SWAMP.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

In the dark fens of the Dismal Swamp
The hunted negro lay;
He saw the fire of the midnight camp,
And heard at times a horse's tramp,
And a bloodhound's distant bay.

Where will-o-the-wisps and glow worms shine,
In bulrush and in brake;
Where waving mosses shroud the pine,
And the cedar grows, and the poisonous vine
Is spotted like the snake;

Where hardly a human foot could pass,
Or a human heart would dare,
On the quaking turf of the deep morass,
He crouched in the rank and tangled grass
Like a wild beast in his lair.

A poor old slave, infirm and lame;
Great scars deformed his face;
On his forehead he bore the brand of shame,
And the rags that hid his mangled frame,
Wore the livery of disgrace.

All things above were bright and fair;
All things were glad and free;
The squirrels dancing here and there,
And wild birds filled the echoing air
With songs of liberty.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.

At the recent Railroad Convention in Tennessee, says the Memphis Appeal, a resolution was passed inviting Mr. Whitney to appear and explain his project for a railroad to the Pacific. Accordingly, he appeared, exhibited his maps, and explained his plan. He first represented our position in the center of the world. This was done by a skeleton map, which placed Europe and Africa on one side, with the Atlantic between us, and on the other side the Pacific between us and all Asia. This he said was a division and an arrangement which he claimed to be the originator of. He then declared the objects of a railroad to the Pacific in his opinion to be, to change the route for the commerce and intercourse of Europe with Asia and make it tributary to us, to carry the vast product of the Mississippi Basin to Asia for a market, and to open to settlement and production as great an extent as possible of agricultural country, which would thereby become a source of power and wealth to the nation. And to accomplish these great objects he said the route must be so far North that the sphere of the globe would so shorten the distance, as to force a change to it, and make the commerce of the world tributary to us. And the route must be so far North that the climate would not damage or destroy our products on their way to Asia, and where the lands on its line could be made to furnish the means for the work with facilities, materials, &c. A road built by the Government would cost from 150 to 200 millions, and must either charge tolls to pay the interest on its cost, as also for its operation and repairs, or else that interest must be provided for by a tax upon the people, and surely no one can believe that the people would submit to such taxation. And as it would cost 60 cents to transport a bushel of corn from the Mississippi to the Pacific, there would be no market for it, and with a toll of $2 50 for a bbl. of flour, there could be no market. With such high tolls, the commerce of Europe with Asia would be entirely excluded; but if the road could be built as he proposes, from the public lands, then there would be no interest to provide for, and a bushel of corn could be taken to the Pacific for 25 cents, and China would be a market for millions of bushels; and at $1 for a bbl. of flour, there would be a market for millions. And at the same rate for the commerce of Europe with Asia, it would all be forced over the road, and the whole world made tributary to us. Yes, he said, with this road built to effect these great results, we shall have conquered and subdued the whole world without the shedding of one drop of blood, or the expenditure of one dollar in money.

RULES FOR FEEDING ANIMALS.

1st. The preparation of feed. This should be so prepared that its nutritive properties may all be made available to the use of the animal, and not only so, but appropriated with the least possible expenditure of muscular exertion and energy. The ox that is obliged to wander over an acre to get the food he should find in two or three square rods; the horse that is two or three hours eating the coarse food he could swallow in fifteen minutes, if the grain was ground or the hay cut, as it should be; the sheep that spends hours in making its way into a turnip when, if it were sliced, it could be eaten in as many minutes; the pig that eats raw potatoes or whole corn, when either cooked could be eaten in one-fourth the time—may indeed fatten, but much less rapidly than when their food is given them in a proper manner. All food should be given to a fattening animal in such a state, that as little time and labor as possible on the part of the animal shall be required in eating.

2d. The food should be in abundance. From the time the fattening process commences until the animal is slaughtered he should never be without food. Health and appetite are best promoted by change of food, rather than by limiting the quantity. The animal that is stuffed and starved alternately may have streaked meat, but it will be formed too slowly for the profit of the owners.

3d. The feed should be given regularly. This is one of the most essential points in feeding animals. If given irregularly, the animal indeed consumes his food, but he soon acquires a restless disposition, is disturbed at the sight of his feeder, and is never in that quiet state so necessary to the taking on of fat. It is surprising how readily an animal acquires habits of regularity in feeding, and how soon the influence of this is felt in the improvement of his constitution. When at the regular hour the pig has had his pudding, or the sheep its turnips, they compose themselves to rest with the consciousness that their digestion is not to be unseasonably disturbed, or their quiet broken by an unwonted invitation to eat. All creatures fatten much faster in the dark than in the light, a fact only to be accounted for by their greater quiet. Some of those creatures that are the most irritable and impatient of restraint while feeding, such as turkeys and geese, are found to take on fat rapidly when confined in dark rooms, and fed at stated hours by hand. There is no surer proof that a pig is doing well, than to see him eat his meal quickly, and then retire to his bed to sleep, or cogitate till the hour of feeding returns. [Agricultural Guide.

A TIMELY GUSH OF WATER.

Below is an extract from a long letter in the Cincinnati Enquirer, written from California by a member of the United States Boundary Commission.

"Of all the great natural wonders discovered in California, none has been so marvelous and astonishing as the breaking out of a subterranean river in the middle of the great desert! This fact is announced by a number of men who have reached here within a few days, traveling in different parties. Look at the map, and you will see a desert marked down, reaching from near San Diego to near this mouth of the Colorado. It stretches across a space of some ninety miles. These emigrants, in whose integrity we confide, report that about the first of this month, a stream of water burst forth from the sandy plain, about the middle of this desert, which had flown into an aroyd, or old stream bed, and then extended several miles towards the North, and when they came to it was near a hundred yards wide. Some of them passed it while it was running parallel with the road. Others came after them three or four days, when it had crossed the road, and was so deep that their animals had to swim. The Indians had discovered it and were following it up and down, to see whence it came, [illegible] whither it was coursing, all of them al[illegible], and superstitiously charging such a wonder to the American emigrants. The water was tolerably good, having the taste of rain water, and the appearance of the water of the Colorado. Mr. Robb, of the St. Louis Reveille, mentioned having seen at a distance to his left, when he was almost famishing, in the centre of the desert, what looked to him like a running stream, but he feared to leave the road to examine it. It had not then made such headway to where it was subsequently discovered and crossed. We can now only conjecture the cause of this astonishing anomaly—the intelligent here supposing that the Colorado, which has been very high, and for a considerable period has found a subterranean passage, which being pent up has thus broke forth. If this body of water should continue a living stream, henceforth the desert will be robbed of half its horrors. But this is scarcely to be hoped for. It will probably disappear as soon as the water of the Colorado recedes.

WASHINGTON ON SLAVERY.

The Father of his Country, in a letter of April 12th, 1786, to Robert Morris, said that so far as his suffrage went, it never should be wanting, to secure the abolition of slavery by legislative authority. In May, of the same year, he wrote Lafayette a letter, and, alluding to the latter's purchase of an estate in the colony of Cayenne, with a view of emancipating the slaves on it, expressed a wish that a like spirit might diffuse itself into the minds of the people of this country. In September, of the same year, he says to John F. Mercer, that he never means, unless some particular circumstance should compel it, to possess another slave by purchase, it being among his first wishes to see some legal plan of abolition adopted. Ten years thereafter, in his letter of Dec. 11th, 1796, to Sir John Sinclair, he attributes the high prices of land in Pennsylvania, over those in Maryland and Virginia, to the laws in the former State for the gradual abolition of slavery. His will is dated July 9th, 1799. From it is taken the following extract:—

"Upon the decease of my wife, it is my desire that all the slaves whom I hold in my own right, shall receive their freedom. To emancipate them during her life, would, though earnestly wished by me, be attended with such insuperable difficulties, on account of their intermixture by marriage with the dower negroes, as to excite the most painful sensations, if not disagreeable consequences to the latter, while both description, are in the occupancy of the same proprietor, it not being in my power, under the tenure by which the dower negroes are held, to manumit them. * * * And I do, moreover, most pointedly and most solemnly enjoin it upon my executors hereafter named, or the survivors of them, to see that this clause respecting slaves, and every part there of, be religiously fulfilled at the epoch at which it is directed to take place, without evasion, neglect or delay, after the crops which may then be on the ground are harvested, particularly as it respects the aged and infirm, seeing that a regular and permanent fund be established for their support, as long as there are subjects requiring it, not trusting to the uncertain provision made by individuals."

TRAGICAL AFFAIR.

Among the strangers of distinction who for many years came to spend the winter in Paris, were M. and Madame Acros, Spaniards of immense wealth. Failing to make their usual visit last winter, it was thought their Castilian pride could not accommodate itself to republican rule; but it afterward appeared that their absence arose from a far different cause. M. Acros, like his countryman Aguado, had made his own fortune. He began his life as a pedlar and small retail trader; and having thus accumulated some funds, he engaged in stock speculation, then became contractor for the salt tax in Spain, and finally, when still young, retired from business a millionare. He might have enjoyed his fortune long and happily; but endeavoring to indulge a pardonable vanity, he lost both fortune and life. It appears that M. Acros, while yet poor, had made a voyage to Chili, and there became smitten with a young lady of respectable family, who were proud of their rank, her uncle being no less a personage than the Bishop of Santiago. So that, it being thought a great piece of presumption in a poor man to expect a Bishop's neice, he met with a rude rebuff on demanding her in marriage. But as the young lady was willing to give her consent, the Bishop was not again asked; and having married secretly, the young couple departed for Europe.

After becoming wealthy, M. Acros wished, by displaying it with his wife, to triumph over the family that once disdained him. Instead then of going to Paris last winter, M. and Madame Acros departed for Chili in a vessel which they had purchased and furnished at a great expense. They carried with them all the appliances of luxury and show; diamonds, plate, splendid furniture, carriages, and servants in rich liveries; nothing was forgotten that might serve to dazzle their disdainful relatives. After a pleasant voyage they arrived in Chili, but they had still before them a land journey of 300 miles before they could arrive at the city where the family of Madame Acros resided. They were informed that the road was infested by bands of robbers, so ferocious that they even fed upon the flesh of their victims, and were advised to wait until these bands had been dispersed.

But M. Acros, impatient to enjoy the triumph of his self-love, procured an escort of one hundred well-armed men, and set out on his journey with all his train. Letters recently received from Valparaiso contain most melancholy intelligence concerning the unfortunate travelers. About half-way, the caravan was attacked, part were killed, part escaped by flight, and the rest, with M. Acros and his wife, were made prisoners, and after being robbed of all their property, were put to death on the spot.

THEY SHALL NOT BLUSH FOR THEIR FATHER.

Two men had entered into an agreement to rob one of their neighbors. Every thing was planned. They were to enter his house at midnight, break open his chests and drawers, and carry off all the gold and silver they could find.

"He is rich, and we are poor," said they to each other, by way of encouragement in the evil they were about to perform. "He will never miss a little gold; while its possession will make us happy. Besides, what right has one man to all of this world's goods."

Thus they talked together. One of these men had a wife and children, but the other had none in the world to care for but himself. The man who had children, went home and joined his family, after agreeing upon a place of meeting with the other at the darkest hour of the coming night.

"Dear father," said one of the children, climbing upon his knee, "I'm so glad you have come home."

The presence of the child troubled the man, and he tried to push him away; but his arms clung tighter about his neck, and he laid his face against his cheek, and said, in a sweet and gentle voice—

"I love you, father."

Involuntarily the man drew the innocent and loving one to his bosom and kissed him.

There were two older children in the man's dwelling, a boy and a girl. They were poor, and these children worked daily, to keep up the supply of bread made deficient, more through idleness in the father than from lack of employment. These children came in soon after their father's return, and brought him their earnings for the day.

"Oh, father!" said the boy, "such a dreadful thing has happened. Henry Lee's father was arrested to-day for robbing. They took him out of our shop, when Henry was there, and carried him off to prison. I was so sad when I saw Henry weeping. And he hung his head for shame—for shame of his own father! Only think of that."

The man did not reply to the words of his son, but turned his face partly away to conceal its expression.

"Ashamed of his father!" thought he. "And will my children hang their heads, also, in shame? No—no. That shall never be!"

At the hour of midnight the man who had no children to throw around him a sphere of better intention, was waiting at the place of rendezvous for him whose children had saved him. But he waited long, in vain. Then he said—

"I will do the deed myself and take the entire reward."

And he did according to his word. When the other man went forth to his labor on the next day, he learned that his accomplice had been taken in the act of robbery, and was already in prison.

"Thank Heaven for virtuous children!" said he with fervor. "They have saved me. Never will I do any act that will cause them to blush for their father."

"GREEN SPECTACLES."—Under this head a correspondent of the Independent gives the following "words of advice to our clerical friends," which may be useful to others:

1. Never come into a large city without having read the Vicar of Wakefield, and conned over, with special care, the matter of the green spectacles.

2. Whenever you see an auction shop, for the sale of watches, trinkets, or other small wares, remember that green spectacles are sold there.

3. Spare a little time from the study of the Fathers, to look into the small items, police reports, &c., in the newspapers, and thus learn not merely what the fathers wrote, but also what the sons are doing.

4. If, from any laudable desire to gain information, you should be disposed to spend a little time in an auction shop, first take pen, ink, and paper, and deliberately record a vow not to speak, nod, or wink, while in the shop. Having done this, read it over and have it witnessed by at least two judicious friends; let each of them take you by the arm, and between them walk in. Go not alone; lean not on your own understanding. When in, remember that every word you hear is a lie, and every action represents a falsehood.

5. Remember that the good Vicar has successors quite as innocent as himself in the ways of the world, and that there are greener things than green spectacles. VERBUM SAT.

CHOLERA AND ANIMALCULES.—Prof. R. D. Mussey, of the Ohio Medical College, has made a series of experiments in relation to cholera and the existence of minute animals in the air and in the bodies and discharges of cholera patients. He has found in the atmosphere of the room in which cholera patients are kept, that multitudes of animalcules are discernable, and with a microscope a power of 2,000 times that these little animals were magnified to about one-fourth of an inch long. They move with the same motion of the snake, and are very tenacious of life, being active of 80° of Fahrenheit. In the muscles of cholera patients, ten hours after death, they abound in great numbers, and also in the rice-water discharges of patients. It is thought from these discoveries that some important facts may be elicited toward establishing the existence of some remedial agent. The Cincinnati Chronicle and Atlas states that some persons were attacked with all cholera symptoms from eating some cheese purchased in that city. The cheese is to be analyzed, when doubtless some new facts in the animalcule line will be brought to light.

STEAMERS FOR CALIFORNIA.—Such has been the success attending the establishment of a line of steamers from New York to California via the Isthmus, and so great the rush of passengers on that route, that new boats have been purchased to go on the line. The merchants of New York are asking Government for a semi-monthly mail to San Francisco. Howland & Aspinwall, with their associates, were the pioneers in steam communication with California. They placed three large steamers in the Pacific, and soon added another, the Unicorn. They have now purchased the steamship Tennessee, which will leave in a few days to take her place on the route between Panama and San Francisco, making the fifth steamer of the line in the Pacific. The line of steamers which connects with this on the Atlantic side, belongs to another company. J. Howard & Sons, who have been running a line of steamers, the Crescent City and the Empire City, between New York and Chagres, have just engaged two steamers to go to the Pacific and complete their line through to San Francisco. They have chartered the Sarah Sands, and Mr. Charles Morgan, who owns in the other steamers, has purchased the New Orleans, both which vessels will, with all dispatch, go round the Horn, to take the passengers that the Crescent City and the Empire City land at Chagres.

OSAGE INDIANS.—A delegation of these Indians, from Neosha agency, recently had an interview with the President. They consisted of a chief and four warriors. They went to complain of the non-payment of their annuities before the annual hunt. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs informed them that the cause of non-payment was the illness of the agent, who was then well, and probably at the agency distributing the amounts. They were introduced to their Great Father by the Secretary of the Interior. They were received in the east room, welcomed, and assured that justice should be done them. White Head, the Chief, replied that they had come a long way to see their Great Father, that they were pleased with his kindness, and that they would so tell their people. The President spoke to them of agricultural pursuits, and reminded them that the chase was becoming very precarious, and would no longer afford them a reliable living. White Head, says the Republic, then presented the President a roll of paintings, carefully tied up, which he said had been made and given him by the little girls of the nation, to present to their Great Father, of whom they had all heard. These were very pretty, and displayed much skill and progress in the art, and were warmly praised by the President, who seemed pleased by the present. White Head also presented a little package, neatly tied up, which contained a beautiful and finely wrought bead purse, sent to the Great Father by a little Osage girl.

THE ONEIDA STONE.—In Stockbridge, Madison County, New York, is a famous stone by the above name, reputed by persons familiar with Indian history as the fabled source of the Oneidas, who are said to have sprung from among the Onondagas, and first settled at the mouth of Oneida Creek, then up the valley. This stone was believed by them to have followed their wanderings, and fixed itself where now found. Near it were their Council fires, on the summit of a lofty range of hills, commanding a fine position and wide prospect. Stone, says the Utica Gazette, in their language means onia. They called themselves Oniata-ang or people of the stone. Thence came the word Oneida. The Oneida stone is a large and solitary boulder of syenite, different from the rocks in the vicinity both in character and appearance. Of late years it has been much visited, and fragments knocked off by the antiquary's hammer and carried away. To preserve it from still farther havoc, it has been transferred to the new cemetery in Utica, where it forms a prominent monument, facing the visitor at the fork of the roads on his entrance.

NEST EGGS.—To those who keep hens, and desire eggs in winter, a good nest egg is important. The qualities of a good nest are a tolerable resemblance to a real egg—for a close resemblance is not important. A hen will not lay to an egg shell, however perfect it may be, for she knows by its want of weight that it is counterfeit. A good nest egg is made of solid hickory wood turned to the right shape. But every one has not a lathe, and such eggs are not always to be had. Another nest egg, which may be made by any body, any where, was lately described to us by Mr. D. Lathrop, of Lasalle, a gentleman who keeps a hundred hens, and is very apt to find out the best mode of any particular thing.

The eggs are made of clay, formed to the right shape, in the hands. After being dried they are whitewashed, when they are ready for use. The matter is so simple, that it only requires to be thought of, to be available. These eggs answer the purpose perfectly—the hens accepting them as fully as those of their own make. [Prairie Farmer.

STRANGE COINCIDENCES.—Very strange it is, that of the general officers of both the American and Mexican armies who strove so hard to meet a soldier's death, on the battle-plains of Mexico, in vain, since peace has been restored, four have died on each side. First on our side, the gallant Gen. Worth was called to his long home; then among the Mexicans, Gen. Paredes, the author of the war, was numbered with the dead. Then again on our side, Col. Duncan died, and on the Mexican Gen. Urrea. Then Gen. Gaines amongst us, and Gen. Rejon in Mexico. Finally, Major Gates died here, and Major General Rincon in Mexico. This general mortality amongst General officers of the two countries, is not the less singular, from the reciprocity of the catastrophes, man dying for man. "Sic transit gloria mundi.

IMPORTANCE OF A SINGLE VOTE.—One single vote sent Oliver Cromwell to the Long Parliament, Charles Stuart to the scaffold, revolutionized England, and made Great Britain free. Four votes, in the city of New York, made Thomas Jefferson President of the United States. One vote gave us the tariff of 1842, and one vote made the tariff of 1846. One vote gave us Texas, made war with Mexico, slew thousands of our people, and purchased California, turned thither the tide of emigration, and will change the destiny of the world. [Day Book.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION IN ILLINOIS.—The Illinois Senate at its late session passed the best Homestead Exemption bill we have yet seen. Its superiority consists in exempting from seizure and sale a certain quantity of land without reference to its estimated value; the main provisions of the bill are as follows:—

The bill for an act to exempt homesteads from sale on execution, exempts from sale for debt forty acres used for agricultural purposes, and not included in any town plat, city or village, or instead thereof, at the option of the debtor, a quantity of land not exceeding one-fourth of an acre, within a recorded town plat, city, or village, and the dwelling-house thereon, occupied by the head of a family residing with the same. The second section is as follows:—

Such exemption shall not extend to any mechanics' and laborers' lien, or any mortgage thereon lawfully obtained; but such mortgage or other alienation of such land by the owner thereof, if a married man, shall not be valid without the signature of his wife.

INCREASE OF THE STATES.—The Philadelphia Pennsylvanian publishes an interesting Table of the ratio of increase of the several States, between 1830 and 1840, as follows:

	per cent.		per cent.
Michigan	570	New Jersey	16
Illinois	265	Georgia	14
Arkansas	220	Kentucky	13
Mississippi	175	Rhode Island	11
Missouri	173	N. Hampshire	5

OUT AT LAST.—Mr. Whittaker, who was wounded in the thigh during the Kensington riot, has got rid of the ball. It came out of the wound a few days ago. Mr. W. was in the hospital for a long time, and finally left that institution with the belief that he would never get well. The ball was in his thigh for the term of five years and a half. It was much flattened, and the interstices in the rough part of it are filled with powdered bone. It weighs about half an ounce.

Variety.

At the death of Mr. Holden, one of the proprietors of the Philadelphia Saturday Courier, a dispute arose as to the amount his widow should receive for her husband's half of the paper. The matter has been in litigation for a long time, and now the Philadelphia Ledger of the 14th ult. says: "We are informed, upon good authority, that this long contested case has been amicably settled between the parties. Mrs. Holden has received, for her interest in the paper, over $40,000 in cash, and over $50,000 of debts due the establishment have been assigned to her."

There were 600 convicts in the Auburn Prison on the 2d ult. The number has been for some months rapidly increasing. Probably the increased consumption of brandy and other intoxicating drinks, for which the cholera furnished a reason or an excuse, is now—the connection between crime and intemperance being so intimate—exhibiting its effects in filling our prisons.

The Turkish Government has established a system for gratuitous medical aid throughout the Empire. Physicians are appointed, with salaries, to visit and attend the sick, prohibited to take any fees from the poor. They are to report their cases every three months officially. They are subjected to penalties, if they neglect the poor in favor of other classes.

The largest paper-mill in the world is said to be the great mill at Darwin, in Lancashire, England. It cost $750,000, was worked by five hundred horse power, of steam and water; had nine paper-making machines, besides all others connected with the trade, and a reservoir of filtering water which cost $100,000. Nine years ago this mill yielded a profit of from $60,000 to $85,000 per annum.

For many years, the Bank of England has refused to make advances upon American gold coin. The reason given is, that the amount of alloy is variable, and the stamp is no accurate evidence of its value. Hence it is necessary for the borrower to send his coin to the assayer, who converts it into bars, upon which he affixes his stamp. It will then, and not till then, be received by the bank as security.

To know whether an egg will produce a male or female chicken, it is directed to hold it between the eye and the candle, and if the vacancy caused by the air-bag, which every egg contains at the blunt end, appears to be on one side, it will produce a hen; if the vacancy be exactly in the center, it will produce a cock. The largest eggs commonly produce cocks.

A cocoa-nut tree has been recently drifted ashore on the island of Valentia, near Kerry, Ireland—another proof that the Gulf stream, after running along the American coast, sets across the Atlantic.

One of the most noted gamblers in San Francisco is said to be a Spanish woman. She has been known to put up twenty-five pounds of gold at a single stake.

The express train over the Northern road, a week ago last Saturday, is said to have run two and one-half miles on Andover (N. H.) plains, in one minute and nine seconds!

At a wedding in Albany recently, the bride's cake excited general admiration. It cost $100, and was a beautiful temple, nine feet high, of the Grecian and Italian style of architecture.

It is estimated that there are 150 religious newspapers published in this country, circulating above half a million of sheets every week.

Rev. Dr. Nott, the President of Union College, is now 76 years of age, and has been at the head of the College for forty-five years.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

A Card.

TO THE PATRONS OF GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE.—The close of the current Volume is deemed a proper period to announce to the patrons of this Magazine, that arrangements have been completed which cannot fail to increase its attractions during the coming year. The best writers in the country will continue to enrich our pages with their productions, and our engravers—who stand foremost in their profession—will put forth the best efforts of their art to make this peculiar department of the Magazine more beautiful than ever.

Promising unremitted exertions to merit a continuance of the favor bestowed upon the Magazine, we respectfully solicit a renewal of the subscriptions of all its old patrons, and the addition of the names of all who desire to avail themselves of the satisfaction of reading what is universally conceded to be "THE BEST MAGAZINE IN THE COUNTRY."

Attention is called to the following list of Terms, which are unquestionably more advantageous to subscribers than those offered by any other work of the kind.

TERMS.—For $3 in advance, (par-money in the States from which it is remitted,) one copy of Graham and a copy of a large and magnificent print, by a distinguished Engraver, and which may be considered one of the most beautiful specimens of art ever presented by any Magazine publisher, and also a new and beautiful Engraving, suitable for framing, of a Sacred subject, "Bearing the Saviour to the Tomb," prepared expressly, and at a very heavy cost, as a Premium Gift to new subscribers to Graham's Magazine. Or, if desired, we will furnish in lieu of either of the above Prints, a complete set of our Mezzotint Portraits of the American Heroes of the Late War with Mexico. For $5, two copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints to each subscriber. For $10, five copies for one year, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person forming the club, and either of the above Prints, or a set of Portraits, to each subscriber. For $20, eleven copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints, or a set of Portraits to each subscriber, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person sending the club, with a copy of each of the large Prints as an additional Premium.

☞ Any person forwarding a club of 20, or upwards, shall receive for his trouble a complete copy of W. H. Graham's "American Historical and Biographical Library."

EXTRACTS FROM MISSIONARY LETTERS.

Teaching Chinese Children.

From a letter of Mrs. Wardner.

The clamor I have kept up about Chinese children and schools, leaves no doubt about my favorite scheme; and for the present I am happily committed in trying to teach a few to teach themselves. Perhaps the anxious projects that brought about this committal would not interest you, but allow me to think present facts will. Should you come here after the native schools are closed for the day, in one of these unfinished rooms you might find a table surrounded with boys writing the Scriptures; another small table surrounded with boys studying the Scriptures aloud; and some, in their haste to fasten sentences upon their minds, trying the strength of their skulls; some regarding their lessons as humming birds do flowers, so far as gyrations of the head are concerned; one, who finds the hard words are not all familiar, walking the floor with every appearance of agony; and one standing in a corner, with his back towards me, reciting his lesson—his body vibrates from right to left, his eyes are closed, his head thrown back, and each breath is caught as though it was the last expected. Now, should you attempt to make American school boys of these children, no lesson would be learned for the next half hour.

Come here on Sabbath day, and you can witness a different scene. There is no writing or very loud studying; should one appear disorderly, his associates remind him, "It is Sabbath, not like yesterday, no offense to ears." In orderly succession, each one comes to the chair and recites the hymns and texts he has committed through the week. After all have recited, one of the most intelligent reads some Scripture story, previously prepared by the teacher, which is explained by maps and pictures. Then comes a long list of questions from sacred history, which are answered with much delight. Then some boy reads a hymn, and explains it. Then all join in singing. After singing, they receive their rewards, and quietly retire. It would seem superfluous to mention these things, if it were not for the fact, that when these boys first came to me, they seemed to know nothing of their relation to God and man. Their maxim was, "Obey your parents, and live and get all you can." But now the Bible precepts are occasionally made practical. True, they may not yet believe that this Holy Book has its origin from the true God; but is there not reason to hope, that it will prove itself sufficient to probe the heart with its divine truths, and open the eyes to behold its heavenly beauties?

For fear of misunderstandings, I do not converse much with the children. Every anticipated explanation or difficulty is brought before the teacher; if it is of importance or requires more than a few words, he writes it out, I give it to one of the most intelligent, and he reads and explains for the rest. The unexpected difficulties, if not satisfactorily settled at the time, are laid by for the teacher to prepare explanations of before the next meeting. The following may show how the Decalogue's instructions are applied.

One day some boys said that "Serban," one of the scholars, "had stolen a pin." (They think a foreign pin quite a prize.) I asked, "What does the eighth commandment say?" It was immediately repeated by two or three. I said, "Steal what?" "Steal any thing," they answered. They saw the application, and two or three directly said, "Now, Serban has stolen a pin; he has broken this command, and the true God will not love him." That same night, Serban brought back the pin, and said he did not intend to steal it. Soon after, one of the boys, in hope to be permitted to come here all the next day, said that all the schools would be closed. I asked Serban what the ninth commandment said. He repeated it, and came to the conclusion that if Bingzung, the boy in question, said untrue words, he had displeased the true God.

To show some of their strange ideas, let me add one more story. In studying the fourth chapter of Matthew, they could not imagine what "moog" (satan) was, nor had they ever heard of any thing that always tempted people to do wrong, and they seemed to think the foreign satan as peculiar as the great Creator. The subject was put by for that day, and the next night, before the examination was called for, one boy came triumphantly saying that he "had found out what satan was; he was the one that did all the bad things, and our true God did not believe in him."

Fifteen boys have well committed the ten commandments and the golden rule, and the greater part of them are now studying Matthew's gospel. More than twenty have committed a hymn that contains a short history of creation, and a reproof for the lamentable practice of men in worshiping false gods instead of worshiping the Creator of all things. Some girls attend, and commit short questions and answers, but I do not hope much of them; they can not read, nor are they disposed to learn; they do not come excepting on the Sabbath, and not regularly then. The boys labor under disadvantages. Some would commit if they could have the lessons without coming here to recite, and some can read who can not write. I hope soon to have some copies of Matthew's gospel printed for them. True, there is much to discourage. The fear of exciting prejudices, the indolent habits of some, the amount of time required to prepare maps and books for explanations and rewards, and to correct the books I give away, which I find well filled with Shangte, washing ceremony, ceremony-worship-day, Sunday calendars, &c.; but in all this there is nothing worse than attends every attempt to enlighten the heathen. Though the skies sometimes look dark, and I can not repress my fears, I still prefer my present tasks to any other.

Formerly I gave the boys a lesson in geography once a week, and find them as ignorant of this as of our religion. Even the gentlemen here who claim the teacher's title, will show you square maps which they call maps of the world, all covered over with China except a small bit in one corner, which they call England, and a narrow strip below, which they call the western ocean. If you ask them "if the world is round?" they will say in reply, "If the world was round the water would fall off." I had much difficulty in getting up a question book, on account of the want of scientific names in the spoken dialect; and when I asked the teacher to write, that Canaan was in the western part of Asia, he said, "It can not be; for you say China is in Asia, and China is very large."

My exercises with the children seem to have a favorable effect on some of the mothers and older sisters. They now will listen, apparently with pleasure, to things that used to frighten them away, and they like to hear the boys read and explain. But there are others who look suspicious. Those who attend the class, say they understand what is said in the chapel, while those children who do not attend the class, say they hear the preacher but do not understand.

Maxims and Customs of the Chinese.

From a letter of Mrs. Carpenter.

There seems to be something peculiarly difficult in undermining the religion of the Chinese. They have so much that is truly excellent, so much that is even embodied in the religion of Jesus, that they feel, as they constantly say, the difference is not great. "The first commandment with promise," is to them the great commandment. But "honor thy father and mother," is a precept which ends not with the mortal life of those parents, and heathenism has no alternative but the worship of ancestors. "He that gives to the poor lends to the Lord, and that which he gives will he pay him again," is a principle as familiar to them as to us. They give alms with the full persuasion that their ruling deity will reward them tenfold, and even in their offerings to their ancestors, they do not forget to throw in handfuls of rice, which are to be distributed among the poor in another world. "Whom the gods love die young," is a proverb which also tends to make them love and honor goodness, and regard with a kind of awe those whom the gods have taken early to themselves. These are some of the difficulties which we have to contend with, in presenting the new doctrine to them.

The semi-yearly season for repairing and decorating the tombs, and making offerings to ancestors, has just passed by. The country is strown with the ashes of gilt paper, and the ruins of the baskets which contained it. Here and there also may be seen a coffin reduced to cinders, being no longer needed to contain the bones, which are henceforth to have a more honorable place among their ancestral relics. Miniature palaces are burnt, with their accompaniment of out-houses for servants, and all the paraphernalia of comfort, which has as yet found its way into the Chinese analysis of that variously estimated commodity. These are also, as well as the houses which contain them, constructed of the lightest kind of paper, on the frailest of bamboo frames, but richly decorated, and painted with much taste and skill. Large supplies of their coin current are added, and after the fire is applied, while all is in its transition state, the mourning women throw in their portions of rice, making loud lamentations in the interval, swaying back and forth, with clasped hands as they "keduh" (bow-down,) repeatedly before the offering. But here I have sometimes thought they must feel the difference between their own faith and ours, when we have drawn the comparison by telling them that Jesus had gone to prepare mansions for his followers, enduring in the skies.

A few days since we saw the process of burying the dead for the first time. The mounds, when completed, range from six to twelve feet high, with a square base, varying from six to twenty feet across, the circular elevation above converging to a point, and generally surmounted by a tuft of long grass, a turf with flowers, or a small shrub, or plant. The one we saw in progress was about half its destined height, and men were scooping out the grave, apparently about three feet deep. Men, in their mourning garments, (which are always long and white,) stood like spectres around the coffin, which was awaiting a burial, near by. Two or three other men were preparing lime with water, a large bed of it, which, from seeing the contents of burnt coffins, and from the whited sepulchres and garnished tombs which everywhere abound, may account, in some measure, for a fact which would otherwise strike us as strange, that with such a host of unburied corpses the atmosphere is not sensibly effected by the effluvia of their decay.

At some seasons of the year the ancestral urns stand thickly scattered over the fields, previous to their final deposite, in their last resting-place. The doctrine of the resurrection seems to strike them rather forcibly, and often furnishes a theme for a lecture or discussion, in our rambles. A few weeks since, I went with Mr. Carpenter for a morning walk, and, when just outside the west gate, we ascended a high mound, where horses were grazing, and their keepers remaining near. The people, seeing us there, ran, as usual, to have a glimpse of the foreigners, when a conversation like following took place:

"What is the name of this hill?" "Tong-zen-dong." "What is its use?" "To bury the dead." [The burying-place of the temple near us, of the same name.] "Then dead men lie beneath?" "Yes." "These shall all rise again at the last day. This is the resurrection doctrine; do you wish to hear?" "Wish to hear? wish to hear?" was re-echoed on all sides, for by this time a multitude was around us. "The doctrine of the resurrection is Jesus' doctrine; do you wish to hear?" "Yawting! yawting!" [wish to hear,] was again re-echoed, and they listened with apparent interest to the words of life, asking Mr. C., when he had finished, where he preached; and promising to come and hear, bade us "man-che, man-che," and we departed. So much for the seed sown by the way side.

THE GERMAN SABBATH-KEEPERS.

Eld. Azor Estee is now on his way to Virginia, where he expects to labor as a missionary during the coming year. A letter from him, dated, Snowhill, Pa., Nov. 25, 1849, says:—

I have enjoyed an agreeable visit with our German brethren at Snowhill. They have experienced, for a few years past, a severe trial of their faith; but, notwithstanding they have been cast down, they have not been destroyed—although they have been persecuted, they have not been forsaken. The persecution and reproach to which they have been subjected, have not shaken their faith or inclined them to turn away from the commandment of the Lord. They still firmly believe in the perpetuity and unchangeable nature of God's holy law. Their trials, instead of retarding their progress in the pathway of obedience, appear to have inspired them with more zeal in the cause of truth. They are resolved to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and do what they can to maintain the integrity of God's law. One of the leading members of the Society, in conversation with me, remarked, that he believed the harrassing prosecutions, to which he and others had been subjected, had resulted in a blessing, even to themselves. This brother is engaged in farming upon a large scale. He admitted, that when first arrested from his business, and exposed to fines and costs, and all the anxieties of litigation, his natural feelings were aroused, and an excitement of mind produced, which savored too much of the spirit of this world. In the progress of events, however, he and others became willing to suffer persecution even to fines and imprisonment for their faithful adherence to God's law. In the language of the Psalmist, they can say, "It is good for us that we have been afflicted."

When the highest judicial authority in the State had decided against them, they were summoned to settle the fines and costs already made, and threatened, at the same time, with an augmentation of costs if the matter was not immediately attended to. As Paul and Silas would not leave the prison at the mere bidding of the magistrates, and repelled the idea of being thrust out privily, so our brethren at Snowhill did not feel under obligation to move at the bidding of their persecutors. They feared not the notoriety of a public sale, in which their property would be wrested from them by the strong arm of the law. The sale occurred, but not to the disadvantage of the brethren, or of the cause they are laboring to promote. They are sanguine in the belief, that their enemies are now thoroughly convinced that this persecution is working against themselves, and tending to promote the very cause they wished to destroy. They believe it is on this account that the hand of persecution is stayed, and they are permitted to pursue their avocations without molestation on the first day. They rejoice that these untoward circumstances have been overruled to the furtherance of the cause of truth, and that, as a consequence, probably thousands have investigated the Sabbath question, who otherwise might not have had their attention called to it at all.

The Sabbath-keepers in Pennsylvania are resolved upon making an earnest appeal to the Legislature for the enactment of a law to exempt them from the provisions of the Act under which they have been suffering. Petitions are now being circulated, and will be presented to the Legislature in the early part of its coming session.

During my stay in this part of the country, I have been permitted to preach twice on the subject of the Sabbath to large and attentive congregations—once in Quincy, and once at Green Castle. This is the first time our views of the Sabbath have been presented publicly in either of these places. I have good evidence that many, in both congregations to which I have referred, saw clearly the fallacy of the arguments usually advanced in favor of the first day, while they felt the force of the reasonings in favor of the original Sabbath. AZOR ESTEE.

A CHINESE CONGREGATION.

We find the following in the Spectator. It is from a letter written by the Rev. Dr. Perkins, a Methodist Episcopal Missionary in China. The congregation described is one at Shanghai.

There is scarcely such a thing as beginning and ending a sermon in Shanghai without interruption. One man comes in, bringing a crying child, which keeps the house in an uproar for a while, and is carried off by the mother after no little disturbance. Another brings a good load of old fish, which is deposited, perhaps, in unpleasant proximity to the preacher's olfactories. Another comes with a coop of ducks, and after some trouble he consents to deposit them outside among sundry cooly-loads of grain, vegetables and oil jars, which have already been left there by those who have too much politeness to bring them inside. Another brings a cage of noisy birds, which he perhaps tries to dispose of, until the preacher succeeds in getting the cage outside, where the birds carol most merrily till the sermon is over. Another commences a conversation with his acquaintance in the fur-end of the room, which it is not always easy to put a stop to; while another reaches out his pipe with a smoke tube some two feet or more in length, and lighting it a foot or two from the pulpit, he coolly whiffs his tobacco smoke just under the preacher's nose, occasionally starting a huge musquito from his own bare back, by a loud slap of the hand.

All of these he may not see at one sermon, but he will sometimes be more disturbed by less pleasant things than all these evils put together. And then, after preaching, a man comes up on the Sabbath day, professing that he wishes to make some inquiry respecting the doctrine, when, after a slight conversation, it is found the man's sole object is to beg a hundred cash for the professed object of buying a bed; when, should he get the cash, in five minutes you may find him at the opium shop. This doctrinal inquiry is a favorite pretext with those who are seeking employment, either with missionaries, or though their influence.

THE PREACHER'S WORK IN CALIFORNIA.

Rev. O. C. Wheeler, a missionary in California, writes as follows in a letter to the editor of the New York Recorder, dated San Francisco, August 1, 1849. The preacher's work in that region must be as arduous as it is needful:—

"I am trying to preach, to labor, to pray; and I love my work, but have never seen a harder task than to get a man to look through a lump of gold into eternity. It is more like beating the air, like contending with the elements, like confining the tide or stilling the tempest, than I had hitherto supposed could possibly exist. Men come to church and pay more than respectful, serious and interested attention to all the services, and go away expressing their joy at such an unexpected privilege. But to the inquiry, 'How did you enjoy the exercises?' the listener most likely replies, 'Rising, sir! fifty per cent. higher than the same rooms rented for last month!' 'Were you not interested with the church music?' 'I am somewhat interested—that is, I have about a dozen lots; and, sir, eight of them are worth $20,000 each.' Meet a religious (?) man, and invite him to the place of worship on the Sabbath, and ten to one he will forget himself and say, 'Should be very happy to call upon you, sir, and will if I have time; but I am so hurried! I have come here to make a fortune and go home as soon as possible.' 'But it was to church I invited you!' 'O, yes! I beg pardon, but I can not give you much, I am poor—have just come out here to get a few thousands for the support of my family.' I have seen more exhibitions of human depravity, and more of human insufficiency, and more want of the restraining influence of good society, in the eight months since I left home, than in all my life before."

FREE-WILL BAPTISTS.—Mr. Benjamin Randall, of New Hampshire, was converted under Whitefield's preaching, and commenced preaching in 1780 as a Calvinistic Baptist. But he was much engaged in revivals, and preached the Freedom of the Will, the duty of Immediate Repentance, and the practice of Open Communion, in a manner which was disapproved by his brethren, and they withdrew fellowship from him. He however continued to preach with much success, and organized many churches holding his views. The regular Baptists called them Free-Willers and Free-Will Baptists, and finally the people themselves took the word of reproach as their distinctive name. They now have about 50,000 members, scattered from Maine to Wisconsin, with a newspaper, the Morning Star, published at Dover, N. H., and expect soon to have a Quarterly Review. The Calvanistic Baptists and other ministers exchange pulpits with them. They have a Home and Foreign Mission Society, and a mission in India. No contributions are received from slaveholders or rumsellers. In 1838, their General Conference withdrew fellowship from all churches that admit slaveholders, and refused to receive some Baptist churches in Kentucky on that account. [Independent.

HOME AND FRIENDS.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

Oh, there's a power to make each hour
As sweet as Heaven designed it,
Nor need we roam to bring it home,
Though few there be that find it!
We seek too high for things close by,
And lose what nature found us;
For life hath here no charm so dear
As Home and Friends around us!

We oft destroy the present joy
For future hopes—and praise them;
While flowers as sweet bloom at our feet,
If we'd but stoop to raise them!
For things afar still sweetest are,
When youth's bright spell hath bound us;
But soon we're taught that earth has nought
Like Home and Friends around us!

The friends that speed in time of need,
When Hope's last reed is shaken,
To show us still, that, come what will,
We are not quite forsaken;—
Though all were night, if but the light
From Friendship's altar crowned us,
'T would prove the bliss of earth was this—
Our Homes and Friends around us!

THE PEACE CONGRESS.

By a Correspondent of the Christian Citizen.

The word Congress was never more expressively applied to any meeting of men and woman, than to that in the Salle de Sainte Cecile; for men and woman presenting the extremes of color, contour of the face, and costume, were all assembled here. Poets, painters, historians, novelists, philosophers, Christian pastors, travelers, statesmen, great working-men, and well-known philanthropists, were brought together here by one idea, and were animated by one purpose. Here was the pale-faced, dark-bearded Frenchman or German, sitting side by side with the broad-shouldered brown forester of the Mississippi. The sharp visaged Scotchman, with his thoughtful grey eyes, sat shoulder to shoulder with the soft-faced Egyptian, whose large, liquid, black eyes, seemed swimming beneath his swarthy Mangolian brow, and whose long flowing beard swept his breast. The Parisian exquisite, from the boulvards des Italians, politely sharing his seat with the meek-eyed Quaker from Birmingham; and the benevolent countenance of the negro clergymen from New York, contrasted in color, but harmonized in expression, with that of the shrewd London merchant. In the galleries were seen the grey silken bonnets, and composed intellectual faces of fair Quakeresses, beside the smiling beaming countenances of gay Parisian mesdames, whose caps were doubtless the pride of the saloons.

The most complete opposites of fashion in dress, in general pursuits, in ideas, in domestic habits and culture, and in every-day purpose and worship, were associated, combined and mingled together in the Salle de Sainte Cecile; and instead of the repulsive and chaotic commotion which distrust always predicts from the bringing together of ostensible opposites, there pervaded that assembly a spirit of harmony that God himself might be delighted to look upon, for it was a reflex of Himself.

If we search history for the fiercest antagonisms that have ever existed in the bosom of society, and which have most abundantly filled the cup of humanity's misery with blood and tears, we shall find them to be comprehended in national egotism, or patriotism; political partizanship, or social selfishness; and credited hatred, or religious bigotry. Now, at the Peace Congress of Paris, representatives of seemingly the most hating and hateful of all these moral montrosities were united. The Roman Catholic priest, in his flowing sacerdotal robes, sat in amity upon the same platform with the Quaker whose forefathers preferred to die rather than doff their hats to lordly hierarchs, or do honor to sacredotal stoles. Frenchmen and Englishmen—those two extreme points in the whole circle of national jealousy, pride, and vain glory—forgot the ulcer spots upon their past history, and the traditions of their battles, and took council with one another to "break the sword and spare mankind." And natives of countries under every shade of political government were there, from the subjects of the despotic Porte to the sovereign citizens of republican Massachussetts.

SELF-TORTURE OF THE HEATHENS.

The heathens are constantly in the practice of performing great self-tortures upon themselves. I will mention a few of these. Some roll their bodies on the ground for hundreds of miles. The Rev. Mr. Heyer gives an account of an "Indian devotee, who had spent more than nine years on a journey from Benare to Cape Comorin, that is, from the 27th to the 7th degree of north latitude. The whole journey is made by rolling on the bare ground from one side to the other, about three miles each day. His family accompany him and minister to his wants." "Some throw themselves from a high wall, the second story of a house, often twenty or thirty feet in height, upon iron spikes or knives stuck in a large bag or mattrass of straw. Many in this way are often cruelly mangled and lacerated. In some instances the issue proves speedily fatal. Sometimes bundles of thorns and other fire-wood are accumulated, among which the devotees roll themselves, uncovered. The materials are next raised into a pile and set on fire. Then the devotees dance briskly over the blazing embers, and fling them into the air with their naked hands, or toss them at one another. Some betake themselves to a vertical wheel, twenty or thirty feet in diameter, and raised considerably above the ground. They bind themselves to the outer rim in a sitting posture, so that when the wheel rolls round, their heads point alternately to the zenith and the nadir. One other species of torture I must mention. The deluded votaries enter into a vow. With one hand they cover their under lips with a layer of wet earth or mud. On this, with the other hand, they deposit some small grains, usually mustard seed. They then stretch themselves flat on their backs, exposed to the dripping dews by night, and the blazing sun by day. And their vow is, that from that fixed position they will not stir—will neither turn, nor move, nor eat, nor drink—till the seed planted on the lips begins to sprout or germinate. This vegetable process usually takes place on the third or fourth day, after which, being released from the vow, they arise, as they dotingly imagine and believe, laden with a vast accession of holiness and supererogatory merit." [Dr. Scudder.

THE TEMPLE OF JUGGERNAUT.

Go for a moment in imagination to the great temple of Juggernaut, at Orissa. Every year, more than a million of persons visit this celebrated spot. The aged, the weak, and the sick, undertake this pilgrimage as a remedy for all evils. "It is no uncommon occurrence," says one of the missionaries to that place, "to see the miserable worn out pilgrims, with a patience and fortitude worthy of a better cause, bind their solitary tattered garments round their lacerated feet, and go groaning along, with bending back, tottering step, and emaciated form, and dull sunken eyes, from day to day, and week to week, until they obtain the object of their painful toils, a view of Juggernaut. Nor is it a matter of wonder that vast multitudes sink under their miseries; for it is generally the case, that as soon as one of the party fails, his companions leave him, without the least commiseration, to his fate. These poor wretches are almost without an exception thrown out upon the village Golgotha, to be devoured by beasts and birds. I have several times passed over this piece of ground, and the skulls and bones exceed calculation. The fact of dogs, jackals, and vultures living on human prey, is familiar to every inhabitant of Orissa. If the pilgrim live to leave Juggernaut, he has a long journey before him, and his means of support are often almost, if not quite, exhausted. The work of death then becomes rapid, and the route of the pilgrims may be traced by the bones left by the jackals and vultures. The country near the temple seems suddenly to have been visited by pestilence and famine. Dead bodies are seen in every direction. Dogs, jackals, and vultures are observed watching the last moments of the dying pilgrim, and not unfrequently hastening his fate. Such is known to be the mortality among pilgrims, that a Hindoo of property always makes his will before he sets out on this journey, and takes a most affectionate farewell of his disconsolate relations. It is supposed that above two thousand persons die annually on pilgrimages to different holy places." "In the immediate precincts of the holy city where Juggernaut resides, are to be seen crowds of devotees; some remaining all day with their heads on the ground and their feet in the air, others with their bodies entirely covered with earth, some cramming their eyes with mud and their mouths with straw. One has his foot tied to his neck, or has a pot of fire on his breast; another is enveloped in a net-work of ropes. On the day of high festival, when Juggernaut is dragged forth from his temple and mounted on his lofty car, in the presence of hundreds of thousands who rend the air with shouts of 'Victory to Juggernaut our lord!'—the public services are commenced by the officiating high priest, who is stationed in front of the idol, by a loathsome pantomimic exhibition, and by filthy, blasphemous songs. But it is not until some poor victim of superstition casts himself under the wheels of his ponderous car and is crushed to death, that this horrid king, as he is styled, is said to smile."

A MOB QUELLED BY PRAYER.—A correspondent of the Pittsburg Gazette relates the following interesting circumstances, as received from the late Sheriff of that County, Mr. Forsyth:—

"Some time in the course of the past year, he, Mr. Forsyth, was called upon to exercise his authority for the suppression of a large disorderly meeting, somewhere in the suburbs of the city. At the time of his arrival on the ground, there was every manifestation of an immediate and violent outbreak, and while he was deliberating about his duty in the premises, he was approached by the Rev. Mr. Kirkland, who acted so conspicuous a part in the late trials in our court, with a request that he would let him try the efficacy of prayer on the excited passions of the throng. The Sheriff replied that he doubted much the success of such an expedient, but that he was willing to make the experiment. Mr. Kirkland immediately assumed a station, a little elevated above the multitude, and poured forth, apparently from the fullness of a Christian, a prayer most appropriate to the occasion. Immediately after he commenced, those around him became calm, some of them very reverently took off their hats, and when, at the conclusion, he raised his hand and in the most solemn manner pronounced the benediction with which congregations are usually dismissed, the mob dispersed as quietly as a congregation retiring from church, leaving the Sheriff no farther necessity for the exercise of his authority."

THE MAN OF PLEASURE.—The Saturday Visiter gives the following instructive incident, which has reference to the "last time" the editor ever saw the late venerable Dr. Black:—

"That time a gentleman—one who has a prospect of long life and prosperity, who loves the world and its pleasures—saw him in our office, and when he had gone sat thoughtfully a moment, then said earnestly, 'How I would like to change places with that old man!' To an exclamation of surprise he answered, 'You see he is tottering over the grave, but there is no death before him—only a translation, a step into heaven, while a poor dog like me is not sure how it will be with him—might miss the road,'—and he sat thoughtfully a little, then rose, and with a sigh walked off."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 13, 1849.

"NOT THE JEWISH BUT THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH."

(Concluded.)

As we have determined to conclude our review of Mr. Bennett's remarkable production this week, we are obliged to pass over many things which we would be glad to notice more particularly. The attention which we have already given to it has been more than was called for, so far as concerned the great majority of our readers, who were before entirely ignorant of Mr. B. and of his sermon. Whether he will thank us for the manner in which we have introduced him to the public, we know not; but we think that he cannot complain that we have garbled his language, or misrepresented his sentiments. Certainly, it has been our aim to give him a fair chance, and our extracts have, therefore, been quite full. We accord to him the merit of ingenuity in presenting his views, but in all that he says we find no new ideas—nothing but what has been a thousand times repeated, and as many times refuted. Like those who have gone before him, he pleads for the observance of the first day of the week, because, as he thinks, there is a general apprehension of its appropriateness. He does not claim that its observance is positively enjoined. The fourth commandment itself, he thinks, enjoins nothing more than one day in seven, or the seventh after six days of labor, no matter from what point of the hebdomadal cycle the reckoning is begun. Yet when pressed with the objection, that this would be likely to introduce confusion, he replies that—

> "We are just as much bound to uniformly concur in the day of rest, as we are to rest. Heaven has taken care, however, of this, and furnished sufficient motives to general concurrence; and this is all that is necessary. To say there is not sufficient suasion, or motives to general concurrence, is to say that Christians generally concur in the day of sacred rest without motives; or, that there is an effect without a cause. The first motive to an agreement in the day to be sanctified, is an innate and general apprehension of appropriateness; the second is gratitude; the third is, acts of Christ himself; the fourth, apostolic example and precept, supported by prophecy. These have not only as forcible suasion, but also as commanding authority as any precept." p. 44.
> "Now it does seem, that all unprejudiced minds would feel, that there is an appropriateness in selecting the weekly day on which redemption was completed, to celebrate its glories and promote its interests. The seventh of the Christian week is that day. On this day, the Christian world believes that Christ rose from the dead, conquering the last enemy which sin had introduced into the world, and which stood in the way of our final redemption." p. 46.

But most unfortunately for this argument, there fails to be a general agreement, that redemption was completed by the resurrection of Christ from the dead. The Scriptures, certainly, teach no such dogma. When the Saviour was expiring on the cross, he cried out, "It is finished." John 19: 30. We admit that he did not say that redemption was finished. But suppose we should assume, that this text is undeniable proof, that every thing requisite to the work of atonement was completed by the death of Christ. Our opponents would probably press us with the text, which declares that "if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins." 1 Cor. 15: 17. If so, we beg leave to press them in turn with another, "If he were on earth, he should not be a priest"—Heb. 8: 4—which shows most conclusively, that it was just as necessary, in order to complete the function answerable to his appointment as our High Priest, that Christ should ascend into heaven, as it was that he should rise from the dead. We therefore take the ground, that atonement was not completed by the resurrection; it is completed by the entrance of Christ into the most holy, there to present himself before God on our behalf. And thus we demolish the boasted argument for the Sunday, that it was the day on which the work of redemption was finished.

As to the argument of Mr. B., that "to say there is not sufficient suasion, or motives to general concurrence, is to say that Christians generally concur in the day of sacred rest without motives; or that there is an effect without a cause"—it is ridiculous. No body pretends that this effect obtains without a cause. That there is a cause somewhere, we well know. What we pretend is, that the motives to this concurrence are not furnished by Scripture. "All the world wonders after the beast." Surely this effect no more obtains without a cause, than does Sunday-keeping. But does the cause exist in the Word of God? Are the motives furnished by Scripture?

As for the "acts of Christ himself," which are supposed to furnish one of the motives to an agreement in the day to be sanctified, we shall quote the language of the author:

> "Again, we have from the Divine record, no intimation that Christ, after He arose, ever manifested himself on the Jewish rest day. This marks it as a time of holy devotion, rather doubtful; for devotion is useless without the manifestation of Christ. On the first of the Jewish week, the Saviour first received worship in His glorified state, preached the most complete gospel sermon ever delivered, meantime 'itinerating' with the disciples from Emmaus; gave the great commission to preach the gospel to every creature, breathed on the disciples, in sign of sending the Holy Ghost; and finally, did actually set the evangelical machinery in motion. And, if trying to increase the motion of this same divine mobile perpetuum, is the appropriate work of the Sabbath, then as to the day, we can plead the example of one, who with Christians is pretty good authority—Christ. These were all acts done by him—not the disciples, who, at this time, as little understood the Christian Sabbath, as they did the universality of their gospel mission. After eight days, i. e. an eight days after his first appearance, He appeared again to them. 'After six days' and 'eight days after' are very natural designations of a week. The first excludes and the second includes the two extremes. And it is believed, no unbiased mind will find any cause to doubt, that this second showing, occcurred on Sunday. If the disciples were in doors for fear of the Jews, what hence? We are not referring to what they did. They were still ignorant, at least, of some features in the new economy. It is the acts of Christ himself, of which I now speak. We cannot say that He, by chance, or indifferently, made choice of Sunday for these displays of himself and his gospel. Omniscience can do nothing without design. He never could have religiously distinguished a day except by design. If the Saviour appeared on any other than the Christian Sabbath, there is reason to believe, it was for some particular purpose, not of general interest. He manifested himself to seven disciples when they were fishing, hence on a secular day; but for what purpose? To humble and instruct a false Peter, not a word of the great commission, the general salvation. The most decisive act of Christ, by which he sanctified the Christian rest-day, was His shedding forth the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost." pp. 51, 52.

We beg leave to remind our author that the expression in John 20: 26, is not "eight days after," but "after eight days." Hence, according to his own showing, the second appearance of Christ to his disciples was on the ninth day from his first appearance. But if it will serve Mr. B. any good purpose to suppose that this second appearance of Christ was on the next first-day of the week, he is quite welcome to the supposition. We shall not pause to debate the matter. But what does it avail to prove that the Saviour manifested himself, as risen from the dead, on the first day of the week, as long as there is not the least shadow of proof that those manifestations were for the purpose of signalizing the day as holy? It might help to open our author's eyes, if, while he is laboring so hard to prove these manifestations—things which nobody disputes, and which Sabbatarians are just as sensible of as any other people—he would allow himself to consider what was the true design of them. Their design was simply to afford the disciples proof that he was risen from the dead. This was the end which Christ had in view, in all his appearances on the first day of the week. No other design is ever hinted by the evangelists who record them. This design stands out prominently, conspicuously, strikingly, in the record. And how any one can give it the easy go-by, as if it were a secondary matter, and reason upon these texts as if the principal, if not the sole design of Christ, was to establish something which is not even so much as hinted, is to our mind passing strange. Mr. B., however, seems to discover no other design than to designate the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath. Yet when Christ manifests himself to his disciples on a fishing day, he is as keen as any other man to ascertain, from the context, the design of the manifestation. Then, it was "to humble and instruct a false Peter." What makes Mr. B. so keen to consult the context in one case, and so dull about it in the other? He is quite sure that this manifestation was not on the Christain Sabbath. It was "when they were fishing, hence on a secular day." Well, we should suppose that fishing and Sabbath keeping would hardly agree together, unless they were fishing for men. We had also supposed, that Sabbath keeping was not very consistent with traveling; and hence we were always a little puzzled to make Christ's journey to Emmaus, in company with the two disciples, and back again, on the first day of the week, agree with the notion of its being holy time. But Mr. B. solves this difficulty by informing us, that they were "itinerating," according to the fashion of Methodist circuit preachers! Besides, he is also careful to remind us, that in availing himself of the events and occurrences of the first day of the week, he is speaking of the acts of Christ himself, not his disciples, who, at this time, "as little understood the Christain Sabbath, as they did the universality of the gospel mission." But if the acts of the disciples can be disposed of thus easily, why not thus dispose of their act of fishing, when Christ showed himself to them at the sea of Tiberias? Mr. B. might have found another instance of Sunday keeping here, if he had not forgotten to apply his own principles. In the amended edition of his sermon, he will doubtless correct this oversight.

Speaking of Rev. 1: 10, Mr. B. says:—

> "This text is, to our Sabbatarian friends, a little stubborn. One of their most able and ingenious champions (Burnside) has branded the text as spurious—as an interpolation of some sectarian scribe. This is desperate. No Christian scholar, who has not a pre-occupied mind, will doubt the genuineness of this text; and yet Mr. B.'s knowledge of the Bible, history of the church, &c., forbad his trying to evade the force of it in any other way." p. 52.

It would be well for controversialists, when speaking of those who differ from them, to keep in mind the ninth commandment. Mr. Burnside did, by a lengthy and conclusive argument, show that the first day of the week had no scriptural claim to be considered the "Lord's day" of the Apocalypse, even on the supposition that the passage was genuine. It is true, that learned and pious man entertained the opinion, that the passage was an interpolation. Yet that "his knowledge of the Bible, history of the church, &c., forbad his trying to evade the force of it in any other way," is not true.

> "But those of his persuasion, pretty generally, I believe, admit the genuineness of the text; but, say they, Lord's day means Sabbath-day, the Jewish Sabbath! This is as absurd as the other is desperate. Because, 1st. The Lord, is, by New Testament writers, generally applied to the God-man, the Word incarnate. Although all the titles of the Deity are applied to Christ, yet, after the hypostatic union was actually consummated, the Lord is a title seldom applied to any other than the second person of the God-head; especially by the beloved disciple. To this I do not now think of an exception. Now, the incarnated Word did nothing to distinguish the Jewish Sabbath—said nothing of having its name changed from the Sabbath day to his day—the Lord's day. 2d. St. John was a Jew, and as such would have used no such designation for the Sabbath day; for such a designation of the Jewish Sabbath is not found in the Bible." pp. 52, 53.

Nor did the "incarnated Word" ever say any thing about changing the name of the first day of the week to that of Lord's day. It had always been designated in the Scriptures simply as the first day of the week. No other name had ever been given to it. No such designation of it as Lord's day is found in the Bible.

> "3d. The Holy Ghost would never have dictated a term calculated to, as it actually does, mislead the churches; and will in all coming time." p. 53.

The term which the Holy Ghost dictated —Lord's day—never led the churches to suppose that the first day of the week was intended. Mr. B. takes too much for granted here. If churches were now guided by the words of the Holy Ghost only, they would be more likely to suppose this term was intended to designate the Sabbath, than to suppose it was intended to designate any other particular day of the week. It is because they are guided by something else than the words of the Holy Ghost, that they suppose it was intended to designate the Sunday.

> "4th. Up to a very early date in the Christian church, the first of the Jewish week was called the Lord's day. Now, if any assert, that between the time of St. John and this early date, the appellation Lord's day was transferred from the seventh to the first, it is his duty to prove it, or, failing, give up the assertion. No man can prove any such thing—the assertion must be given up —no such transfer was made—the Lord's day was the title of the Christian rest-day in the time of St. John." p. 53.

All that is necessary to prove, is that the term Lord's day was at first used to designate the Bible Sabbath. If it can be shown from Scripture, that such was the use of the term; and if it appears that the churches are afterwards found in the practice of applying the term to the first day of the week, the fact of the transfer follows by irresistible inference. It is quite unnecessary to bring forth the historical documents, showing how the transfer was brought about. But Mr. B. will please to take notice, that Sabbatarians have never asserted, positively and unqualifiedly, that the term was intended to designate the Sabbath. They have only said, that so far as Scripture was the interpreter of Scripture, the term was much more likely to be used of the Sabbath than of the first day of the week. And to substantiate their position in this respect, they have quoted Isa. 58: 13, 14; Matt. 12: 8; &c. But the truth is, that Sabbatarians, not wishing to be wise above what is written, acknowledge the entire uncertainty as to what day the Holy Ghost intended.

But we must bring our review to a close. We take leave of our author, therefore, by simply saying that, in our opinion, his ingenuity and talents are worthy of a better cause. We think it not unlikely that, in the circle in which he moves, he has gained considerable eclat for the skill which he has displayed in "making the worse appear the better reason." But we would fain hope, that he has some desire to please God, as well as to receive the honor that cometh from men. Heaven grant, that he may be willing to become a "fool for Christ's sake," and to sit as a little child at the feet of the great Teacher. The Bible Sabbath, whose claims he is at such pains to set aside, would do him much good, if he would learn to "count it a delight."

MISSIONARY REPORT.

In compliance with a resolution, passed at the last session of the Central Association, "that the missionaries be required to report their doings, as often as circumstances seem to demand, through the Sabbath Recorder," I would respectfully submit the following.

Although it is not my privilege to furnish a report of an extensive revival upon the Otselic mission since our last session, yet there are some encouraging features connected with this mission. Our meetings are well attended, both in the church upon the Sabbath, and in the surrounding country on first-days and evenings. I have usually preached from two to four times a week when able to preach, and might, if my health had warranted, have embraced many other opportunities of dispensing the word of life. I have spent only forty-two days upon this mission since last June, which I have devoted to preaching and visiting families, both in the church and society, as opportunity offered, and the interests of the mission, the salvation of the perishing, and the glory of God, seemed to require. As to results, although we have not been permitted to witness such signal triumphs of truth over error, and accessions to the church, as we could have wished, yet the members are well united, and I trust feel an increasing interest in the success of truth and the welfare of sinners; in view of which, we are encouraged to hope, that we are upon the eve of a season of greater prosperity. Last sixth-day and Sabbath was our covenant meeting and communion season. It was a season of deep interest, and at the close of our covenant meeting, the church, under an increasing sense of the need of a revival, solemnly covenanted to pray and labor for one. Family worship is attended in most of the families, of which the heads are members of the church.

In respect to the cause of Sabbath Reform in the vicinity of this mission, I find that much more labor is required to persuade men to submit to the claims of the fourth commandment, than to enable them to discover those claims. A child, learned in the Sacred Oracles, can show men the claims of God's holy day, until they will admit that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," and many, that if they could be equally well accommodated in its observance as in the observance of the first day, they would keep it; but after all these concessions, it is difficult to persuade them to observe the seventh day, although you faithfully exhibit the reasons for its observance, in connection with all the warnings and admonitions to shun the path of disobedience, and all the motives that God has revealed to excite men to love and obey him. O! what deformity appears in this self-pleasing religion, when compared with the religion of the Bible!

J. CLARK.

OTSELIC, Dec. 4, 1849.

OUR DENOMINATIONAL NAME.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

It has long been somewhat of a mystery to me, when or by whom the name or title of our denomination was changed from Sabbatarian to Seventh-day Baptist. The term Sabbatarian had long been known in England; and, to judge from the number of Sabbatarians, the persecution they endured from their enemies, and the controversy which long existed between the friends and opponents of the denomination, the term must have been very extensively known, understood, and, so far as we know, approved. In America, for nearly two centuries, no impropriety was discovered in the term, but it was, I believe, universally thought proper and sufficiently explicit. Rev. Henry Clark, in his History, says: "The word Sabbatarian appears to be a very appropriate term applied to those people who hold the seventh day of the week as the Lord's Sabbath. But whether that name was first assumed by them, or was given them by their opponents, is to me uncertain and immaterial."

In the progress of my investigations to discover the author or authors of the change, I procured a copy of the Minutes of the General Conference, from 1807 to 1846, in hope of obtaining some light; but, to my surprise, the following extract is the only notice to be found in the whole record:—"Conference next voted to recommend to the several churches to erase the word Sabbatarian from our order, and that in future all letters sent to Conference be addressed to the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference." This vote stands solitary and alone, without any preamble, resolution, or reason for the extraordinary enactment; and if there is any record to show that the several churches were ever consulted, or that there was any concert of action with them, it must be in some private journal, or the records of the church where the Conference was held at the time; and if so, I should be glad to see it, as light is my object.

I am aware, that report or tradition says, 'It was thought the term Sabbatarian was not sufficiently explicit.' But I would ask if any denomination of Christians has ever undertaken to embody its principles in its title? Does the term Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Methodist, Friend or Quaker, exhibit any such thing? If not, why should we be so much more tenacious of our title? They have friends and brethren in England with whom they remain in Christian fellowship; so have the Sabbatarians. Why, then, should we undertake to christen them with a new name, without their consent, as our Conference has seen fit to do? The very next vote to the one I have selected from the Minutes, reads as follows: "Whereas we have not received any information from our brethren in England, voted, that Bro. Wm. B. Maxson be appointed to write a letter, superscribed to the Elders and Pastors of the Seventh-day Baptist Churches in London." Now it is evident, that there were no such persons there to receive it. Who then would be likely to step forward, and claim it, in order to return an answer? I have no doubt, that to this source may be attributed the failure of all the attempts to revive a correspondence with the brethren in England previous to the year 1819, which was the date of the first letter from Mr. Burnside. That it was right and proper for Conference to direct the superscription of any communication to itself, while in session, I have no doubt; but for it to direct or advise the erasing of the word Sabbatarian from our order, (meaning I suppose from all the records,) and changing the title withal, is, I find, in the minds of other brethren, as well as myself, unprecedented and improper, especially without the unanimous consent of all the churches, which I am positive was never obtained.

I have ever been opposed to the practice of changing names or titles, unless some visible and positive benefit is to be derived from it. If any one can point out to me any advantage that has ever been obtained by changing the title of our denomination, over and above the evils complained of, I will say no more; otherwise I must be excused for saying, that as the word "Sabbatarian" has never been erased from our records agreeable to the recommendation of Conference, so neither has it been erased from my memory nor my heart, and in future I shall subscribe myself A SABBATARIAN.

CHEAP POSTAGE.

From an abstract of the Postmaster General's Report, which we publish to-day, it will be seen that the reduced postage system has worked admirably thus far, and put a large surplus into the Treasury. But the people ought not to be content with reduced postage; they ought to demand cheap postage. Two cents, or at the most three cents, is quite equal to the expense of mailing, transporting and delivering letters in any part of the country, and we doubt not that an experiment on that basis would be quite as successful as are the present rates. Now is the time to send in petitions for this object. The following form has been proposed, and it contains valuable suggestions. But any form which tells just what is wanted will be equally effective.

> "To the Congress of the United States.
>
> "The undersigned (inhabitants of A.,) or (President and Faculty of B. College,) or (officers and members of the Society of C. at D.,) or (workmen employed in the manufactory of E.,) or (teachers and pupils in F. Academy,) or (any other collection of persons, as the case may be)—
>
> "Respectfully represent, That the tenth year is just closing, in which the people of Great Britain and Ireland have enjoyed the unspeakable blessing of Rowland Hill's System of Cheap Postage; that it has been signally successful in every respect, multiplying the letters from seventy-six to more than three hundred and fifty millions, causing more than a million of letters to be written every day in the year, and producing as great an amount of postage at a penny, as was formerly received at an average of 7d. per letter; that there are more people able to read and write in this country than in that; that the cost of transportation of mails in this country is but $20,000 more than in Great Britain, and the whole cost of the Department $2,000,000 less; that Cheap Postage is fitted to be an educator of the people, a guardian of domestic virtue and affection, an instrument for the collection and diffusion of knowledge, and the advancement of society; that it will secure all needed reforms, and prevent all apprehended convulsions, and render our happy Union of States indissoluble; and all these benefits it will yield, without injuring a single interest of any class of citizens, and without involving a dollar's expense to the government, after it shall have time to come fully into operation:
>
> "We therefore pray that Congress would give us the boon of TWO CENTS POSTAGE, with such other postal reforms as your wisdom may deem desirable."

A NEW BAPTIST UNIVERSITY.—Since the refusal of the people of Hamilton to accept the proposal of the Baptist Educational Convention recently held at Albany, a committee appointed by that body has taken incipient action in regard to the establishment of a University at Rochester, N. Y. One of the papers of that city says that "it is the settled purpose of the large and powerful denomination most interested in this enterprise, not to be thwarted by the extraordinary opposition of Hamilton village, but to proceed with vigor and celerity to the realization of their original purpose—the establishment in Rochester of an extensive, well-endowed, and flourishing institution of learning. They have both the ability and disposition to command success in their laudable undertaking."

COST OF A CHURCH ESTABLISHMENT.—The Church of England is supposed to have an annual revenue of ten millions sterling—a tax which bears with insupportable weight upon the people. A large portion of this is for the clergy. The cost to the country of the parochial clergy, in tithes alone, amounts to about six millions sterling, making an average of five hundred pounds a year, to the ten thousand seven hundred and eighteen benefices. This is all monopolized, however, by some seven thousand incumbents. The rent charge amounts to nearly four millions sterling.

INDISCREET KINDNESS.—Rev. John Blackburn, of Claremont Chapel, Pentonville, England, has been obliged to make application under the Insolvent Act, for a discharge from debts amounting to upwards of £8000, incurred for the advancement of his two sons in life. The Judge, in granting the discharge, exonerated Mr. B. from all suspicion of intentional dishonesty, but severely censured his lack of discretion.

"A WHEAT-SHEAF, GATHERED FROM OUR OWN FIELDS," is the title of a new book, by F. C. Woodworth and T. S. Arthur, intended especially for the amusement and instruction of youth. It contains about forty well-written stories, and nearly as many illustrative engravings. Its style and spirit are such that it can hardly fail to improve the taste and refine the feelings of every reader. The approaching holidays should make sale for a large number of copies. Published by M. W. Dodd, Brick Church Chapel, New York.

LEGISLATING FOR PAPISTS.—The Legislature of Illinois has appropriated funds for creating an "Orphan Asylum of the Sisters of Mercy," at Chicago. The Herald, of that city, is right in supposing that this is a kind of exclusive legislation which would not be extended to other sects. The same paper adds: "This Asylum is as much a part of the Roman Catholic machinery for the propagation of their religion as their nunneries or their churches, and they very well know that it is more effective than either; for being under the guise of a charity, it can be made to work with less of suspicion."

☞ We clip the above from the Alliance and Visitor. The question occurred to us, while reading it, whether it is any worse to legislate for real out-and-out Papists in a matter which promotes the public good and need not hurt the conscience of any body, than to legislate for nominal Protestants in a matter which virtually sanctions popery and embarrasses conscientious people, as in the case of requiring by law the observance of the first day of the week for the Sabbath? Will the Alliance and Visitor enlighten us on this point?

BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.—A writer in the Southern Baptist details the condition of the four Baptist Theological Seminaries in the South and South-west. He says that the sum of $300,000 is invested in the means of theological education, and that the proceeds of this fund, which ought to support 150 students, are now supporting 30, at an average cost of $600 each. Covington, with an endowment of $160,000, yielding $9,600, has one professor and one pupil. Mercer, with $50,000 for theological purposes, yielding $3,000, has two professors and five students. Furman has three professors, and Howard has one. We have seven professors, "all burning and shining lights," employed, and thirty students prosecuting their course! Do not these facts prove that our candidates for the ministry are not duly impressed with the importance of theological education?

A MISSIONARY CHURCH.—Rev. Mr. Clark, a missionary of the American Board, at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, writes under date of August 6th, that 200 individuals had been propounded for admission to the church under his care, which would swell the number of communicants to 1800. "A great church," Mr. Clark exclaims, "for one man to watch over." He thinks it will be expedient before long to divide the church, as they are obliged to hold two communions, the existing house of worship, though large, not containing all at once. Mr. Clark's people are probably able to raise the whole amount he has heretofore received, as salary, from the Board.

EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.—It seems that there is a decrease of theological students among the Episcopalians as well as among the Presbyterians. The Banner of the Cross says that in the Southern Episcopal Theological Seminary, a few years since, there were forty students, while its present number is only twenty-five; and in the General Theological Seminary at New York, where the highest number was ninety in 1836, and last year sixty-two, the present number is fifty.

SABBATH DISCOURSE—REVIEW OF MR. STEPHENSON.—On Firstday evening last, at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in Eleventh-Street, N. Y., Rev. J. W. Morton spoke in review of Rev. Andrew Stephenson's first discourse on the subject of the Sabbath. On Firstday evening next, at the same place, Mr. Morton intends to review Mr. Stephenson's second discourse.

ITEMS OF RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

St. James' Catholic Church, in Green township, eight miles from Cincinnati, was blessed on a recent Sunday by the Bishop. It is of brick, 85 by 50 feet, and 35 feet from the floor to the ceiling. Every property-holder in the congregation contributed $120 to the building, and every working man from $20 to $30.

From the 1st of April to the 1st of November, 40 missionaries were appointed by the Executive Board of the Baptist Home Missionary Society, for the following States: Canada, 3; New York, 4; Illinois, 12; Indiana, 4; Michigan, 5; Wisconsin, 5; Iowa, 5; Minnesota, 1; and California, 1.

Revivals are recorded in the following western places: Shawneetown, Ill.; Farmington, Iowa; Barlow, Ohio; Owenton, Ill.; Hebardsville, Ky.; Sprout Spring, Va.; Harden's Creek, Ky.; Deer Creek, Ohio; North Fairfield, Ohio; Wolf Island, Mo.; Cypress, Ky.; Trale Creek, Ky.

The mission at Oroomiah is about commencing the regular issue of a periodical, entitled "Rays of Light," something not before attempted. Much is hoped from it. The missionaries were also about making a tour in the mountains preparatory to enlarged efforts.

In Bangkok, Siam, as stated in a letter from Mr. Hemmingway, dated in July, the cholera has committed fearful ravages. Within a month, more than 20,000 persons had died, or at least one quarter of the entire population.

A letter has been received from Enosburg West, Vermont, stating that Rev. J. Tetreau, a catholic clergyman, with 24 members of his church, among whom is Ignace Racicot, Esq., who has been church chorister for 28 years, have become Protestants.

Rev. Mr. Shaw, of the Brick Presbyterian Church in Rochester, N. Y., stated, a few days since, in a sermon, that since the Church was organized, in 1827, they had contributed about $100,000 to Foreign Missions.

The Church of Rev. Dr. Backus, in Baltimore, has contributed, within the last 13 years, the sum of $150,000 for charitable and benevolent objects, or $11,538 per annum.

THE EUROPEAN NEWS.

The steamer Europa arrived at Boston on Sunday last, with news from Europe one week later.

A decline of about half a cent per pound in the price of cotton, is regarded as the most important news.

The Hungarian Refugees have been removed from Widdin, on the frontier, to Shumla, an almost impregnably fortified town in a defile of the Balkan mountains, some 200 miles North-west from Constantinople. This is one of the strongest places in the Turkish Empire, and there the fugitives are not exposed to be pounced upon and carried off by a sudden inroad of their enemies.

The rumors of war between Turkey and Russia were fast dying away at Constantinople. The English ships of war were anchored within the Dardanelles. The French fleet was near Smyrna. Nothing further has transpired relative to the decision of the Emperor of Russia respecting the Turkish affairs.

Rome was quiet on the 14th of November, and the Pope was expected to arrive there on the 21st.

Garibaldi had arrived at Gibralter on board a Sardinian ship of war, placed at his disposal by the Government; 10,000 francs were ordered also to be given him, but these he positively refused to accept.

M. Guizot is at present one of the lions of Paris, and walks about the streets apparently as unconcerned as in the palmiest days of Louis Philippe.

The corpse of Marian, the celebrated æronaut, who made a balloon ascent some weeks ago, from Barcelona, and had not since been heard of, has been discovered on the Spanish coast, near Ross, but no details of his death have been published. It was this gentleman who lately crossed the Alps in a balloon.

The difficulties at Macao, growing out of the murder of the Governor, have not come to a head, and serious consequences are expected.

ONE MONTH LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The steamer California, with 360 passengers, and a million and a quarter of dollars in gold-dust, left San Francisco on the 1st day of November, and arrived at Panama on the 25th. Two days were occupied in crossing the Isthmus, whence the passengers, mails, &c., were brought forward by the steamers Ohio and Crescent City.

The Crescent City brought to New York over a million of dollars in gold dust, and a large list of passengers, among whom was Hon. J. P. Judd, Minister of Finance at the Sandwich Islands. He is accompanied by Alexander Lihihiho, heir apparent the Hawaiian throne, and his brother Lot Lamehambeba. The object of Mr. Judd's visit to the United States and Europe at this period, has reference to the late outrages of the French at the Sandwich Islands.

Full two-thirds of the California passengers are either deranged in health or entirely broken up in strength and constitution.

Thirteen hundred passengers passed through the town of Chagres on the 25th and 26th ult., and there were at least 100 additional passengers awaiting transit to California.

The number of arrivals from Europe and the United States was progressing with much spirit. There were at least 100 British vessels in the harbor of San Francisco on the 1st Nov.

The town of San Francisco numbered in population at least 30,000, and the number of persons at the mines is confidently set down at 80,000.

Bread stuffs and provisions had risen at San Francisco within one week of the steamer's sailing full 100 per cent., and the market was quite bare. It must depend wholly upon the speedy arrival of vessels, to furnish even a moderate supply to the mines before the rainy season closes the avenues against them. The overland immigration has drawn very heavily upon the market resources.

Passengers sufficient to fill the next two steamers, besides several large sailing vessels, were awaiting passage on the departure of the California. The discouraging reports brought by the California's passengers, with the more undeniable evidence in the haggard looks and wasted frames of many unfortunates, has induced many on the Isthmus to take the back track. Several passengers return on the Crescent City.

In regard to gold-digging, the reports do not differ materially from those already received—certainly they are not more favorable. The rumors brought by the previous steamer of newly-discovered placers, prove to be only rumors. The digging season was nearly at an end when the California sailed.

The sickly season on the Sacramento, which was unusually severe and protracted this year, was nearly over. At least one-third of the miners have more or less suffered from chills and fevers, and large numbers have died.

The sufferings among emigrants on the overland routes increase as the season advances. The emigrants were pouring into Sacramento city, many of them in a most destitute condition. Gen. Darcy, of Newark, N. J., was encamped with his party on the American Fork, himself dangerously ill. A man who recently came in by the same route, states that at least 2,000 wagons are scattered along the trail as far as the sink of Humboldt's river. Many of the emigrants will be obliged to winter in the Great Basin. Rumors from the south state that the river which miraculously opened in the Great Desert is again disappearing.

The Constitution prepared for California is brought by this mail. The feature which is of most immediate interest on this side of the continent is the exclusion of slavery. All offices, judicial as well as administrative, are to be filled by election; the principle of Homestead Exemption is established, to be hereafter carried out by the Legislature; the property of married women is to a considerable extent secured to them independent of their husbands; and general laws are in all practicable cases to render special legislation unnecessary. Dueling, or sending or accepting a challenge, unfits a man not only to hold office, but even to vote. The Legislature is subject to very stringent limitations against the contraction of public debts. The proposed clause of the Constitution forbidding free negroes from immigrating into the State, was finally rejected in the Convention by a vote of 31 to 8.

Brevet Capt. Warner lost his life on the 27th September, while engaged in ascertaining the feasibility of a railroad route to Oregon through the head sources of the Sacramento. Himself, with a party of eight men, were fired upon by a large party of Indians in ambush, and three of their number killed. Capt. W. fell dead immediately, literally pierced with volleys of poisoned arrows, and his companions were buried with him on the following day.

Congress.—The House of Representatives was occupied all last week in fruitless attempts to elect a Speaker. The present week was entered upon with no better prospect of immediate organization than existed at first, except that some of the members were getting sick of such play, and showed a disposition to compromise matters by dividing the officers of the House between the two leading parties. Neither party can claim a clear majority, and of course the balance of power is the hands of the Free-Soil members. In such circumstances, it is impossible to say when the House will be organized, so that the President's Message can be delivered, and laid before the public.

The Boston Murder.—Nothing has transpired since our last to change materially the aspect of this case. The body, or parts of a body, found in Dr. Webster's room, has been claimed by the family of Dr. Parkman, delivered to them, and by them deposited in a vault, after funeral ceremonies. Dr. Webster remains in prison, and public feeling is decidedly more favorable to him than at first. On the day of the alledged murder, he lectured to the class, and members of it say there was no perceptible change in his manner, neither was there any observable change during subsequent lectures. On the evening of the murder he was in the company of his friends from 7 to 10, playing whist, and evidently enjoying himself, and with every appearance of serenity and quiet. His friends are confident that, with his characteristic nervousness and excitability of temperament, it would have been an impossibility for him to have done so, if he were guilty of the great crime laid to his charge. It is surmised by some, that the murder was committed to obtain the money of which Dr. Parkman is known to have been in possession, and that the parts of the victim's body were placed where they were found unbeknown to Dr. Webster. Still his case is a hard one, and that of Mr. Littlefield, through whose agency the body was discovered, is by no means enviable. The Coroner's jury has conducted its investigations with closed doors, and of course nothing will be known of the testimony before them till they make it public. Their decision is anxiously looked for.

Gold getting scarce in California.—The following extract from a private letter from a perfectly reliable source, has been furnished the N. Y. Tribune for publication. The writer is himself at the mines:—

"You will be disappointed in the amount of gold sent by this steamer, but not more so than we have been by the result of our labors during the last month in the mining districts. The force on the ground is variously estimated from 40,000 to 50,000, who have obtained perhaps in all $1,000,000, or but little more than an average of one doller per diem to each man. This is not satisfactory to you at home, but still less so to us here; but the truth is, that the surface gold is rapidly disappearing, and although we have faith that the subterranean deposites are large, yet we have not the capital or other requisites for deep mining. California must be dug up wide and deep if we hope for a golden harvest. Goods of nearly all descriptions are very low. Everybody is anxious to return, so you may look out for a hegira of those who have means to pay their passage."

A Patriot's Indignation.—Kossuth, the Hungarian Patriot and Refugee, has written a valedictory address to his countrymen, in which he openly accuses Gorgey of treason to them. He calls him the "ingrate" whom they had "fattened with their abundance." "Thy death sentence," says the indignant patriot, "hath been written, beloved of my heart, by him whose virtue, whose love, I never dared to doubt. Yes, in the fervor of my boldest thoughts, I should almost as soon have doubted the existence of the Omnipresent, as have believed that he should ever be a traitor to his country. Thou hast been betrayed by him in whose hands I had but a little space before deposited the power of our great country, which he swore to defend, even to the last drop of his heart's blood."

Touching Death.—In Toronto, on the 22d ult., Julia Fello came to her death under the following distressing circumstances:—It appeared by the evidence deposed to, that the son of the deceased, a lad about ten years old, was detected, with several other youths, in the act of stealing from Mr. Hamilton's garden, and lodged in jail. The deceased made great efforts to procure bail for her son, without success, and was very much excited in consequence. Seeing her husband coming along, she approached him with two children in her arms, and when within three or four yards of him she dropped down dead in the street. The jury returned a verdict according with these facts.

Sale of Slaves in Russia.—White slavery, says the London Patriot, is said not to exist in Russia. Let the reader judge. Count Kutaison owes the Russian Government 1,508,922 roubles. Not being able to pay, the Senate ordered the seizure of his serfs in Tamboy, which are announced for sale on the 29th of October, at Tamboy, to the number of 3,702 men, women, and children.

Suicide.—Mr. John V. Wooley, bar-keeper of the Montgomery House, in Boston, committed suicide in his room at the above house on Saturday evening about 8 o'clock. He had been sick for about two weeks with the typhoid fever, and on the above evening had so far recovered that he told his nurse he could get along without her. She left him in charge of his brother. At about the above hour he requested his brother to go out and get him some grapes, which he reluctantly consented to do. He was gone about 30 minutes. During this time, he got up and took the clothes from a cottage bedstead in the room and turned it upon the head, and then tied a towel and a handkerchief together and fastened the former round the foot piece and the latter round his neck, and drew up his legs and in a very few moments life was extinct. When his brother returned, his heart had ceased beating. His relativet reside in Albany. His age was about 25. His remains was interred at Mount Auburn.

Runaway Slaves—The Delaware Outlet.—We learn from the Wilmington (Del.) Chicken, that four slave men, belonging to Mr. Goldsborough, of Kent Co., Md., made their escape through that city week before last. Four persons, from the vicinity of Cantwell's bridge, pursued them for the reward, and on Tuesday evening, the 20th ult., took their station on the Newcastle side of the Wilmington bridge. About 11 o'clock the slaves made their appearance, and a fight ensued, when one of the white men was badly wounded by the negroes, and the slaves made good their escape. On Saturday night following, four more (a man, two women, and a child,) made good their escape. The same paper understands that six slaves also made their escape through that city on Tuesday night.

Terrible Sabbath Accident.—On Sabbath morning, Dec. 1st, a sad accident occurred on the Fitchburg Railroad. As a gravel train from Weston was proceeding over the road in the vicinity of the brick yards, about half a mile beyond Porter's in Cambridge, a brake rod broke and let the brake down on to the track. It caught on the point of a frog and threw off four of the cars, almost instantly killing four of the laborers who were riding on them, and injuring one other in the hip. The names of the killed were David Barrus, Timothy Conner, James Fitz Gibbins, and Mat McCan; the one injured was Patrick McGuire.

Running against a Snag.—The Louisville Courier states that, on the night of the 13th November, the steamer Hiram Powers, on her upward trip, with a wood boat in tow, struck a snag which, barely missing her hull, passed through the cook house, pantry, and two state-rooms, carrying away the cooking stove, pots, pans, and dishes, and finally emerged (with the second cook, who was caught sleeping in one of the dismantled rooms,) through the hurricane roof, where it protruded forty feet beyond the deck. Two of the firemen were thrown overboard by the shock, and drowned, but neither the cook nor the occupants of the state-rooms were injured.

SUMMARY.

A letter dated Baltimore, Dec. 5, says that the rage for California still continues, and several vessels are loading for the golden land. I have recently conversed with several mechanics—hard-fisted, go-ahead men, who have just returned home, but they give a very unflattering account of the general success. They say that the toil and privations endured are not compensated by the return. Where one succeeds in making a fortune, a dozen fail, with health gone in the fruitless effort.

Two flats, laden with hides, pecans, beeswax, and dried fruit, from the country of the Creek Indians, landed at Van Buren, Ark., on the 10th ultimo. The Intelligencer of that place says: "The boats, cargo, and all, are the fruits of Indian enterprise. It is a new feature in our trade to be supplied by the wholesale with dried fruit, by our red brethren. The spirit of the age is not confined to the States and white settlements."

The support of the poor in Herkimer Co., for the past year, cost upward of $13,500—not less than $8,000 of which is a special tax growing out of the rum trade. So says the Herkimer Freeman.

A man, answering to the name of Robinson, belonging to Baltimore, was arrested in the Senate Chamber, at Washington, on the 6th inst., for threatening the life of Henry Clay, and was committed to jail. He is supposed to have been insane.

On the 2d of December, in lat. 55, long. 74, the ship Galena and the brig Charles, of Newport, bound to Wilmington, N. C., came in contact, by which the latter was so much injured that she sunk in less than three minutes, carrying with her seven out of nine of her crew.

A watchmaker in Liverpool has succeeded in drilling a hole through a sixpence edgeways. The diameter of the hole in the coin is the four-thousandth part of an inch in size, and barely sufficient to admit a fine hair.

The day-boats to Albany made their last trips on Saturday, Dec. 1. Hereafter the night-boats will run as usual, until the river is frozen, when the Hudson river railroad will help people northward as far as Poughkeepsie.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 4 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "Book of the Farm," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled, AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

Initiation.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry; the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture; the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

Practice—Winter.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

Practice—Spring.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, is already published in Edinburgh, and the American edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

Miscellaneous.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL'S REPORT.

The Report of the Postmaster General found its way to the public, through the Philadelphia Ledger, in advance of its communication to Congress. It represents the finances of the Department as in a very good condition. The receipts for the year ending June 30, 1849, were $4,905,176 28, including the appropriation of $200,000 by Government for mail service. The expenditures for the year were $4,479,040 13, being $426,127 15 less than the gross revenue. The revenue for the year ending June 30, 1850, including balance on hand, and the Government's appropriation, is estimated at $5,802,166 00; the expenses of the same period are estimated at $4,750,138 13, being $1,033,710 87 less than the revenue. The Postmaster General thinks it would be safe to reduce letter postage to the uniform rate of five cents for every part of the country; as to newspaper postage, he suggests the propriety of reducing it, but does not say how much or upon what plan. The following paragraphs from the Report embody the leading facts which it brings to light:—

The number of post-offices in the United States, at the close of the year ending June 30, 1849, was 16,747, there having been 921 established and 333 discontinued within the year, making an increase within the year of 588.

The number of postmasters appointed within the year ending June 30, 1849, was 6,333.

The actual cost for each mile the mail was transported, but in the year preceding June, 1845, was eight cents one mill, under the operation of the laws of 1845, the cost per mile of the mail transportation in June last was five cents six mills, making a difference of two and a half cents per mile, being more than one quarter.

The number of mail routes in the United States on the first day of July, 1849, was 4,943, and the number of contractors 4,190. The length of these routes was 167,703 miles.

The classes of service now required are three: the care, transportation, and delivery, first, of letters; second, of newspapers and pamphlets; third, matter carried without compensation. It is by postage on the two first classes of service that the whole expenses of the Department are now sustained.

The whole number of letters charged with postage passing through the mails the past year, reckoned on the postage received, agreeably to a basis heretofore approved, amounted to sixty-two millions. On all these letters, the postage collected was $3,882,762; on newspapers and pamphlets, $819,016.

In the last year there were received at Washington 2,100,000 dead letters, all of which have been opened and examined. Of these 4,964, containing money to the amount of $32,069, have been registered and the same sent out for delivery to the owners, and 998 letters containing other enclosures of value.

The inspection office, whose duties include all matters relating to the performance or failure of mail service, all depredations on the mail, and also the supply of mail-bags, locks, and keys, is a branch increasing in direct ratio with the general service. In this office alone, during the past year, there were received 134,436 communications. The number of supposed depredations reported was 1,226, which were supposed to include $159,107. Twenty-nine depredators were arrested, and the amount of money reclaimed, or otherwise accounted for, was $77,789.

The heads of the different Departments frank all the mail matter sent from their respective Departments, and receive free all to them directed. Under the act of 1845, an account was kept by the Post-Office of the City of Washington, of all such matter received by the Departments for the year ending June 30, 1846, but no account of the matter sent from them. The postage on that received at the present rate was $250,383 88, and the amount as then estimated at the Treasury on the matter sent would be fully equal, so that the same then amounted to $500,767 66. In 1847 this mode of payment was abolished, and the only provision since for this service rendered to the Executive Departments is an appropriation of $200,000 per annum. It is always to be recollected, that no amount of appropriation, however large, to pay for franked matter, will ever in any degree relieve the letter or paper postage so long as such postage actually pays the whole expense of the Department, whereby such appropriation remains a surplus withdrawn from the Treasury.

But the principal part of the franked matter for which no payment is made to the Department, consists in the letters, papers, and documents franked by the members of the Senate and House of Representatives. The amount of this matter cannot be ascertained with entire accuracy, as much is forwarded of which no account is kept. By a report from the clerk's office of the House of Representatives, it appears that during the two sessions of the thirtieth Congress, ending in March last, the extra number of public documents for distribution was 370,350, and their weight was 467,762 lbs.; printed speeches, folded for members to frank, 6,692,500, which are estimated at one ounce each, 411,531 lbs. This does not include the written correspondence of the members, or the mail matter by them received. No report direct from the Senate is received; but by a report from the Post-Office in Washington, appears that during the year ending June 30th, 1849, the number of free written mail matter sent was 484,210; received, 819,293; making 1,303,503. Printed Senate speeches, 397,630; printed Senate documents, 170,715; making 568,345; House Documents, 3,448,250; total, 5,310,098. The letter postage and pamphlet postage to which this matter would have been subject, if not franked, is computed by that report at $792,700. It should be recollected, that the Post-Office Department is not only required to mail and transport this matter, often requiring the hire of additional coaches and teams, but is also subject to the actual payment of money contributed entirely by the letter postage in this manner. By law, two cents each is allowed every postmaster for the delivery of a free letter or package, if his income does not exceed $2,000 per annum. The proportion of these free papers delivered by postmasters of $2,000 income will not exceed one-tenth. Two cents each on the foregoing number, deducting one-tenth, was $95,161, which is actually paid to postmasters for delivering this free matter, out of money received for letter postage. Thus it appears, that for the delivery of nine-tenths of the millions of printed speeches franked and transported in the mail, without compensation, (the printing of which cost about one cent each,) there is paid two cents each, not by the person who sends or by the person who receives it, or by the country as for a public service, but by those who pay postage on their private correspondence. Were it abolished, there would probably be very much less of such matter printed. But the postage on the remainder, together with that on the correspondence of the members, and the relief of the expense of the transportation and delivery of this franked matter, would enable the Department to sustain itself, though the postage were materially reduced on letters. But if Congress continues this franking as a valuable public service, it is but just and proper that the letter correspondence, by a reduction on its postage, be relieved from its support, and that provision be made, therefore, in the same manner that other branches of public service are sustained.

[From the French of Jules Janin.]

THE CARDINAL, THE MINISTER, AND THE KING'S PHYSICIAN.

Early one delightful morning in April, a young man stopped at the door of a little roadside inn, situated near Paris. Though he had not reached his eighteenth year, yet his person was tall and vigorous, his large black eyes were full of fire, and his countenance at once open and agreeable. On his entrance he accosted the landlady with a cheerful "Give me some breakfast, my fair hostess, for I have been walking since daybreak, and I am very hungry." While he was speaking, there came in another traveler, more youthful in appearance than the first. Like him, he was on foot, and seemed much fatigued. He was small in stature, with a complexion of red and white, and possessed the voice and hands of a young girl. "Madame," said he with great timidity, "will you please to give me some breakfast?"

On hearing this, the first comer advanced towards him, saying, "Monsieur, let us breakfast together—you are traveling on foot, so am I—let us then sit down at the same table, drink each other's health, then enter Paris together, shake hands, and separate; do you agree?"

The modest stranger, still with the same sweet low voice, replied, "You honor me, sir, and I consent with great pleasure."

There is something so pleasing in the contemplation of frank, generous youth, that even the most careless are often influenced by it, and thus the mistress of the inn, contrary to custom, served these poor tired pedestrians the first.

The table, set in the best place before the open window, was quickly covered with provision, the young men took their seats, their plates and glasses were filled, when a third traveler passed the window and looked in. This last personage was dark, rather stout, the expression of his features calm, grave, and composed, his fine forehead shaded with tresses of long wavy brown hair. The manner of this comer was very different from the vivacity of the first, or the timidity of the second. "Gentlemen," cried he to the others, "will you not wait for a poor fellow like me?—but I fancy I am come just in time—a little later, and I must have contented myself with the remains of that magnificent smoking omelette I now see. Hardly had he spoken, when the first comer, with his ready smile, held out his glass through the window. The stranger took the glass, emptied it, squeezed the other's proffered hand, then entering the inn he placed himself at the end of the table, the bashful youth being in the middle, apparently astonished that so many pleasant acquaintances should be picked up on the road to Paris.

Their repast was soon finished, and they pursued their journey. They were all traveling the same road, and they walked on together. At last they arrived at the barriers of Paris—they stopped by mutual consent. Till then the conversation had been light and cheerful, but they now became grave and thoughtful—it was time to part. It was once more the first traveler who broke silence. "My name," he said, "is Portal; I am going to Paris with the intention of becoming a member of the Academy of Science, and first physician to the king." "And I," said he of the brown hair, "am going to Paris to become advocate-general." They waited for the modest stranger to speak. "And I," he answered with his soft voice and air of timidity—"I visit Paris to become a member of the French Academy, and cardinal."

"Then," said the others, gravely pulling off their hats, "it is you, my lord, who must pass first." At that moment the clock of a neighboring church struck, and they entered Paris.

Let us follow the fate of these three young men. The last mentioned became the Abbey Maury, an eloquent orator, member of the French Academy and cardinal; he died honored and esteemed. The other was Count Treillard, minister of state, and friend of the Emperor; he is still living, and has not forgotten his first entry into Paris. And the tall, vivacious Portal, he became the glory of his profession, member of the Academy, Professor. He was all except physician to the king. Louis XVI. perished on the scaffold while Portal was yet a student. The Republic had no physician; the Emperor had one who was his friend; besides Portal would be attendant on a king, and he was. He became principal physician to Louis XVIII. Portal died lately, and the preceding narrative was related in the funeral oration pronounced in the Academy of Science.

THE DUTCH REFORMED CHURCH.—The Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church has in its connection 299 ministers, 282 churches, and 33,980 communicants. The number of families that adhere to the denomination is 24,393, and the attendants on public worship number 108,492. During the past year 1,238 were received to the communion of the church by profession, and 1,085, by certificate. The General Synod embraces the two particular Synods of New York and Albany, which are each composed of twelve classes.

HYMN FOR A LITTLE BOY.

"What, mother, makes it seem to me,
When I am all alone,
As if some one could hear and see,
And all my thoughts were known?

"Sometimes it makes me very glad,
And dance and sing with joy;
Sometimes it makes me very sad,
And frights your little boy.

"O, tell me, mother, tell me why;
For I have never known
Why 't is I laugh, or why I cry,
When I am all alone."

"My child, you never are alone?
There is a watchful eye
To which your very thoughts are known;
'T is God is ever nigh.

"He made your little heart for joy,
He tunes your happy song;
O, then, my little timid boy,
Fear only doing wrong.

"For he who makes your heart so glad,
Who bids the good be gay,
With the same love will make it sad,
Whene'er you disobey.

"He is your Father, and he hears
Your weakest, faintest prayer;
He wipes away an infant's tears,
And children are his care."

HONESTY.

A spice merchant of Constantinople, carrying a piece of fine cloth to a tailor, desired to have a cloak and tunic made of it, and inquired if there was enough. The artist having measured the stuff, declared it sufficient, and then requested to know the cost of it.

"Five sequins," replied the customer, "was the price; and, considering the quality, it is not at all dear."

The tailor paused a moment.

"I am but a beginner in trade," said he to the spice dealer at length, "and money is an object to me. Give me two sequins, and I will show you how you may save three in this affair."

"I agree," said the other, and the money was produced and paid.

"It is well!" said the man of the needle —"I am a person of my word. This cloth has cost five sequins, and I have promised to save you three. Take it to some other tailor, and Allah direct you to one of more experience; for I have never made such a dress as you want; and if I attempt it, it will be spoiled."

[This reminds us, says the New Orleans Picayune, of an anecdote related of Sheridan, who went to a hair dresser's to order a wig. On being measured, the barber, who was a liberal soul, invited the orator to take some refreshment in an inner room. Here he regaled him with a bottle of port, and showed so much genuine hospitality that Sheridan's heart was touched. When they rose from the table, and were about separating, the latter, looking the barber full in the face, said, "On reflecting, I don't intend that you shall make my wig." Astonished, and with a blank visage, the other exclaimed, "Good heaven! Mr. Sheridan, how can I have displeased you?" "Why, look you," said Sheridan, "you are an honest fellow; and I repeat it, you shan't make the wig, for I never intended to pay for it. I'll go to another less worthy son of the craft."]

☞ The following paragraph from Eliza Cook's Journal contains a great lesson. What an amount of happiness would be secured, and misery averted, if people generally would learn it.

SELF-HELP.—Can we not learn the lesson of self-help? Society is full of infirm people, who incessantly summon others to serve them. They contrive every where to exhaust, for their single comfort, the entire means and appliances of that luxury to which our invention has yet attained. Sofas, ottomans, stoves, wine, game-fowls, spices, perfumes, rides, the theater, entertainments; all these they want, they need, and whatever can be suggested more than these, they crave also, as if it were the bread which should keep them from starving; and if they miss any one, they represent themselves as the most wronged and most wretched persons on earth. One must have been born and bred with them to know how to prepare a meal for their learned stomachs. Meantime, they never bestir themselves to serve another person—not they! they have a great deal more to do for themselves than they can possibly perform; nor do they once perceive the cruel joke of their lives, but the more odious they grow, the sharper is the tone of their complaining and craving. Can any thing be so elegant as to have few wants, and to serve them one's-self, so as to have somewhat left to give, instead of being always prompt to grasp? It is more elegant to answer one's own needs, than to be richly served; inelegant, perhaps, it may look to-day, and to a few, but it is an elegance for ever, and to all.

CONSTITUTION OF CALIFORNIA.—The special correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, under date of Sept. 28, says that "quite a warm discussion occurred yesterday in Committee of the Whole on one of the miscellaneous provisions relative to conjugal relations. The section secures all the real and personal property of the wife obtained before marraige, and all acquired by gift, devise or descent; and also provides for the passage of laws more clearly defining the rights of the wife, and for the registration of her private property—this is the civil and differs materially from the common law. The section was adopted. Another section securing from seizure and forced sale a certain portion of the property of all heads of families, the homestead, not to exceed 320 acres of land, or any town or city lots not to exceed $2,000, and prohibiting its alienation by a married man, unless by consent of the wife, also caused much debate, but was ultimately adopted. The Convention held three sittings, and did not intermit labor until nearly 12 o'clock at night."

YANKEE MERCHANT.—A down-easter, who is now "out West" selling dry goods, advertises his stock of prints as follows: "The largest and most extensive stock of French, English, and American prints ever West of Milwaukie. To save time in describing this vast stock of prints, we'll just cut the story short by giving you the dimensions as measured by our Civil Engineer: 'Commencing at the South-east corner of said pile of prints, running due North 24 feet; thence at right angles, 4 feet; thence South 24 feet; and thence North 4 feet to the place of beginning—being 3 cords more or less—it being understood that said pile of prints is 4 feet high.'"

DREAMS EXPLAINED.—Lively dreams are a sign of the excitement of nervous action. Soft dreams are a sign of slight irritation of the brain; often in nervous fever announcing the approach of a favorable crisis. Frightful dreams are a sign of determination of blood to the head. Dreams of blood and red objects are signs of inflammatory conditions. Dreams about rain and water are often signs of diseased mucous membranes and dropsy. Dreams of distorted forms are frequently a sign of abdominal obstruction, and disorder of the liver. Dreams in which the patient sees any part especially suffering, indicate diseases of that part. Dreams about death often precede apoplexy, which is connected with a determination of blood to the head. The night-mare, with great sensitiveness, is a sign of determination of blood to the head. Dreams of Dogs—after a bite—often precede an attack of hydrophobia, but may only be the consequence of an excited imagination.

THE PEARLASH SPRINGS, AT THE GREAT SALT LAKE.—Many people think that these wonderful springs do not exist; but they are there, and no mistake. Thousands of California emigrants, who stopped to rest at the Salt Lake, watered their cattle at the spring, and would pay no attention to the warning of the Mormons not to let their cattle drink of the water so strongly impregnated with salæratus. They said it was all a "Mormon humbug" about the alkali being strong enough to kill their cattle, and the consequences are, that over two thousand dead carcases of oxen now lie strewed along the way, and the very offensive smell caused thereby renders it impossible to travel near the road. The Mormons are making money by selling their produce to emigrants and buying things brought to them. By-and-by, they intend starting an establishment to make pot and pearl ashes from the water of these springs, which they think will be far more valuable than all the gold mines about there.

AN ODDITY.—An eccentric old bachelor, who lately died at Madras, has left the sum of $1000, the interest of which is to be divided annually into five portions, to be distributed at the discretion of the minister of St. Cyrus, Kincardineshire. One portion to be given to the tallest woman that has been married during the year, and one to the shortest. A third portion goes to the eldest woman married during the year, and the fourth to the youngest. The strange old bachelor showed that his intentions were kind, for he directed the fifth sum to be distributed in groceries amongst the poor.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT.—A member of the Agricultural Society of Brest, lately sowed some wheat without preparatory ploughing or digging, and covered it with fresh straw, after having walked over it to press the grain down. The product is said to have been superior in quality to wheat raised in the ordinary way from the same amount of seed, and the soil was of the worst kind. The same experiment, with wheat and other grains, has often been tried before, and with apparently similar results; but the result has never proved sufficiently advantageous to induce farmers to abandon the established mode of cultivation.

SOCIETY IN PHILADELPHIA.—The Daily News states the estimated population of Philadelphia, at the present time, to be 350,000; or, in other words, 70,000 families. Of this number, only 2,000 families have a competency for support above manual labor; 20,000 depend upon mechanical and professional branches; and the residue of 47,000 is divided into two parts, viz: 30,000 who labor, or are desirous of laboring, and 17,000 who resort to illegitimate and criminal means for a livelihood. Of the latter class, 6,000 are supposed to be beggars; 4,000 who depend upon the offal of the streets and what they can collect from the kitchens of the wealthy; 3,000 who steal, 1,000 who starve for want of any kind of support, and 3,000 who follow a promiscuous livelihood. Such is the state of society in Philadelphia, and the elements which compose it.

HOW MANY MILES A PRINTER'S HAND TRAVELS.—Although a printer may be setting all day, yet in his own way he is a great traveler, or at least his hand is, as we shall prove. A good printer will set 8,000 ems a day, or about 24,000 letters. The distance traveled over by his hand will average about one foot per letter, going to the boxes in which they are contained, and of course returning, making two feet every letter he sets. This would make a distance each day of 48,000 feet, or a little more than 9 miles; and in the course of a year, leaving out Sabbaths, that member travels about 3,000 miles!

Miss Mary Hughes, aged 17 years, of Kichletown, near Wheeling, committed suicide recently, by leaping from the Bridgeport Bridge. While returning from Bridgeport with one of her young companions, and when about mid way on the bridge, she remarked, "I am going to the bottom of that river," and immediately removed her bonnet and shawl and raised herself on the railing. Her companion caught hold of her, but before she could be prevented the fatal leap was taken, and she sunk to her "long last sleep." No cause arrigned for the rash act.

An European correspondent of the N. Y. Literary World, says that a short time since a party of Spanish soldiers at Rome, being smitten with the beauty of a Roman wife, and finding all their arts of seduction fail, determined to carry her off. They secretly entered her dwelling at night, cut off her means of retreat, and were about to forcibly abduct the victim, when her husband, to whom she was tenderly attached, to save her honor, plunged a dagger into her heart, thus re-enacting the tragedy of Virginius, which was acted in the same city more than two thousand years ago.

An ingenious contrivance for imbedding telegragh-wire in the beds of rivers and shallow waters, is described by the Journal of Commerce. A gigantic plough-share is attached to the bottom of a steam-scow, which, being propelled, draws a furrow in a muddy bottom to the depth of six feet. The wire is delivered from a reel on deck, and passing slowly through the plough, is deposited in the furrow and covered in. The inventor is W. H. Allen, who has taken out a patent.

Variety.

"The skins of all lions killed through the regency," says Capt. Kennedy, in his journey through Algeria and Tunis, "are sent to the Bey, who pays a handsome premium upon each. The flesh is eaten; and contrary to our expectation, we found it excellent, and made a capital supper upon the ends of the ribs stewed with a little salt and red pepper. It tasted like very young beef, and was neither tough nor strong flavored!"

A maid servant was dismissed on account of her lack of cleanliness. She requested her employer, if the cause of her dismissal should be mentioned, to do it in as light terms as possible. The following certificate was given to her: "Ann B. has conducted herself well while in my service, the main cause of her dismissal being her tendency to hydrophobia!"

The steamship America's news was transmitted by lightning from Halifax on the 16th ult., along the line to New Orleans, stopping at the intermediate cities to write down its message, and the announcement of its reception came back to Halifax in 48 hours, during which time it had traveled a distance of 5,000 miles!

The Rev. Dr. Winans, of Mississippi, and the Rev. Mr. Stewart, of Louisiana, were both candidates for Congress, at the recent elections, in their respective States. Their defeat is considered by the Southerner a certain proof that the people deem it more important to keep good preachers at home than to send them to Congress.

He has been long a Post Captain, and reached his flag by seniority.

A queer typographical error occurred lately, which shows how great a change a type may make. The editor was warmly eulogizing the official conduct of a public man, and said that "he had lived down his enemies." The compositor, however, omitted the v, so that the sentence read, "he had lied down his enemies."

The manager of the Troy Museum has brought an action against a clergyman for libel, and laid his damages at $10,000. It appears that the clergyman, in a pulpit discourse, pronounced the Museum a vile, immoral pit—its performances evil in their influence, and dangerous to the moral welfare of the community.

James Seering, a laborer in Hoe's factory in Sheriff-st., N. Y., while grinding a tool on one of the grindstones, one day last week, had the fingers of his left hand caught between the stone and rest, where three of his fingers were ground off before the stone could be stopped.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

A Card.

TO THE PATRONS OF GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE.
The close of the current Volume is deemed a proper period to announce to the patrons of this Magazine, that arrangements have been completed which cannot fail to increase its attractions during the coming year. The best writers in the country will continue to enrich our pages with their productions, and our engravers—who stand foremost in their profession—will put forth the best efforts of their art to make this peculiar department of the Magazine more beautiful than ever.

Promising unremitted exertions to merit a continuance of the favor bestowed upon the Magazine, we respectfully solicit a renewal of the subscriptions of all its old patrons, and the addition of the names of all who desire to avail themselves of the satisfaction of reading what is universally conceded to be "THE BEST MAGAZINE IN THE COUNTRY."

Attention is called to the following list of Terms, which are unquestionably more advantageous to subscribers than those offered by any other work of the kind.

TERMS.—For $3 in advance, (par money in the States from which it is remitted,) one copy of Graham and a copy of a large and magnificent print, by a distinguished Engraver, and which may be considered one of the most beautiful specimens of art ever presented by any Magazine publisher, and also a new and beautiful Engraving, suitable for framing, of a Sacred subject, "Bearing the Saviour to the Tomb," prepared expressly, and at a very heavy cost, as a Premium Gift to new subscribers to Graham's Magazine. Or, if desired, we will furnish in lieu of either of the above Prints, a complete set of our Mezzotint Portraits of the American Heroes of the Late War with Mexico. For $5, two copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints to each subscriber. For $10, five copies for one year, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person forming the club, and either of the above Prints, or a set of Portraits, to each subscriber. For $20, eleven copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints, or a set of Portraits to each subscriber, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person sending the club, with a copy of each of the large Prints as an additional Premium.

☞ Any person forwarding a club of 20, or upwards, shall receive for his trouble a complete copy of W. H. Graham's "American Historical and Biographical Library."

THE ANTI-SECTARIAN CONVENTION.

We have waited with some anxiety the result of the Anti-Sectarian Convention at Peterboro, N. Y., which is now before us in the Recorder of Nov. 8th. We have no disposition to question the moral character or integrity of purpose of our union brethren in that Convention; but though awarding to them the strictest integrity, we are a little inclined to doubt the correctness of some of the principles which they set forth. At present, we do not propose to offer an opinion as to the correctness or incorrectness of any of the six resolutions adopted by the Convention, except the third, which, for its peculiarity, can scarcely have escaped the attention of any careful reader. It runs as follows:—

"Resolved, That in determining whether a given person of our locality shall be received into our church fellowship, the only pertinent question is, not whether he agrees or disagrees with us in his faith and practice, nor whether he honors or violates certain requirements of Christianity, but simply whether in our judgment he is a Christian."

The peculiarity of this resolution is in the last two clauses. We are not to ask concerning the candidate for church membership, whether he honors or violates certain requirements of Christianity, but simply whether, in our judgment, he is a Christian. Now we are totally unable to comprehend what this does mean, if it does not mean to repudiate the Heaven-sanctioned declaration, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Let us see. The requirements of Christianity, and the requirements of God, cannot be otherwise than identical. Since God is the author of the Christian scheme, whatever it requires, He requires. Again, to honor a requirement of God is to obey it; nor can it, by any possibility, be honored by man in any other way. The union church, then, is not to inquire whether the candidate obeys the requirements of God, but simply whether, in its opinion, he be a Christian. The question of obedience to God being set aside, the question of Christian character is to be determined irrespective of it. Now this honoring of Christian requirements, or obedience to God, is the very "fruit" by which the Bible declares that we are to know them, that is, their Christian character. But this means of determining Christian character, the resolution repudiates. Still the character is to be determined as a ground of admission. Some other criterion than obedience, then, must be assumed. What that criterion is, the resolution does not inform us.

We believe we have done no injustice, in affirming that this resolution repudiates one of the plainest declarations of Holy Writ. Now, so far as we can see, if Christian character is to be determined without reference to "honoring or violating the requirements of Christianity," a man may be a Christian while violating any one or all of the requirements of Christianity. This union church, then, may be composed of Christians violaitng every requirement of Christianity! The doctrine that a man may be a Christian, and yet violate the requirements of Christianity, is a doctrine freighted with death, against which the Word of God hurls its thundering anathemas, and yet that doctrine is most clearly taught in this resolution. We do not affirm, that a man may not now violate a requirement of Christianity, and at some subsequent period become a Christian; but we do affirm, that while committing that act, and until by repentance he obtain pardon, he cannot be a child of God.

But it may be said, that this resolution only contemplates non-interrogation in relation to the violation "of certain requirements of Christianity," and not in relation to a violation of them all. But inasmuch as it does not specify the number of violations about which inquiry may be made, it is no more than fair to infer, that inquiry is to be made in relation to no violation whatever; and, moreover, no reason can be given why the church should inquire concerning the violation of any one requirement more than another. If we admit that the resolution implies that a few violations are to be left uninquired about, nothing is gained for the resolution; for, if the Bible affirms any thing clearly, it is that the violation of any one requirement of God is equivalent to a violation of every requirement.

Still it may be said, in defense of the resolution, that the violating of Christian requirements there mentioned, does not embrace willful acts of disobedience to known requirements, but simply those occasional aberrations from duty, in which the requirement violated is not comprehended, nor its obligation perceived, and consequently the candidate is not to be considered an actual sinner. Such a construction evinces a looseness of theological sentiment which does little credit to so learned a body of divines as adopted the resolution in question. This we think to be the most favorable construction of which the resolution is susceptible. Let us examine the sentiment, then, in the light of reason and revelation. It implies, in the first place, that a man may violate a requirement of God, and not be a sinner; and, in the second place, that he may violate a requirement of God which he does not comprehend, and the obligation of which he does not perceive. Now both of these propositions are diametrically opposed to the fundamental principles of ethics, and the plainest declarations of Holy Writ. The Bible defines sin to be "the transgression of the law." If this be true, then whoever transgresses the law is a sinner. This is no far-fetched deduction, but an irresistible conclusion—a necessary consequence. A man's Christian character is, in every conceivable case, as his obedience to the requirements of Christianity. To determine the former, the latter MUST first be determined. But this resolution forbids an inquiry into the latter, and yet demands a knowledge of the former, which the Bible and universal consciousness affirm to be impossible.

To the proposition, that a man can violate a requirement which he does not comprehend, and the obligation which he does not perceive, we reply, that the Bible affirms that, "where there is no law, there is no transgression." If the Bible had not affirmed this truth, every well-developed mind would recognize it. This must apply to every individual to whose intelligence no law has been applied; for there is no law to an individual who knows of no law. If God should to-day issue a command from Heaven, and that law remain unapplied to the human intelligence, then most clearly the human family would be without that law as truly as if it had never issued from God. There being, then, to the human family, no such law, how could the human family transgress it? Most clearly they could not. This principle applies in every case. It cannot be affirmed, that there is law to any individual, unless that law be written on his intelligence. Up to that moment, he is without law; and, if the Bible be true, he is without transgression also. If this be true, then the proposition that a man can violate a requirement or law which he does not comprehend or know, must be false. Let the Bible speak on this point. James 4: 17—"Therefore, to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." John 9: 11—"Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin; but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth." We are willing to abide the Saviour's own exposition of this matter. He affirms, that sin or transgression of law comes only in consideration of knowing the law. What, then, becomes of the proposition, that men violate law, or sin, while ignorant of the law? If Jesus Christ be true, then 'if ye are blind ye shall have no sin.' Obligation is at all times exactly commensurate with light or knowledge of law, so that, if light be extinguished, obligation is extinguished also. In whatever way this resolution be viewed, it presents a looseness which surprises us, considering the source whence it issued.

Let us next examine the Address of the Convention. It commences by a reference to the Lord's prayer, "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me," and proceeds to state, that "though more than eighteen centuries have passed away since it was uttered, the world is still perishing in unbelief." To the inquiry, "Why remains this prayer so long unanswered?" the Address replies:—

"Christians refuse to be one. They are taught, on the Saviour's authority, that should they consent to be one, the world would thereby be converted to God. Nevertheless, they refuse to be one, and thereby the world remains estranged from God. They are willing that Christians of the same opinion—holding the same views in respect to Baptism, the Sabbath, &c.,—should be of one church-fellowship, and one church-sect; but to conform to the Saviour's prayer, that they all, however diverse from each other in their faith and practice, may nevertheless be one—to conform to such a prayer, even though it be the Saviour's prayer, they are entirely unwilling."

In the above quotation, two propositions are assumed, and each left without any effort at proof. The first is, that the union for which our Saviour prayed, and the union sought to be perfected by the Convention which framed the Address, are identical. The second is, that for want of such a union, the world remains estranged from God. We are now to ask, what is the union which this anti-sectarian sect seeks to consummate, and what the union for which Christ prayed? We remark, that this new sect does not seek a union of sentiment upon those points of faith and practice which now constitute the distinguishing characteristics of the other sects; for the Address expressly states, that "however diverse Christians may be in faith and practice, they may nevertheless be one." The union is to be without regard to the various conflicting doctrines now entertained by Christians. Again, its ostensible object is not to beget a oneness of love for the heathen in the hearts of Christians, nor yet a friendly communication of Christians with each other; for the Address admits, that "upon this world, which is dead in trespasses and sin, Christians do indeed look with pity. To redeem and bless it, they would not only 'go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature,' but they would also make endeavors more or less earnest to bring their respective denominations into a state of friendly communication with each other." The anti-sectarians admit Christians of other sects to be as truly consecrated in heart to God as themselves, and propose that the members of all sects shall unite in one, on the exclusive ground that they are consecrated to God, or, in other words, are Christians. What, then, is the central idea of this new movement? Let the Address speak for itself:—"The Christians of a place are the church of such a place." This, so far as we can see, is the issue, and the only issue, which this new sect has made with the other sects. It relates exclusively to the mode of organizing a church. The true issue will appear by a single example. In the village of Alfred, let there be one hundred Presbyterians, and an equal number of Congregationalists, all truly devoted to God. They propose to organize a church for the better advancement of Christ's kingdom. The one set believe, and conscientiously too, that the disciplinary power is lodged alone in the presbytery; the other, as conscientiously, that it is lodged in the congregation; and neither, without a sacrifice of conscience, can yield its mode of discipline. Shall these Christians form one church, or two, supposing this question of discipline to be the only important distinction between them? This is the issue between the unionists and others. Now we ask, Is this central idea of modern unionism identical with the union for which Christ prayed in behalf of his disciples? This Address assumes that it is, and it is a mere assumption. In opposition to this, we might rest with the mere assumption, that Christ had no reference whatever to the mode of organizing a church, in his prayer for oneness. But, happily for the cause of truth, we are not left to assumption and conjecture. The kind of union for which Christ prayed is definitely expressed. "That they may be one, even as we are one," is the union prayed for. Now, how was Christ one with his Father? In church organization? Certainly not. Then what has this prayer to do with church organization? As they were united, so are Christians to be united. This oneness most manifestly consisted in a mutual consecration of will to the good of being. It was for this that Christ prayed. This is the sum of all that God requires of his beings. When Christians are mutually consecrated to the glory of God and the good of being, they are most emphatically one, as Christ and his Father are one. Christ says, "And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are." Here the Saviour most touchingly alludes to his mission on earth, now about to close, and to his oneness with the Father during that mission; and in what more glorious sense can oneness be predicated of them than a oneness to bless the world? He leaves his disciples in the world, and prays that they may also be one in like consecration. Will our union brethren deny, that other churches are as truly consecrated to the good of being as themselves? We presume not. Then the Saviour's prayer is no more answered in their case than in that of others.

As we have already shown, they admit, that "Christians look with pity on the world dead in trespasses and sins," and that "to redeem it they would go into all the world," &c. "And yet," say they, "the Saviour's remedy for the wickedness, wretchedness, and ruin of the world, still remains indispensable!" This is the very remedy. But if the philosophy of this Address be true, all those devoted servants of God, who are laboring in heathen lands for the good of being, would better subserve God's glory, and answer the Saviour's prayer, to come home and sit down among those whose motto is, "The Christians of a place are the church of such place." In saying this we may appear to be charging our union brethren with making every other consideration second to this one idea of church organization. That this charge may not appear libelous, let us follow the Address a little farther:—

"No difficulty—no impossibility even—in agreeing upon a pastor, or upon the forms of worship, or aught else pertaining to church relations, can exonerate the Christians of a place from their obligation to assemble together, and recognize each other as fellow church members."

The above sentiment is neither more nor less than this, that the Christians of a place must be the one church of that place, even though it prevent the attainment of every end for which the church was constituted. Now, the blessing of the world, and the saving of sinners by the preaching of the gospel, pertains most intimately to the relations of the church; but all must be sacrificed upon this strange altar. If so, then this union church would render the answer to the Lord's prayer an absolute impossibility. But what a church—or, rather, what an insult to the name of a church—would that be, organized upon such principles as to subvert the preaching of the gospel, and "every thing else pertaining to church relations." Yet the Address demands a union church, even at this expense. Give us a union church, though it result in so much disunion, that we can not choose a pastor, adopt any form of worship, or transact aught else pertaining to church relations. Beautiful union this! Who can not see, that if there could be no agreement in a church in relation to these things, they would be at once subverted? The want of such a union can not be the reason why the Lord's prayer remains unanswered.

The Address next says:—

"That sectarianism will come to a speedy end, we dare not hope. Intemperance, licentiousness, slavery, war, are all strongholds of satan. In these he musters but the wicked to fight for him. But in sectarianism he has a far stronger hold than in any of these, for in this he musters the righteous also. Of all the abominations of the earth, none is so much sanctified by the favor and support of the righteous as sectarianism."

We have never seen more strange contradictions, and miserable paralogysms, than are contained in the above quotation. We first find a sweeping denunciation against all who countenance slavery, war, &c. They are all, at one sweep of the pen of this loving and charitable Anti-sectarian Convention, unchristianized, and called wicked servants of the devil. Who does not know, that a large majority of the churches would fight under some circumstances? And who does not know, that a majority of all professed Christians sanction slavery? Yet this Address sweeps them all overboard, and consigns them to the ranks of the devil's soldiery. We wonder if the Convention at Peterboro had any pro-slavery voters in it, or any men who supported the late Mexican war by aiding to reward its great hero with the Presidency? What next? Why, "In sectarianism he [the devil] musters the righteous also. Of all the abominations of the earth, none is so much sanctified by the favor and support of the righteous as sectarianism." What a spectacle! An army of righteous men, armed and equipped, shoulder to shoulder, fighting for the devil, with his satanic majesty for a leader! Who besides this Convention has ever ventured to call a regiment of men fighting as volunteers in the service of the devil, righteous men? If such are the righteous, who are the unrighteous? But, says the Address, those fighting for the devil in defense of slavery, war, &c., are the wicked, while those fighting under him for the abomination of sectarianism are the righteous. By what rule of ethics, pray, are those men made wicked who fight for the devil in defense of one "abomination," and those righteous who fight for the same devil in defense of another "abomination?" We should have thought this a slip of the pen, or charged the printer with a blunder, had not the same sentiment been couched in the third resolution.

Passing over this strange contradiction, let us see what is the charge preferred against those who do not adopt this union sentiment. Sectarianism is termed an "abomination." This term implies unmitigated sin. It is the strongest term which the English language affords to express sin. Now, there never was a sin except there was a sinner. If sectarianism is a sin, then verily are sectarians sinners; and if it be the greatest of sins, they are the greatest of sinners. But what is this sectarianism which is pronounced so sinful? Why, simply a difference of opinion in relation to church organization. One believes that all the Christians in a given place should constitute the church of that place; another, that those who agree in modes of discipline, performance of ordinances, &c., constitute a church. Now, the former denominates the latter an abomination. Is this the spirit of charity and kindness which union inculcates?

We have not intended, in the foregoing strictures, to discuss the question at issue, but, in all kindness, to point out what seemed to us incongruities; and if, in any instance, we have misapprehended or misconstrued, we shall be most happy to be corrected.

THE MOTHER OF SWARTZ.—The mother of Christian Frederick Swartz, on her dying bed, informed her husband and pastor, that she had dedicated her son to the Lord, and obtained a promise from them that the infant should be trained in the remembrance of this sacred destination, and if he should, in due time, express a desire to be educated for the ministry, they would cherish and promote it to the uttermost of their power. Swartz became the missionary apostle to India, and died when about seventy-three years old, having been instrumental, as is supposed, in the conversion of thousands of souls.

THE LESSON OF THE PINE.

BY J. R. LOWELL.

I go to the ridge in the forest,
  Which I haunted in days gone by,
But thou, oh Memory, pourest
  No magical drops in mine eye,
Not the gleam of the secret restorest
  That has paled from the woodland and sky;
A presence more sad and sober
  Invests the rock and the tree,
And the aureole of October
  Lights the maples, but darkens me.

  Thou pine in the distance,
That standest through sun and rain,
  Meeting with graceful persistence,
With a graceful but sturdy resistance,
  The storm's direst wrench and strain,
No thought of thy past existence
  Brings thee pain;
Right for the zenith heading,
  Patient of heat and cold,
Thine arms to the influence spreading
  Of the heavens, just as from of old,
Thou only aspirest the more,
  Unregretful thine old leaves shedding,
That fringed thee with music before,
  And the deeper thy tough roots imbedding
In the grace and beauty of yore;
  Thou say'st not, "Alas, I am older,
The green of last season is sere!
  But loftier, hopefuler, bolder,
Conquer'st broader horizons each year.

ESSENTIALS AND NON-ESSENTIALS.

It is very common for individuals, when pressed with the claims of the Sabbath, to resist them on the ground that it is not essential which day is kept; and to inquire with an air of triumph, whether we suppose there is no getting to heaven without keeping the seventh day. Of course it is of but little use to argue with persons of this stamp; they look at every thing through a selfish medium, and can not appreciate an argument unless it appeals to their hopes of heaven or their fears of hell. We beg to commend to their attentive perusal, however, the following paragraph, which we clip from an article by a Presbyterian clergyman who has recently joined the Episcopal Church:—

"One you find asking—can I not be saved, even if I reject this—and this—and this, in Christianity? Another demands, Is it necessary to salvation that I should fast?—that I should receive the communion?—that I should be baptized?—that I should be a member of the church? And another wishes to know, Can not the Mohammedan be saved?—the Jew?—the Unitarian?—the Hottentot?—the Infidel? Still another asks, Do you think a man is responsible for his belief? Is not a man safe, provided he is sincere? Questions like those which certain Jews put to our Lord, apparently to seek information, really to ensnare him in his replies, and to which it would in general convey a wrong impression to answer either yes or no. The intention is, not to believe more than they can help—not to do what they can avoid—not to yield what they can withhold—to pare down the terms of salvation to the minimum, and purloin the crown of eternal life without an effort or a tear. Hence (O, the depths of satan!) that artful distinction between the fundamentals or essentials in Christianity and things not essential. It is not necessary to salvation, to belong to a church; it is not necessary to salvation, to receive the sacraments; it is not necessary to salvation, to believe in the Trinity;—go on, gentlemen; I can not see where you will stop; revelation is itself unnecessary; for we all believe that a heathen may be saved without it. How plausible this new reasoning in our new Adams and Eves; let us observe his commandments, especially the moral and the spiritual; but the external and non-essential of a visible and outward tree, it is enslaving to the mind to regard it, and we honor and adore our Maker in not imputing to him so unessential a condition of salvation. Shame on such heartless reasoning. There may be a circumstance, when to refuse a cup of cold water, may bring upon my soul the awful words at the last—"Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire; inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." O, may my soul escape the wo, and gain the promise of that Preacher on the mountain, who said, in words that hang as the cloud between the Israelites and the Egyptians, dark to the latter, but bright to the former—"Whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." I praise my Maker for having opened my eyes to this one thing, that whatever God has thought necessary to reveal or to command, it is, for me, necessary to believe and to obey."

PRAYER-MEETING IN WEST AFRICA.—One night, some time after we had retired to rest, we heard a noise in the children's room, which was some distance from our own. We felt anxious to know what our little people could be doing up so late. We approached the door and listened; and, lo! it was the voice of prayer. We continued to listen, and soon found that these dear little African children were holding their own prayer-meeting. The eldest girl was named Matty; she seemed to be conducting the exercises. She first prayed herself in broken English. She then called upon John. But John said, "Matty, me no sabby pray English." "Then pray in Jolliff," said Matty; "God knows every language." He prayed in Jolliff. Matty then called upon Petty, who also prayed in Jolliff. The next boy called upon was Gabriel. But Gabriel said, "Matty, me no sabby pray English; me no sabby pray Jolliff." "Then," said Matty, "say 'Our Father.'" The poor boy repeated the Lord's Prayer in a solemn tone; and the little prayer-meeting concluded. We returned to our room unobserved, and thanked God in our hearts that he was beginning to work upon the minds of our dear negro children. [Rev. W. Moister.

ANECDOTES IN THE PULPIT.

From Dr. Cheever's Introduction to Arvine's Cyclopedia of Moral and Religious Anecdotes.

In modern times, one of the most eminent examples of power in the use of incidents in illustrating and enforcing divine truth, is that of Whitefield. He drew thousands upon thousands to hear him, who probably would never have come to listen, or never stayed through a sermon, but for his wonderful fertility and quickness in the dramatic application of his subject. He was master of such pathos and naturalness, in describing events illustrative of the grace of God, the solemnity of divine providence, the power of conscience, and the nearness of eternal realities, that his facts seemed to come flaming from the fire of his feelings, by which he burnt them in upon the soul, and the truths of his subject along with them. An old fact put on a startling aspect in his hands; he galvanized every incident, and then threw it in an electric stream on the conscience.

He had a most inimitable ease and happiness in the introduction of occurrences into his sermons, that had fallen under his own observation, or had been related to him by others. He brought out the meaning of them, and traced their application with such natural art, and deep, spontaneous feeling, that they seemed a new revelation of truth even to the original narrators of them.

A clergyman of this country states, that he once told an affecting occurrence to Mr. Whitefield, relating it, however, with but the ordinary feeling and brevity of a passing conversation. Afterwards, on hearing Mr. Whitefield preach, up came his own story, narrated by the preacher in the pulpit, with such nature, pathos, and power, that the clergyman who had himself furnished Whitefield with the dry bones of the illustration, found himself weeping like a child. The tones of the soul possess an intensity and penetrating depth of feeling to subdue the soul; and Whitefield, amidst all the thunders of voice that could be heard at an incredible distance, spoke with the tones of the soul; and his gestures were impelled by the same spontaneous magic influence, that made them, as well as his words, seem part of the soul. According to the common saying, so common that we forget the depth of meaning it covers up, he threw his soul into them.

And yet it is said that Whitefield, when a boy, had been taught to ridicule this way of preaching in others. There was an excellent, familiar, plain minister, named Cole, whose manner would seem to have been in some way so original as to excite notice, but whose method of story-telling drew young Whitefield's contempt. One of the congregation asked the lad one day what business he intended to pursue? He said he meant to be a minister; but he would take care never to tell stories in the pulpit like old Cole!

[illegible] Whitefield had begun his career of fame, this old gentleman heard him preach, illustrating in his own powerful way the application of his subject by some interesting narrative. "I feel," said he, "that young Whitefield can now tell stories as well as old Cole."

Some of young Whitefield's stories may have been, indeed, the very same as old Cole's; but they had a new power, because they came from the young man's soul, and not from the mere "lumber-room of the memory."

From the New York Observer.

"NO REMEDY."

I once saw a man who had the hydrophobia. He had received a slight wound in the hand as he was sporting with a favorite dog. For months he carried the virus in his system, and was unconscious of the dreadful fact.

He was preparing to set out on a visit to a beloved sister. She had recently commenced keeping house, and the young man anticipated a great deal of pleasure in seeing her under her own roof. The carriage which was to convey him, was at the door.

He sat down to the breakfast table. His mother handed him a cup of coffee. He shuddered as he took it. With some difficulty he brought it to his lips. The attempt to swallow a small portion of its contents, occasioned spasms which nearly suffocated him. He rose from the table, convinced that he had within him the elements of a disease for which there was no remedy.

The disease soon developed itself. At his own earnest request, he was confined in a manner which rendered it impossible for him to injure others. I saw him in one of his most dreadful paroxysms. Oh, it was fearful to see a fellow-creature in that condition, and to feel that there was no remedy!

But there is a still more dreadful evil for which there is no remedy. In 2 Chron. 36: 16, we read, "But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy." There is no remedy for the wrath of a long-suffering God. Terrible as may be the paroxysm of agony which may seize the soul in the hour of dissolution, there is no remedy. Unspeakable as will be the misery of the soul as eternity rolls on diversified only by accumulating wo, still there will be no remedy.

What torturing anxiety would seize the reader, were there the slightest probability that he has within him the seeds of that bodily disease for which there is no remedy. Is it not certain that he has within him the seeds of a moral disease, which is adapted to cause the wrath of God to rise till there is no remedy?

There is now a remedy within your reach. Apply it while it is in your power. Do not let your friends, as they gaze upon your despairing death-struggles, feel that there is no remedy. Do not enter eternity to behold, in characters of fire on the walls of your eternal prison, "The wrath of the Lord arose, till there was no remedy."

CONSULT YOUR PASTOR.

You have connected yourself with the church of God, and have thus come under obligation to "obey them that are over you in the Lord." Heb. 13 : 17. 1 Thess. 5 : 13. The kind of obedience, which the Apostle enjoins, is not a blind submission of the conscience to the will of the pastor, who may be but a wolf in sheep's clothing, whose counsels it would be death to follow; but it certainly includes a respectful deference to his instructions. He is placed over you, to admonish you when you do wrong, to give you counsel in reference to your movements in life, to instruct you in Christian doctrine, and to labor earnestly for your perfection in Christ Jesus. You are, at least, bound to see whether his rule is exercised in accordance with the instructions of the chief Shepherd; and, if it is, your disobedience is disobedience to Christ himself. But the relation which you sustain to him, binds you to do something more than merely to comply with such instructions as may, from time to time, be developed in his pulpit ministrations. It binds you to seek his advice. You will often be placed in circumstances, to which it might not be proper for your pastor to make any public allusion, having a very important bearing, nevertheless, upon your spiritual welfare. The decision to which you come—the course which you resolve to pursue under these circumstances—may give you a new impulse towards heaven, or exert a blasting influence upon your piety and usefulness. Yet it is of very frequent occurrence, that a Christian makes up his mind, and consummates all his arrangements, without so much as soliciting an opinion from him whom he pretends to acknowledge as his spiritual adviser.

A brother, for example, is about entering upon some important business enterprise; whether it be an expedition to California in quest of the shining metal, or a voyage to India for spices and drugs, or the undertaking of some kind of business at home, it matters not. Having settled it, in his mind, that it will be a lucrative enterprise, he matures his plans for prosecuting it. But his pastor is never consulted, and perhaps the first word that he hears of it is that all the arrangements are consummated. But why consult his pastor? It is true, his pastor is not a business man, and would not be able to tell him whether his calculations of pecuniary advantage were likely to be realized. Perhaps he is hardly able to manage his own fiscal concerns. But if he possesses that wisdom which fits a pastor for his office, he would be able to tell him whether the business would promote, or hinder, the salvation of the soul. He would be able to look into the moral bearings of the enterprise; and, perhaps, the better able, from the fact that he would have no personal, pecuniary interest in the result. Why not consult him, then? Is growth in grace to be nothing thought of, when it comes into conflict with dollars and cents? Surely, he who has an eye single to the glory of God, would rather live upon the borders of starvation, than engage in business which would bring leanness upon his soul. Such a one, we believe, would, before engaging in any important undertaking, lay the matter before his pastor, and ask him whether, in his opinion, it would exert an injurious influence upon his piety. Does he meditate entering into partnership with some one or more individuals for manufacturing, trading, or commercial purposes? A keen-sighted, business man—a modern speculator—would urge forward the undertaking, as promising a speedy attainment of that condition in which he could say, "Soul, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." But the pastor would say, "Beware! you are forming a connection, which, though promising abundance of wealth, will be hazardous in a spiritual point of view." Perhaps the proposed partners are ungodly men; perhaps your connection with them would bring you into such close contact with their principles, as would be like taking fire into your bosom; perhaps they are habitual Sabbath-breakers, and it may be one of the conditions of the enterprise, that it shall be prosecuted on the Sabbath, and the house formed will be a great Sabbath-breaking establishment. Does it not matter, whether such an enterprise is prosecuted, or not? Has your pastor no business to be concerned about it? Is his advice, as one who has received mercy of the Lord to be faithful, not worthy to be taken?

Another brother has it in his mind to undertake a journey to some distant land, for the purpose of improving his fortune. He must be absent from his family for several long months, or years—from the family, whose spiritual and moral welfare he is as much bound to look after, as he is to provide for them a temporal support; he must suffer the loss of Christian society, and of church privileges; he must live, it may be, among heathen, or among semi-barbarians, where the moral influences are all of a polluting and degrading tendency; and all for the sake of making money. No higher or holier object does he propose to himself. The first thing his pastor knows, he is gone; or, if not actually gone, his arrangements are so far perfected, that he cannot alter them without damage. Had his pastor been consulted, he would have set before him, plainly and faithfully, the inexpediency of the undertaking. He would have said to him, "Your undertaking will put your own soul in jeopardy, and deprive your family of that counsel and religious training, which, as a Christian, you are bound to give them." But the pastor was not consulted; he was not capable of telling what would be the pecuniary advantage of the scheme, and nothing else was thought of, or, if thought of, was made so much of a secondary matter, that the conscience failed to be deeply exercised about it.

A third projects the removal of himself and family to some other territory. Charmed by the prospect of raising fifty bushels of good wheat to the acre, or running off lumber at an immense profit, or of establishing a mercantile house whose gains shall be on a magnificent scale, he accomplishes his project as quickly as possible. He stops not to consider how it will affect his spiritual condition, and that of his family; he inquires not whether he will be favored with church privileges, the labors of a faithful minister, and sound religious instruction for himself and his children; he knows not whether the state of society will be favorable to the cultivation of piety, or against it; he asks not whether it will be a society of Christians, or of infidels—whether his children will be brought under a good moral influence, or subjected to an influence ten-fold more contaminating than they are where he now dwells; the one great thing that fills his eye is the prospect of gain. Perhaps an interview with his pastor would serve to open the moral and spiritual bearings of the project, so that he would himself view it in a very different light, and, at length, come to the conclusion that it would be better to remain where he is. And is it not his duty to consult him?

A fourth brother, or sister, contemplates marriage. What relation in life is so important? What other relation involves such tremendous consequences, for weal or wo, as that which unites two souls together for life? But who ever thinks of consulting his pastor in reference to such a connection? A young brother, who gave abundant promise of usefulness in the cause of Christ, whose attendance upon the ordinances was constant, whose prayers were fervent, whose exhortations were spiritual, and whose whole deportment was heavenly, has been smitten with one of the "daughters of men," who, to say the least, will be no help to his piety. They are united at the altar, and soon the fearful tale is told. His wife has "turned away his heart." A young sister, who committed herself to the watch-care of the church, and to the instructions and counsels of her pastor, has suffered her heart to be filled with admiration of some man of the world, who, notwithstanding all his affection for her, cannot relish those pleasures which spring from things unseen. In either case, the connection is formed in violation of God's word, and might well be expected, therefore, to prove disastrous. Why was not the pastor consulted? Why was not the advice of "those who are spiritual" sought? Why was not counsel asked of the Lord?

Now it appears to us, that unless a church can consider the man whom they employ as their spiritual instructor, competent to advise them in these, and in a variety of similar cases, they have no business to employ him as such. If he is not fit for such work, he is not fit for his office. Yet church members are continually projecting schemes, forming partnerships, and meditating great and important enterprises, apparently without so much as suspecting that these things may tell with tremendous power upon their spiritual condition, or that their pastor is at all concerned with them. But if they did not suppose, when they connected themselves with the church, that these things fell properly under the supervision of their spiritual guide, so far as respects their religious bearing, they committed a sad mistake. "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy and not with grief."

MILLENARIANISM AMONG THE PRESBYTERIANS.—At a recent meeting of the Old School Presbyterian Synod of New Jersey, Rev. Mr. Imbrie preached a missionary sermon of rather peculiar character, from which a large majority of his fellow presbyters would doubtless dissent. His points were :—

1st. That the preëminence of the Jew above the Gentile is perpetual, and that our missions cannot reach their full success until the Jews shall be considered "first" in all our evangelical enterprises.

2d. That the prophecies of Israel's restoration and supremacy will be literally fulfilled.

3d. That Christ shall personally come to the earth, raise the dead saints, and reign here a thousand years.

A correspondent of the "Presbyterian," after giving a sketch of the sermon, says :—

> "Instances do often occur, in which views repugnant to the settled opinions of the church, are conveyed with such a modesty, humility, and impassioned eloquence, as to enable its ministers to listen not only patiently, but agreeably, for seventy-five minutes, to their implied defence. This, however, was certainly the case with the great portion of Mr. Imbrie's hearers, and is to be accounted for, besides the unusual charms of the style, by the fact that his tone, instead of being dogmatic or intrusive, was rather a pathetic supplication to the church to take up the subject, and settle, by a candid scrutiny of the Bible, those doubts of the correctness of the prevailing construction, which have gained so much ground in the staid church of Scotland, as well as others."

A NEW UNIVERSITY.—We learn from the Rochester American, that the Committee of nine appointed by the Baptist Educational Convention which met in Albany in October last, to take measures for founding a University in the city of Rochester, have just concluded the labors of their first session. It is understood, that the committee have marked out two plans—one for the University, and one for a Baptist Education Society which is to establish and maintain a course of Theological Instruction entirely distinct in its organization and government from the Literary Institution. Measures were also taken for the immediate raising and collection of a subscription to the amount of $150,000, and for the transfer of the charter of Madison University to Rochester, or, if the injunction is not withdrawn, for obtaining a new one with the title of "Rochester University" from the Regents of the State of New York.

MUNIFICENT DONATIONS.—John Broomfield, Esq., one of the most wealthy, prominent and influential citizens of Boston, died in that city recently, from a paralytic attack. His age was 70. The Transcript states that in his will Mr. Broomfield made the following munificent donations to different Public Institutions :—To the Free Beds of the McLean Asylum $20,000; to the Boston Female Dispensary, $10,000; to the Eye and Ear Infirmary, $10,000; to the Farm School, $10,000; to the Asylum for the Blind, $10,000; to the town of Newburyport, for charitable purposes, $10,000; making, in addition to his gift to the Boston Athenæum, the sum of $138,000. In addition to these amounts, Mr. Broomfield left upwards of $100,000 to relatives and friends.

SECRET SOCIETIES—No. 4.

Before speaking of the practical influence of Secret Societies, I will take some farther notice of the articles of your correspondent "One of the Initiated." And, as it will be as much in place here as any where, I will now say all I wish to on what he has written. Of his first article I observe, that it seemed to be a little out of the way, in being so shaped as to carry the intimation, or impression, very strongly, that the Conference had arrayed itself against a Society or Societies of a confessedly excellent character and design. All which, being assumed without even an attempt to present adequate proof thereof, your correspondent went on to the use of expressions in regard to the Conference not the most respectful or definite. I therefore introduced my question for the purpose of leading the writer to explain himself more fully, so that I might understand him. Not that I sought, in that way, to obtain information on the subject of Secret Societies, as he seemed to suppose near the close of his second article; though I am thankful, or wish to be always, for information on any subject of importance. However, I am glad to say, that your correspondent's second article, as a whole, was quite satisfactory. I found by it, that he understood the words "Secret Societies" to embrace the Order of the Sons of Temperance. I so understood them. And I suppose the Conference so understood them when it passed the resolution in question. I am glad to find that we are so well agreed on this point, especially as some have denied that the Sons of Temperance are a Secret Society. This must suffice in respect to this part of my subject.

Our second proposition, which must now be taken up, is, that the practical influence of Secret Societies is also adverse to Christianity. If this be true, how sad a thing it is, that so many professors are led to join them. In attempting to prove this proposition, I shall not attempt to make out that Secret Societies are, in all respects, practically opposed to Christianity, especially those which have been organized of late years. I am ready to admit, that in all probability some of them were organized with good intentions, and that, to a considerable extent, they may have done good. I have more favorable opinions in regard to those Secret Societies having the promotion of the cause of Temperance for their object professedly, than for the Order of Odd Fellows; for there is, in the very name of this Society, something low and offensive, inclining one to feel as if the Order must have originated in a corner where clownishness or rowdyism prevailed; yet I am not disposed to think that any of these Societies are altogether evil, for even thieves, in order to maintain society, must have some regard to virtue and right, at least among themselves. And even allowing that they are likely to be turned to evil uses, there has not yet been time enough for these later organizations to become sufficiently corrupted, or to afford occasion for their employment for such purposes, in a concerted and systematic way. But in the process of time, and in the course of human affairs, there cannot, I think, fail to arise contingencies or exigencies which will bring out the evil susceptibilites of these organizations, in their full strength—their most comprehensive bearings, and extensive applications. And it appears to me to be a serious error, with most persons who undertake to defend these institutions, that in judging of their merits, they only contemplate the subject in view of these recent organizations, connected with their present operations and developments; whereas, they ought to take into account the history of Secret Societies as a whole, as far as they are known, and draw their conclusions therefrom. To this it may be replied, that it is wrong to confound the Secret Orders of the present day with those of former times, that they are not at all the same. To a certain extent this caution is very proper. But though all these organizations may not be identical, still the element of secrecy is the same every where; and though variously compounded with other elements, in somewhat diverse incorporations, it must be subject to the same objections, in itself considered, for its tendencies must ever be the same.

The following brief history of Secret Societies I collect from the second letter of the Rev. Wm. Easton, of Smyrna, Pa., to the Rev. W. R. DeWitt, D. D., of Harrisburg, contained in a discussion carried on between those gentlemen, and published at Philadelphia by T. R. Simpson, in 1847. Mr. Easton says :—

> "These Secret moral and religious Societies, as they were called, were common amongst the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. No uninitiated person was permitted to witness the mysteries of the Society. The first and fundamental law in them all was secrecy—a profound secrecy—enjoined often under the most dreadful penalties. They seem to have been first invented in Egypt, and from thence spread into Europe and Asia. The most noted of these, as you will probably remember, were the Eleusinian. The mysteries of Ceres and Proserpine, celebrated at Eleusis, the principal city of Attica, were held by the heathen devotees in great veneration. The 'private transactions' of the association were so strictly guarded, that, if any one ever revealed them, death was the penalty. * * * Those Elensinian mysteries were carried from Eleusis to Rome in the reign of the Emperor Adrian, where they were observed with the same ceremonies, and with even greater licentiousness than in Greece. They lasted about 1800 years, and were at last abolished by Theodosius the Great. The Secret Societies which celebrated the mysteries of Isis, so popular in ancient Italy, and especially in Rome, were also frequently prohibited on account of the wickedness and abuse occasioned by them. And remember, it was the mysterious secrecy under which their proceedings were shrouded, that was one chief cause of the abominations practiced among them; for, like other 'Secret Orders' since, they made at first high pretensions to purity and morality. The 'Secret Order,' again, of the ancient Cabiri and Dionysia, become such sinks of iniquity, that the governments of Greece and Rome were forced to prohibit and destroy them as prejudicial to the public peace and morals. When we come down to the Secret Societies of modern days, what do we find but a history of intrigue, superstition, blasphemy, and wickedness;—not one Secret Society that ever proved a blessing to mankind. The Jacobin clubs of France corrupted the public morals, and deluged the country with blood; the Vehmic Court, or Secret Tribunal of Westphalia, was a curse to Germany, and one of the most execrable perversions of judicial institutions which ever existed. They condemned, in secret session, the innocent without a hearing; and, issuing their terrible Acht or Bow, delivered over the victim to the Freischaffe, who, meeting him, stabbed him on the spot, and left his knife by the corpse to show that it was punishment inflicted by the Vehme. The Carbonari, a secret political society in Italy, could boast of vast numbers, and a rapid increase far superior to that of the 'Order of Sons.' In the month of March alone, in 1820, we are told that 650,000 new members were admitted. Whole cities and villages joined it, and in 1814, the small town of Lancian contained twelve hundred armed members of the Order. Their war-cry, 'Revenge for the land crushed by the wolf,' pointed out the political design of this secret association; and yet its only effect was evil. After the suppression of the revolution, in 1821, the Carbonari throughout all Italy were denounced as traitors, and punished as such by the laws. Again, we have all read of the excitement caused by the Secret Societies formed by the officers of the revolutionary army, termed the Order of the 'Cincinnati.' Their whole design, as they avowed, was to keep in remembrance the trying scenes through which they had passed, and to strengthen the bands of friendship between each other. The members of this Society had always been 'good citizens,' had suffered and bled in defense of the liberties of the country; and yet, a secret association composed of such men created such jealousy, and called forth so much opposition from all classes, that it soon sunk into neglect and died away. The Secret Order of St. Tammany was a dark political conclave, and the Sons of that Order, with their calmuts, beads, and buck-tails, had other and more mischievous designs than to compliment the Indian tribes. The Washington Benevolent Society was another secret association, making great pretensions to benevolence, and using the name of Washington to countenance their selfish and ambitious schemes. They soon, however, found that their efforts would be useless in seeking the honors and emoluments of office, because Free Masonry had the precedency in power and place; and this Secret Order also soon dwindled away. The history of Free Masonry is familiar yet to all, and emphatically sustains my position. But as I have been forbidden by the editor to discuss the merits of Free Masonry and Odd-Fellowship, I shall only occasionally and briefly refer to them. From the history of ancient as well as modern Secret Societies, then, we are admonished to beware of them; to learn from the evils that have invariably flown from them, to shun and oppose them. In proportion as the light of the Gospel spread over the world, these ancient Secret Societies and their mysteries were despised and forsaken; and finally, with all other pagan systems of iniquity, were suppressed."

I have thus presented most of what Mr. Easton has furnished upon this point, in his letter above referred to. As I think the facts thus embodied are sufficient to prove that the practical influence of Secret Societies is, and ever must be, adverse to Christianity, as it falls even below the common level of human virtue, I might safely enough close where I am. The danger of being tedious might also furnish reason for not adding any thing farther. But, as I have some other reasons which strongly impress upon me the conviction that the proposition I am attempting to support is true, I may yet present them.

A MEMBER OF THE CONFERENCE.

THE BIBLE AMONG NORWEGIANS.—There are now in the United States about 30,000 Norwegians, most of whom have settled in Wisconsin and Northern Illinois. Some two or three years since the attention of the Managers of the American Bible Society was called to the importance of publishing an edition of Norwegian Scriptures at the Bible-house. Prior to this, Bibles and Testaments in this language had been imported from Europe; but their cost was so great as to prevent their general circulation. It was, therefore, resolved to publish an edition of the Norwegian Bible with the English version in parallel columns; thus, in addition to the primary object, facilitating the progress of such as wished to become acquainted with the language of their adopted country. Both the whole Bible and the New Testament by itself were some time since issued from the press, the former being afforded at about one-third the cost of the European edition.

A PREACHER IN CALIFORNIA.—The Alta California of November 1st contains a letter from Rev. Mr. Wheeler, acknowledging the reception of a gold watch and key, presented him by Col. J. D. Stevenson in behalf of the regiment lately under his command. The key has on it the following inscription: "Presented to Rev. O. C. Wheeler, by the First Regiment of New York Volunteers, as a token of esteem. 1849." The New York Recorder says that the labors of Mr. Wheeler in California are highly appreciated, and that he is doing good service in the cause of truth. It is understood that the church under his care have assumed the responsibility of his support. His salary is $10,000 per annum, which the church pay monthly.

MISSIONARY PROSPECTS IN CHINA.—At the recently Monthly Concert in Boston, an agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions made statements from which it appears that the missionaries in Fuh-chau have been prospered in their labors. They make a strong appeal for help. A letter from Shanghai speaks in similar terms of the importance of having more help. The Committee for preparing the new translation of the Bible were proceeding at the rate of thirty verses a day, and expected to be able to finish the translation by the autum of 1850.

THE MENDI MISSION.—The American Missionary publishes interesting letters from Mr. Thompson, of the Mendi Mission. The fact that almost a year had elapsed between the date of his previous letters and these, had given occasion for fears that all was lost—that in the madness of war, some of the chiefs had precipitated themselves on the Mission and destroyed it. But from these letters it appears that the Mission has been greatly blessed, and that in connection with it more than thirty persons have been hopefully converted. Mr. Thompson makes a very earnest appeal for help in that field.

PROSELYTING THE JEWS.—In consequence of a representation made by the Minister of Finance, the Emperor of Russia has issued a decree that such Jewish citizens and agriculturists as have been converted to Christianity, and have settled in his Majesty's dominions, shall be exempted from the payment of those debts which they incurred by their settlement, and from paying all the balances of debts previously incurred.

SUNDAY LABOR IN THE BRITISH POST OFFICE.—The agitation which was got up with a view to prevent the increase of mail service in Great Britain on Sunday, proves to have been in vain, except that it occasioned a little delay in carrying the measure into effect. The original instructions to country postmasters are now in force. Letters arrive in London and are sorted and forwarded on Sundays as on other days.

A PRINTER FOR SOUTH AFRICA.—Rev. Mr. Grant, a missionary of the American Board, in South Africa, makes an urgent appeal for a missionary printer, and expresses the apprehension that one of the missionaries might be under the necessity of turning printer. They had but four tracts and books. Others were prepared, which might be published if they had a printer.

NEGRO CHRISTIANS IN GEORGIA.—A bill has been introduced into the Legislature of Georgia, to prevent the assembling of negroes for religious worship unless conducted by white persons, and to prevent the licensing negroes as preachers in Putnam Co. It will probably be applied to the whole State.

DISCIPLINE OF THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—The Aberdeen Journal says that on Sunday week two repentant sinners, a man and a woman, stood in sackcloth, on the cutty stool, in the Free Church, Lybster.

"THE PULPIT REPORTER," is the title of a semi-monthly sheet, of sixteen royal octavo pages, published by Holbrook, Buckingham & Co., at No. 128 Fulton street, N. Y. Its design, as indicated by its name, is to furnish reports of sermons preached by representatives of the different denominations, and to give the reader a transcript of the current style and tone of the sacred desk at the present day. Each number will contain four sermons, so that a volume of the work will consist of about 400 pages and 100 sermons. The plan is a good one, and the two numbers before us give reason to expect that it will be well and faithfully executed. Terms, $2,00 per annum.

UNITARIANS IN THE UNITED STATES.—The Unitarian Congregational Manual for 1850, estimates the number of Unitarian churches in the United States at 245. Of these 165 are in Massachusetts, leaving 80 for all the other States. Of the 80, 28 are in Maine and New Hampshire, leaving 52 churches for the other 27 States of the Union.

EVANGELIZATION OF LONDON.—The Congregationalist proposes to erect fifty new chapels in London, as a part of the work devolving on them for its evangelization. Three methods are contemplated to secure the object; wealthy individuals may erect a chapel each; congregations may do the same; and general collections may be taken.

IMPORTANT FROM MADAGASCAR.—The death of the Queen, known only as a heartless persecutor, is announced! Her course of hostility to Christian missionaries, and of murderous cruelty to her Christian subjects, is at an end. Her son, who succeeds to the throne, is a Christian.

SECRET SOCIETIES.—At a recent meeting of the Presbyterian Synod of Pittsburg, the character and tendency of Secret Societies were discussed, and the following resolution was adopted :—

> "That, while Synod are not prepared to affirm that a connection with Secret Societies is necessarily incompatible with membership in the church; yet, in their judgment, these societies have generally an evil tendency, and are not adapted to promote the best interests of any moral reformation; and would, therefore, earnestly recommend to our people to refrain from all connection with such secret associations."

HEBREW LITERATURE.—The Hebrew benevolent societies had a festival recently in the city of New York. Major Noah read a letter from Daniel Webster, in which that distinguished statesman remarked that he felt, and had ever felt, "respect and sympathy for all that remain of that extraordinary people, who preserved through the darkness and idolatry of so many centuries, the knowledge of one supreme spiritual Being, the maker of heaven and earth, and the Creator of man in his own image; and whose canonical writings comprise such productions as the books of Moses and the Decalogue, the prophecies of Isaiah, the Psalms of David, the book of Job, and Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple," and that he regarded the Hebrew Scriptures "as the fountain from which we draw all we know of the world around us, and of our own character and destiny, as intelligent, moral and responsible beings."

"INCENDIARY PUBLICATIONS" IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—In the Legislature of South Carolina, Mr. Moses (not a very good representative, we should think, of his meek namesake) has submitted the following "Bill to protect the people of the State from Incendiary Publication through the U. S. Mail." It was read, and referred to the Committee on Federal Relations :—

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives now met and sitting in General Assembly, and by authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this Act, if any Postmaster within the State of South Carolina, shall knowingly deliver to any person or persons any written or printed paper, picture, drawing, or engraving, calculated to disturb the peace and harmony of the people of this State, in relation to the Slave population thereof, such Postmaster shall, on conviction by indictment, be imprisoned for a term not exceeding twelve months, and pay a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars.

The Columbia Telegraph publishes this bill with the following endorsement :—

> "It is not a whit too strong for the purpose intended, and we hope that it may be adopted. If it does bring on any collision with the Federal Government, the fault will not be ours, for forbearance with us has long since ceased to be a virtue."

DEATH OF A MISSIONARY.—Mrs. Freeman, wife of Rev. John E. Freeman, died at Allahabad, Northern India, Aug. 8, aged 34. She was a native of Newark, N. J., daughter of Isaac M. Beach, deceased. She went to India in 1838.

> "Ten years' residence in the debilitating climate of India had begun to weaken her strength in the way, and for the last few months she had been quite feeble. Still no one supposed that the sorrowful hour was so near at hand. On the morning of the very day she died, she rode several miles, came back cheerful and happy, and retired to rest only a little before the usual time. But her days were ended; she was taken suddenly, and left the world so calmly and quietly, that those sitting by could scarcely believe she was gone.
>
> "Her death occurred on the evening of the weekly missionary meeting, and all were present to watch this beloved sister's departure. It was a touching scene; a little group of Christian missionaries assembled in a heathen land, to close the eyes of one with whom they had often taken sweet counsel, and gone to the house of God in company! No wonder if the place became a Bochim.
>
> "On Friday the corpse was conveyed to the church, when Mr. Owen preached from the text: 'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord.' After this she was carried to the grave by Christian natives, some of whom she herself had instructed in the Boy's Orphan School. 'For a moment,' says the afflicted husband, 'I almost forgot my sorrows at such a sight, and felt that it was worth dying in India to enjoy. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.'"

Letters from Mr. and Mrs. Judson, the devoted Baptist missionaries, say that both are in excellent spirits and in good health. Mrs. J. has entirely recovered, and now has the prospect of a useful life to come amid scenes of labor and great interest.

General Intelligence.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

The second week of the first session of the 31st Congress closed without the organization of the House. Slavery makes the trouble. There are three parties—the Whigs and the Democrats, of whom neither has a clear majority, and the Free Soilers, who hold the balance of power. Southern members, of either party, will not vote for a Speaker of whose soundness on the subject of slavery they have any doubt. Northern members will not give up their party preferences for the sake of electing a Speaker who is known to opposed to Slavery. Hence the attempts to elect a Speaker have thus far proved fruitless. Mr. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, was the candidate of the Whigs for the first eight days; and Mr. Cobb, of Alabama, was the favorite candidate of the Democrats. At length both these individuals declined longer to stand as candidates, leaving their parties to take up new ones. The Democrats took Wm. J. Brown, of Indiana, and on Wednesday last, at one ballot, he received 112 votes, lacking only two of an election. Just at that juncture a discussion arose relative to slavery, in the course of which it came to light, that Mr. Brown, while he was represented as favoring southern views, had at the same time pledged himself to the Free Soilers, that if elected he would organize the three important committees, on the District of Columbia, on the Territories, and on the Judiciary, so as to satisfy them; and, farther, that he was opposed to the extension of slavery, and in favor of its prohibition by Congress from any territory within its jurisdiction. Of course this discovery created a commotion among the southern members, who declared that they had been deceived, and could no longer support Mr. Brown.

Numerous plans were subsequently proposed to secure the organization of the House. One was to take the appointment of the important committees above named from the Speaker, and give it to the House, so that his views of slavery would not be a matter of so much importance, and the election would not be influenced so much by sectional feeling. Another, and the most feasible one, was to elect by ballot, instead of viva voce. But none of these plans were accepted, and the week closed without any progress having been made towards the organization of the House.

The following account of a scene in the House on Thursday, will give our readers an idea how things are being done by the public servants at Washington:—

Mr. Duer said that they had voted eight or nine days. No party was in the majority, and it was certain that no Speaker could be elected only by an arrangement between the two parties. The proposition with this view failed yesterday; it failed to-day; members were forced, therefore, to abandon the attempt to organize, or resort to the only mode by which the Speaker could be elected. The gentleman from Mississippi, (Mr. Brown,) called on the Whigs to make an unconditional surrender. As for himself, he would vote for any body but a disunionist to occupy that chair. [A voice: "There is no such person in the House."] He thought so. [A member: "Where is he?"]

Mr. Duer pointed toward Mr. Meade, who was standing in a crowd of gentlemen in the main aisle.

Mr. Meade was understood to say: "If you charge me with being a disunionist, the assertion is false."

Mr. Duer instantly retorted: "You are a liar."

Immediately Mr. Meade made an attempt to reach Mr. Duer, but he was restrained by the interposition of gentlemen. The parties were not more than four feet apart, when members rushed between them. There were cries of "a fight," "a fight," when the Sergeant-at-Arms hurried down, with his mace of office in hand, and cries of "order," "order," were raised. The members mounted the side-screen, when Mr. Meade beckoned to Mr. Duer to follow him to the rotunda. A boy crying out in the gallery, for a moment excited a fear that the sound proceeded from one of the two members, but there was no personal collision. The spectators on the floor and above looked on with intense anxiety, and there was not a member in his seat, all was confusion. Motions were made to adjourn, but in a few minutes comparative quiet was produced. * * * *

Mr. Toombs considered the reason why the House had not been organized was, that it was ruled by sectional feelings. The gentleman from New York, (Mr. Duer,) had told the House that he would vote for a man from any section of the country; he would vote for a Whig, for a Democrat, for a Free Soiler; but never for a disunionist. Now, sir, said Mr. T., I am not afraid to declare, in the presence of this House, in the presence of the country, and in the presence of my God, that if the views and sentiments entertained by that gentleman, in relation to slavery, be carried into effect by the House, then that disunion is at hand. [Applause.] They who attempt these aggressions on the South were bringing that very disunion upon us, and the curses of Heaven would fall, with all their force, upon those who were the causes of it. In the solemn and sacred presence of my God I declare, that if these views are carried out and persisted in, then the Union is dissolved. [Applause.] And as long as I have the physical strength, I will have the moral courage, to stand here and prevent further aggressions upon the rights of the South. [Applause.]

Mr. Duer rose to explain, but

Mr. Toombs continued. He said that Southerners had been charged with every crime in the catalogue, and taunted about the sin of domestic slavery. He had been willing to sustain the Union on sound principles. But to tell him that he should not carry slaves into the territories, he would ask the men of the South what they wanted with organization? [Applause from southern members.] Thirty-five millions have been drawn to be expended there, and not one dollar goes into the coffers of the South. Without hesitation, Mr. Tooms remarked, that he was in favor of disunion if this state of things continued. Let the South alone; give them their portion of the territory; let the District of Columbia alone. Only then will there be peace in the country. And until that was done, he trusted that discord would reign—if forever. * * * * *

Mr. Baker explained his views upon the question. He denied that the people of the North, by holding and advocating the principles of the Wilmot Proviso, could be justly charged with being opposed to the Union, or, that they were advancing doctrines which would lead to disunion. The threats of the gentlemen are idle. The people of the North won't be frightened by them. The majority of the people of this country are in favor of free territories, and are opposed to the extension of slavery; and the Constitution of the country guaranties to the majority of the people the right to govern.

Mr. Hilliard protested against such doctrine, and denied the correctness of any such interpretation of the Constitution.

Mr. Baker repeated that the majority of the people of this Union, through their Representatives, had the power, under the Constitution, to make all laws for the government of the territories, which were the property of the whole Union. As regards the threats of disunion, if the principles entertained by the majority of the people were carried out by their Representatives in Congress, they amounted to nothing.

Mr. Wallace.—We'll teach you.

Mr. Baker.—How are you to teach us?

Mr. Wallace.—Let slavery be abolished in this District, or the South excluded from the territories, and we will show you that we mean what we say.

Mr. Baker still did not believe the Union would be dissolved. Nor did the invocation of the name of God to the declaration induce him for a moment to believe that the Union could be dissolved for such a cause. Despite the solemn appeal to the name of God made by the gentlemen from Georgia, he did not believe there was a man in the House who thought in his heart, or his head, that the hand would ever be raised with power sufficient to destroy this Union.

Mr. Stephens of Ga., was sorry to say that he and the people of the section of country which he represented, now considered the day when that compact was to be rended was near at hand. The aggressions which had been made upon the South had met with forbearance, and still they were now told that aggressions was to go still farther. He would tell gentlemen, be not deceived. We will submit to aggression upon our rights no longer. He had heard the remarks of his colleague, (Mr. Toombs,) and every sentiment uttered by him met with his hearty concurrence. Do gentlemen, by uttering pæans to the Union, think it can be preserved? If so, they are mistaken. If the day of the dissolution of this Union is at hand, it is as well now as hereafter.

Mr. Colcock had listened to the gentleman from Illinois, (Mr. Baker.) That gentleman had said that the North would not believe the South would dissolve the Union. He felt a blush of shame that any one should believe that the South deserved such a reproach. He wished to say, in a few words—let this Congress pass a bill to abolish Slavery in the District of Columbia, or pass the Wilmot Proviso, and he pledged himself to introduce a resolution in these words: Resolved, That the Union be dissolved. Thus the South would show to the North that we are in earnest. South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi are ready to vote for it. [A voice: "And Virginia."]

Mr. Hilliard would tell gentlemen, calmly and deliberately, that there never was such a feeling on this subject at the South as exists now. I tell gentlemen, that if they pass the Wilmot Proviso, the best friends of this Union must part. It was no part of his purpose to calculate the value of the Union; that could not be conceived. But once let it be dissolved, and when and how can it be bound together again? He would say to gentlemen from the North and South, that if the Wilmot Proviso be passed by both Houses of Congress, then this Union must be dissolved. —

[The Senate, on the 15th, passed a resolution informing the President that they were prepared to receive any executive business he might have to communicate. The House entered upon the present week with a better prospect of speedy organization.]

The Boston Murder.—The Coroner's Jury, called to investigate the cause of the death of the body found in the Medical College at Boston, on the 30th day of November, have made their verdict public. They agree that the parts of a body found at the Medical College are the the remains of Dr. Geo. Parkman; "that he was killed in said College building by a blow or blows, wound or wounds, inflicted upon him with some instrument or weapon to the Jurors unknown, and by means not yet known to said Jurors; and that said blow or blows, wound or wounds, were inflicted upon him, and said means were used, by the hands of Doctor John W. Webster, by whom he was killed."

The great Gold Robbery.—Our readers have already been informed, that several boxes of gold, sent from San Francisco to this city, by the steamer Oregon on the Pacific side, and the Empire City on this side, were robbed on the way of about $10,000, and that $3,000 was offered for the apprehension and conviction of the thieves, and $1,000 for the recovery of the gold. Officer A. M. G. Smith, of this city, at once set about discovering the thieves, and last week arrested Chas. R. Churchill, clerk, and John McDonald, third mate, of the Oregon, both of whom came on to New York by the vessel which brought the boxes. The gold dust, or its value in cash, has been recovered, and the parties locked up. Churchill, whose father keeps the Buena Vista House in New York, is supposed to have been the robber, and is required to find bail in $20,000. McDonald is supposed to be an accomplice, and his bail is fixed at $3,000.

EXPERIENCE IN THE GOLD REGION.

An intelligent young friend who has just returned from California, gives his experience in brief but emphatic language. After a wearisome voyage round the Cape, he reached San Francisco, and left immediately for the "diggings." There he was sick nearly three months. His tent was in the midst of dry sand-heaps, with the thermometer at an average of 112 deg. during the day. Many of the amateur gold-diggers were exhausted with the hard labor, and suffering from blistered hands; others were going about with their arms in slings from the same cause. Finding his recovery doubtful, if he remained at the mines, after paying his nurse $500, and his physician $700 more, he was able to reach San Francisco and embark for home.

Just before he left that place, two young men whose parents are opulent in New York, and whom he had often seen in fashionable costume on Broadway, accosted him. Their rough exterior had so disguised them, that they were not recognized. One of them was driving an ox-team at $200 per month, and the other, at similar wages, was carrying brick on a board strapped around his neck, as a tender to some masons. With scarcely an exception, the gold-hunters were all anxious to return. Pride prevented some, want of means many others. Some of them congratulated him that he had such a good excuse for returning. They would willingly exchange their health for his debility, if they could only reach their homes again. Disappointment and dejection were common. Scarcely one had realized even moderate expectations. [Jour. of Com.

THE HAYTIEN EMPEROR AND ARMY.

From a Letter in the Journal of Commerce.

The present Emperor, Faustin Soulouque, or, as he is officially known, "His Majesty, Faustin 1st," like some other rulers in some other places, had previously to his present election been unknown to fame save as a military chieftain. His first connection with the army was in the capacity of a servant to a distinguished General. Since that time, an early period of his life, he has been constantly in the "service," and has gone up through the various grades, until he had served for some time as General. He has ever been regarded as a man of moderate abilities and acquirements, but of undoubted bravery.

My first view of him was as he was riding through the city, as his custom is on every Sunday morning, after having reviewed the army. His color is the most thorough "coal" black; but his nose, lips, &c., are more European than one would expect from his color. From his forehead to the top of his head he is entirely bald. He rode a grey horse—very good for this country—was accompanied by a hundred or more of his Life Guards on horseback, preceded by cavalry music, and passed through the principal streets of the city, uncovering his head, and dispensing freely his bows and his smiles to the crowds as he rode rapidly past them. He was dressed in full military uniform of a very rich character; the entire front of his coat, as well as other parts of his dress, being overlaid with heavy golden trimmings. His age is a little above fifty, his form large and erect, near six feet in height, weighing about 200, and well proportioned, with the exception of some corpulency. His horsemanship is of the most perfect character. This attracts the attention of all foreigners, and their universal remark is, that in this respect he is rarely equaled. He usually rides to the "Bureau of the Port," the custom house, and through some of the streets of the city, attended by a few of his guards, twice during the week.

The following are the statistics of the army: 5 regiments of guards; 4 do. artillery; 4 do. gendarmes (country police;) 3 do. heavy horse; 33 do. infantry. These, as I learned from a reliable source, shortly after my arrival here, a few weeks since, numbered between 16,000 and 17,000 effective men, though you would be told that it numbered 25,000 or 30,000 men. In the present campaign, the order of the Emperor is to march with 22,000, and he will doubtless have the full number, as he has almost unlimited power for increasing the military. The soldiers receive a certain amount of clothing, and four Haytien dollars a month, with an allowance of $1 a week for rations; making the entire sum of their pay and provisions $8; or about 64 cents a month. You will see, of course, that they must live mainly upon bananas, plantains, and other fruits which they get for a pittance. Their navy is very small—their principal dependence evidently being in their land force.

From Hayti.—By Capt. McIntire of the schr. Enterprise, arrived at New York from Cape Haytien, the Tribune has been furnished with the following items. The Emperor of Hayti had issued an edict, to take effect on the 5th inst. that no foreign merchant should do business unless he paid a license of $1,800, Spanish, per year, in place of $900 as heretofore; or any foreign clerk unless he paid $1,000. No vessel was allowed to take cargo unless she had discharged her cargo at that port. The export duty on Coffee and Logwood was $50, Haytien money, instead of $5 as heretofore; and in the same ratio on all merchandize. He has fixed a price on all goods imported and exported. He was raising an army to march against the Spanish part of the Island. Business very dull.

By brig Jane and Eliza, Capt. Morton, 26 days from Port au Prince, we hear that the war with the Republic of St. Domingo has been revived, and that His Serene Highness Emperor Faustin, the First, was to march to the borders with the whole Haytien army on the morning of the 16th Nov., Sunday, having been detained on account of a lamentable fire which occurred on the night of Tuesday the 14th, which was barely got under by the joint assistance of the American, French and English inhabitants.

Affairs in Hayti.—The Fueille du Commerce (of Port au Prince,) of Nov. 11, contains a proclamation of the Emperor, denouncing what he calls the Insurgents of the East, as having filled the measure of Iniquity. Organized as pirates, he says, they traverse our seas, perpetrating crimes of savage barbarity. In front of Aux Cayes, they surprised two vessels, which they pillaged after massacreing their crews and passengers, among the latter of whom were women and children. These alledged outrages are the probable pretext for the new movement against the Spanish part of the island.

Another Baptist Theological Seminary proposed.—At a Convention assembled at Peoria, Ill., Nov. 7th, "to take into consideration the demand for, and the practicability of establishing a Baptist Theological Institution in that State," it was—

Resolved, That this meeting regard the establishment of a Theological Institution in this State, as necessary and practicable, and that a committee of five be appointed to correspond with brethren on the subject of such an institution, and to make such arrangements for carrying out the design as they may deem proper.

Abolition State Convention.—The Syracuse Liberty Party Paper contains a call for a "Mass Convention of the Abolitionists of the State," to be held in that city on the 15th of January. Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Wendel Phillips, Gerrit Smith, W. L. Chaplin, Samuel R. Ward, H. H. Garnet, &c., are announced as speakers. The Liberty Party Paper hopes "that ALL the Abolitionists of the State of New York, whether they be Whigs, Democrats, Free Soilers, Liberty Party, or Garrisonians," will attend.

Greek Church in New York.—A suggestion having been made in the papers that there were so many members of the Greek Church in this city as to require a provision of a place for public worship, a correspondent of the Express gives the information that a priest of that church has lately arrived here, and that he can be found on application at the Protestant Episcopal Missionary Rooms, 2 Park Place.

SUMMARY.

The death of Hon. Jeffrey Chipman, on the 18th ult., at Kalamazoo, Michigan, at the age of 60, is announced. He was a native of Rutland, Vt., but for a good many years was a resident of Canandaigua. He was the magistrate before whom Morgan was arraigned on a charge of larceny, and committed to Ontario jail, from which he was taken and carried off. This was the first act in the tragedy that ultimately produced so much excitement. In all the "Morgan trials," J. Chipman was the first witness called.

In a recent suit against Henry O'Reilly for an infringement of the Morse telegraph patent, before the U. S. District Court at Columbus, Ohio, Judge McLean decided that the Morse patent was null and void, in consequence of illegal specifications, and for other reasons. If this decision is sustained, there will be no farther hindrance to unlimited competition in telegraphing, as there is none now between the Morse and Bain systems.

An interesting statistical article in the Boston Transcript states that the amount of sales of poultry in one market in that city, for the year 1848, was six hundred and seventy-four thousand and twenty-three dollars. The amount of poultry sales for the whole city of Boston, for the same year, was over one million of dollars! The amount of sales of eggs for the whole city of Boston, for the same year, was a fraction short of a million of dollars.

The Santa Fé Indians are committing frequent depredations. A party of 36 California emigrants were recently killed by the Indians near the Copper Mine. Troops from El Paso had proceeded against the enemy. Three Mexicans were killed at El Paso on the 10th of October. Several persons had also lately been killed near Santa Fé.

There are in Montreal three colleges, a medical college, twenty convents and academies, four banks, the aggregate of whose capital is $9,870,000—besides two bank agencies, eifiht or ten bookstores, twelve or fifteen priniing-offices, sixty-four physicians, seventeen licensed apothecaries, stxty-one notaries, and one hundred and seventy-two Legal Advocates—a lawyer to every 260 of the population.

Hon James H. Duncan, of Providence, R. I., whose wife is a neice of the late Cyrus Butler, Esq., and principal legatee of his great estate, has given $10,000 to the Atheneum in that city. The Atheneum is already flourishing, having a beautiful stone building and large library—supporting a librarian, and is open daily.

Rev. Jotham Sewall, or Father Sewall, the well-known itinerant missionary of Maine, is the oldest congregational minister in that State. He completes 90 years next New Year's. His residence is Chesterville, Me., and he is now enjoying remarkable health, for one of his years.

The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

Scientific and Practical Agriculture.

HENRY STEPHENS, F. R. S. E., of Edinburgh, the celebrated author of the "BOOK OF THE FARM," and PROF. NORTON, of Yale College, New Haven, are preparing for the Press, a Book to be entitled, AGRICULTURE—SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL.

It will embrace every subject of importance connected with Agriculture in all its various branches, both Theoretical and Practical. "Science, in as far as it has, up to the present time, been made available to Practice by Experiment, will be treated in its relation to every operation as it occurs in the course of the seasons." The work will be arranged under four distinct heads, representing the seasons, beginning with Winter and ending with Autumn. The following are among the subjects to be treated of in the first and second seasons, including the Introductory, viz:

INITIATION.—On the best of the existing Methods for acquiring a thorough knowledge of Practical Husbandry; the Difficulties to be encountered in learning practical husbandry, and on the Means of overcoming them; the different kinds of farming; the persons required to conduct and execute the labor of the farm; the branches of science most applicable to Agriculture; the Institutions of Education best suited to Agricultural science; the evils attending the neglect of landowners and others to learn Practical Agriculture; on observing the details and recording the facts of farming by the Agricultural student.

PRACTICE—WINTER.—On the treatment of farm-horses in Winter; the treatment of the farmer's saddle and harness horse in Winter; the fattening of swine; the treatment of fowls; the rationale of the feeding of animals; on the accommodation of the grain crops in the steading; threshing and winnowing of grain; on the forming of dunghills and composts in Winter; on the construction of liquid-manure tanks and carts; sea-weed as manure; on gaulting or claying the soil.

PRACTICE—SPRING.—Summary of the field operations, and of the weather in Spring; on the advantages of having field-work always in a state of forwardness; on the calving of cows; the milking of cows; the rearing of calves. On the sowing of spring wheat; on drilling up the land; on the sowing of beans, and peas, and tares. On the transplanting of turnip bulbs for producing seed. On the rolling of land. On the sowing of oats, lucerne, and sainfoin. On the lambing of ewes. On cross-ploughing land, and ribbing land for the seed-furrow. On the sowing of grass-seeds and barley. On the turning of dunghills. On the planting of potatoes. On paring and baring the surface. On the farrowing of sows; the hatching of fowls, &c.

The Work will also embrace many important operations not included in the ordinary routine of farming, such as "Judging of Land," "Stocking of a Farm," "Improvement of the Soil," &c., &c.

The contributions by Prof. Norton will add greatly to the value of the book, by adapting it to the Soil, Climate, Growth, &c., of our own Country; and the united labors of two such distinguished men will make this work one of the most complete and valuable to the American farmer, ever issued from the press.

The work will be comprised in about 18 Nos. of 80 pages each, with a steel engraving in every number; besides which it will contain more than 600 wood engravings, in the highest style of the art. It will be handsomely printed on fine paper, and sold at 25 cents a number, or $4 in advance for the eighteen numbers.

The First Number will be issued in the month of January, and the work will be completed in about one year. The first volume, written by Mr. Stephens, is already published in Edinburgh, and the American edition will be printed from the stereotype plates imported for that purpose.

Booksellers and Dealers in Periodicals will be furnished on liberal terms.

Postmasters and others remitting the money for three copies at the above prices, will receive a fourth copy gratis. Remittances will be at the risk of the Publishers, if the mailing of the money is proved—otherwise at the risk of the parties remitting. A postmaster's certificate of the money being duly mailed is always satisfactory evidence to the Publishers.

Miscellaneous.

PUBLIC BATHS AND WASH HOUSES IN LONDON.

A late number of the London Times contains a long and interesting report on the sanitary condition of that city, made to the City Commissioners of sewers, by John Simon Medical Officer of Health. With regard to Public Baths and Wash-Houses, Mr. Simon has the following which will be, interesting to the readers of the Recorder:—

"The committee for promoting the establishment of baths and wash-houses, founded at great pains and expense, a model institution at Goulston square, Whitechapel. In spite of many circumstances conspiring to render this first and experimental establishment particularly expensive, it has more than supported itself by the small payments of the poor; and its arrangements are sufficiently extensive for it to have given in one day as many as 932 baths. I may add, that from the first opening of the building, the annual receipts have been progressively on the increase. Somewhat earlier, and under the influence of the same parent committee, though specially directed by a branch committee, a similar establishment was founded in George-st., Euston square. During the year 1848 the number of payments made here for bathing was 111,788; the number of payments for washing in the laundries, 246,760. This establishment has not only supported itself, but has been enabled to accumulate a large surplus, which is now being applied to enlarge and improve the building. At Glass-house yard, near the entrance to the London Docks, there has been founded on the same model, a small establishment of free baths and washhouses for the destitute poor. It was opened in May, 1845. In its first year the baths given amounted to 27,695; the usings of the laundry to 35,840; and its total working expenses were covered by £378.

"No language, however eloquent, no comment, however instructive, could equal the significance of the figures which I have cited as illustrating the great utility of these institutions: and, as regards their pecuniary success, it is impossible to furnish you with better testimony than is comprised in the fact, that the guardians of the poor in a great metropolitan parish have recently, out of the poor-rates, founded an institution of this nature. In their establishment, which is not onlyself-supporting, but amply remunerative, the poor are enabled to have baths at an expense of a penny for a cold, and twopence for a warm bath; and the women are enabled to do their washing, ironing and drying, with an unlimited water supply, and with other arrangements of the most admirable completeness, at an expense of only twopence for the first two hours during which they occupy the separate chambers allotted to them. A very considerable proportion of the expense is covered by the receipts for baths given at the higher price of 6d., and with some additional luxuries to persons of a higher grade in society than those who use the ordinary baths; the former, though used by a different class of persons, being sought with almost as much avidity as the latter."

PRINTERS AND PRINTING.

J. T. Buckingham, Esq., in his series of reminiscenses, in course of publication in the Boston Courier, speaks of the importance of the printer to the author, as follows:—

"Many who condescend to illuminate the dark world with the fire of their genius, little think of the lot of the printer, who, almost suffocated by the smoke of the lamp, sits up till midnight to correct the false grammar, and orthography, and worse punctuation. I have seen the arguments of lawyers, in high repute as scholars, sent to the printer, in their own hand writing, many words, and especially technical and foreign terms, abbreviated, misspelled, and entirely out of place. I have seen the sermons of eminent 'divines' sent to the press without points or capitals to designate the division of the sentences; sermons which, if published with the imperfections of the manuscript, would disgrace the printer's imp, if he were the author. Suppose they had been so printed. The printer would have been treated with scorn and contempt, as an illiterate blockhead—as a fellow better fitted to be a wood-sawyer than a printer. Nobody would have believed that such gross and palpable faults were owing to the ignorance and carelessness of the author. And no one but the practical printer knows how many hours a compositor, and after him a proof-reader, is compelled to spend in reducing to a readable condition, manuscripts that the writers themselves would be puzzled to read."

A NEW RIFLE.

Jennings' patent rifle is destined to be an almost endless repeater, and to avoid the great difficulty of capping or priming each load, and also to be uncommonly free from dirt, added to which is a force which we have never seen equaled. In appearance, the rifle is of ordinary size, without incumbrance of any kind. Its weight is no greater than the ordinary weight of the common gun, and it only differs from the latter externally, in having an iron breech with a wooden stock, which breech is handsomely finished and engraved. By a simple contrivance within this stock, the breech-pin of the barrel is opened as the gun is cocked. A cartridge is placed in this opening, and on pulling the trigger, the pin closes the barrel tight, a strong block of steel falls behind it, and the gun primes itself and is discharged, all at one motion. By this contrivance, a rifle is made capable of being loaded at the breech as often as it is fired off, at the rate of twelve shots per minute. Another variety of the same gun differs not at all from this in external appearance, except that in place of a ramrod is a tube of the same size, capable of containing twenty-four cartridges, which, by a very simple contrivance, are so arranged that they are placed in the barrel one by one, and fired successively without any interruption. The moment that the twenty-fourth ball is fired, this gun may be used as the first one, loaded at the breech, and fired at the rate of twelve in a minute. But the chief strength of this formidable weapon rests on the cartridge, which is simply a loaded ball. A hollow cone of lead, or rather a bullet elongated on one side in a hollow cylinder to about one inch in length, is filled with powder, and the end covered with a thin piece of cork, through the center of which is a small hole, to admit fire from the priming. The exception which this ball does, is no less surprising than every thing else connected with the gun. At forty rods the balls were buried more than four inches in the body of a live butternut tree. The priming of the gun is in small pills, of which one hundred are placed in a box, from which the gun supplies itself without fail. The gun may be discharged from forty to fifty times, in good weather, without needing a swab. The barrel may be detached at a single blow of a hammer or stone, and a swab run through it in a moment at any time; the operation of cleaning occupying no longer than the ordinary loading of a common gun.

BREAD ON THE WATERS.

A Swiss boy of remarkable promise was refused by his father the necessary aid for prosecuting studies for which he had a strong predilection. The good pastor of the parish in this emergency came forward and furnished the necessary means; the boy was sent to the University, and in course of time rose to the highest eminence among scientific men. His name has no superior in his department.

Many years had passed away, and the Swiss boy thus befriended was now, with place and pay equal to the distinction which his studies had won, a resident of this Western world. He lived solitarily, amid plenty and luxury. But reverses had come upon his ancient friend, the benefactor of his youth. Religious persecution had visited his native canton, and the Swiss pastor, now an old man, had been driven from his flock, without home or the means to procure one. The scholar lost no time in transmitting to the venerable man an invitation to share with him his purse and table; the invitation was accepted, and, added to the pleasure of giving to the world a man of science, the Swiss pastor had the happiness of proving in his own experience the truth of that Divine promise, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and after many days thou shalt find it."

A NOBLE-HEARTED WRECKER.

The Salem (N. J.) Standard relates the following of Capt. Joseph Gaskill, a Jersey shoreman, of whom the Newark Daily adds, that "he has assisted on various occasions in rescuing six hundred persons and millions of property from shipwreck—without having ever received one cent by way of remuneration:"—

Capt. G. is as unassuming as he is brave, and it is with the greatest difficulty he can be induced to enter upon a recitation of his adventures, which have been sufficiently numerous, on our wild and desolate shore, to fill a most entertaining volume. Last April a brig drove ashore near Great Egg Harbor; the night was dark, and the storm raged furiously. As usual, the fishermen crossed the sound to the beach, but their boats were all too heavy to be carried over, and it was impossible to pass them out the inlet. In the extremity of despair, and while the vessel was momentarily expected to go to pieces, Capt. G. arrived with a diminutive gunning skiff, decked over except a small space, scarcely large enough to seat the rower. The skiff was soon carried across the beach, launched into the surf, and Capt. G., seizing the oars, started directly through the breakers for the brig. Every wave of course submerged the tiny craft, but, drenched and half frozen as he was, he finally arrived along side.

The captain and crew were struck with astonishment at the temerity of the bold sailor, and forgetting their own peril, hailed her, "Skiff ahoy! where are you bound?" Capt. G. received one of the crew from the bowsprit, who, sitting with his back to the stern, formed a breakwater, and by this means was safely landed. Notwithstanding the coldness of the weather, Capt. G. continued his trips until every man on board was saved; and sunrise found him for a full hour, on his last trip, with the captain and his dog. The entire crew would undoubtedly have perished had it not been for the intrepidity of Capt. G. venturing out in his mere egg-shell skiff. No offer of money would have induced him to perform this noble act, but the knowledge that fellowcreatures demanded his assistance appealed to the heart and commanded the aid of the generous sailor.

CURIOUS AFFAIR AT BANGKOK.

It appears, from intelligence lately received in this country, that on the cessation of the cholera in Bangkok, presents of "fowls, ducks or pigs," were expected to be made to his majesty, the Siamese king, and the missionaries, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Catholic, as well as other foreign residents, were notified accordingly. The Presbyterian missionaries, and the Catholic likewise, under the apprehension that the gift was in some way connected with the idolatrous religion of the country, declined compliance on that ground. The Baptist missionaries, understanding the transaction to be no more than a testimonial of congratulation, complied with the custom, taking care so to explain the compliance. The Presbyterian missionaries, when the matter was thus explained to them, withdrew their former reply and paid for the chickens. The Catholic Bishop and three native priests did the same, but eight French Priests persisted in the refusal, and were forthwith banished by command of the King. The number of "fowls, ducks and pigs" collected by his Majesty was immense, and the parade of their "inspection" by him, which took place in due form, must have been sufficiently comical. The winding up of the affair is thus described in Mr. Mattoon's account, published in the Presbyterian:—

August 7th.—The last three days have been devoted to escorting the fowls, ducks and pigs to the yard, or rather field, assigned by royal bounty for their residence. They were placed in highly ornamented cages, and put upon boats gaily decorated with banners, and the boatmen often dressed in gay uniform, and the cages surrounded by rich vases of most rare and beautiful flowers, and accompanied by bands of music.

Thus arranged, they were collected in front of the palace for the inspection of "His Majesty," and then were taken in procession to the place where they are to be kept. As near as we can now ascertain, the king has collected in these three days between seventy-five and one hundred thousand fowls and ducks, and hundreds, and I may safely say thousands of pigs. Of course it has raised their price in market—in fact it is just now impossible to obtain them at any price.

Mrs Swisshelm on Cold Water.—Mrs. Swisshelm, the editress of a paper published at Pittsburg, has been disabled for several weeks by an attack of quinsy—a constitutional enemy of hers, it seems—from which she is now recovering. She thus discourses on the remedy:—

"The only true remedy for these things is to keep the system in order, by obeying the laws of health, and we feel positively ashamed of having abused our health until we became so ill. We fancied we had overcome this, our constitutional disease, by simply bathing regularly, and taking care; but for some time, we had neglected every rule, and deserved our punishment richly. We used to have it from once to four times a year, under the care of the best physicians. Gradually, we quit the doctors, and gradually got rid of the disease, until we did not have it for five years. We have made up our mind now, never to have a symptom of it again for ten, for whenever we catch cold, feel stupid and miserable, we will be packed away in a cold wet sheet, until all the bad humors are soaked out of our system, and then there will be nothing for quinsy to feed upon. It will take a good deal of cold water to wash all the drugs out of our system, but the mill race runs through the yard, and we will drink and wash until we turn into a fish or get rid of sore throat."

The Cromwell Family in America.—A correspondent of Cist's Advertiser shows that the family of the great Lord Protector of England is not extinct, nor likely to be at present. Cromwell's sixth child Elizabeth married Sir James Claypoole, and died Aug. 6th, 1658.

"Joseph Claypoole, a son of Sir Joseph and Elizabeth Claypoole, emigrated to Philadelphia. He had seven children; George, Joseph, Josiah, John, James, Rebecca, and Edith. Rebecca married Henry Pratt; Edith married David Chambers, both of Philadelphia. There are a number of his descendants in that city and New Jersey. The Claypooles of Chillicothe are of his family, and there are a number of the descendants of his daughter Edith in Cincinnati and its vicinity; four of the second generation, sixteen of the third, and forty-nine of the fourth. In Indiana, one of the second, eight of the third, and nine of the fourth. In Missouri, one of the third, and five of the fourth. In Tennessee, two of the third and ten of the fourth—in all, one hundred and five. I am not able at present to give you the number of the Claypoole family in Ohio."

Guano compared with Ashes.—Stephen H. Smith, states to a committee of the Rhode Island Society for the encouragement of Domestic Industry, that on one acre of sandy loam, which without manure would have produced twenty bushels of corn, he sowed broadcast, on the furrow, after deep ploughing, 500 pounds of best guano, well pulverized, and mixed with four times its bulk of dry loam. After harrowing it was planted with corn. The product was 50 bushels. In 1845, he seeded down half an acre of ground, a sandy loam, with eight quarts of millett, ten pounds of clover, one peck of herds grass, and one peck of red-top seed. This lot was dressed with 350 pounds of guano, worth $9, applied as above described. On an adjoining half acre he put the same kind of seeds and in like quantity. Instead of guano, he applied 6 bushels of unleached ashes, worth $8. The crop of millet was perceptibly best where the guano was used, and about ten days earliest. The crop of grass in 1846 was one-fourth the largest where the ashes were used. In 1847 the clover had nearly disappeared where guano was applied, but remained well stocked where the ashes were put. The first and second crops this year were decidedly in favor of the ashes.

A New Theme for Speculation.—The Detroit Free Press mentions the recent discovery of a remarkable rock in the middle of Lake Superior, nearly 200 miles from land, and thus far beyond soundings by the longest lines tried. It ascends about four feet above the surface of the water, having at the top, and apparently far into the depths of the Lake, an area of only six or seven feet. It stands alone, a shaft of traprock, to excite the wonder, and, for the first time in its unknown and unfathomable history, the alarm of the mariner who navigates the Great Lakes. The sudden appearance of this monument of past ages is likely to become a matter of curious scientific investigation. At what depth in those unsounded waters are its foundations laid? How long has it been working its way from the unexplored caves of this submerged region up to the light of day, and the gaze of man? Has the Lake receded around it, or is there, far down in the cerulian deep, a mountain ambitiously rising to exhibit from its crest this possible handiwork of a people who dwelt, and wrought, and flourished, and grew mighty in this vast northern basin before it was filled up with water, and who perished like the unbelieving scoffers of the antediluvian world? [Watchman and Reflector.

Selecting Turkeys and Chickens.—If you make your selection from the live-stock, take one with a small head, bright eyes, tapering neck, full breast, straight back, oval-shaped body, with legs of moderate length. The signs of a good chicken are a plump breast, a thick, fat and flexible rump, and fatness under the wings. Old fowls should be boiled; the young may be either boiled or roasted, though the hen is preferred for boiling, and the cock for roasting. White flesh is preferable, though some think a yellow-skinned chicken the most delicate roast.

Of the different varieties of the turkey, those of white plumage are considered the most delicate and tender. The signs of a good turkey are fullness of the muscles on the breast, thickness of the rump, existence of fat under the wings, and flexibility of the hinder part of the breast-bone. [Puritan Rec.

On the back of a $3 bill of the Fairfield County (Conn.) Bank, which passed through our hands the other day, says the Journal of Commerce, were written the following words:—

"A little while ye have been mine,
No longer can I keep ye;
I fear ye'll ne'er be mine again,
Nor any other like ye.

"The last of a legacy of $20,000."

Lightning Conductors.—An interesting example of the value of lightning conductors occurred at Glogan, in Silesia, in May, 1782. A thunder-storm from the west approached the spacious powder magazine at Galgnuburg. A brilliant flash of lightning took place, accompanied by such a dreadful crash of thunder that the sentinel was stupified, and was for a while senseless. Some laborers employed at the work of the fortress, about two hundred and fifty paces from the magazine, saw the lightning issue from the cloud, and strike the point of the conductor. This case of successful protection forms a remarkable contrast with many well-known cases in which the most appalling disasters have been caused by a neglect to furnish lightning conductors to magazines. In August, 1767, a large quantity of gunpowder, belonging to the republic of Venice, had been deposited in the vaults of the church of St. Nazaire, at Brescia. The tower of the church was struck with lightning; the electric fluid descended to the vaults, and exploded above two hundred and seven thousand six hundred pounds of gunpowder! About three thousand persons perished by the catastrophe, and nearly one-fifth of the fine city of Brescia was destroyed. Owing to the same want of protection, a magazine of four hundred barrels of gunpowder was blown up in Sumatra, in 1782, by an electrical discharge, and at Luxembourg in 1807, a magazine, with twelve tons of gunpowder, was exploded by lightning, and the lower part of the town laid in ruins.

Use of Chloroform.—Dr. Parker performed the painful operation of cutting out the great toe nail at the roots, from the foot of a young woman, at one of his recent cliniques in Crosby street. The patient was under the influence of chloroform. The foot was greatly inflamed, and the operation did not occupy two minutes. The patient moaned, as if in a troubled sleep, and made strong exclamations, a number of times, yet the surgeons were confident she did not suffer any pain. She was removed from the apartment before restoration was complete.

Dr. Mott restored the contracted arm of a young woman, at one of his recent cliniques before the medical class of the University, in Broadway. She was also under the influence of chloroform. Three weeks previous, this young woman awoke in the morning and found her arm closed and benumbed, apparently as if her body had rested upon it. She could not straighten it out, and the effort caused extreme pain. In this condition it remained two or three weeks, becoming so rigid that nothing but force could restore its natural action. The operation was a painful one. Yet the arm was straightened, the contracted muscles extending, detaching themselves from the fleshy parts of the arm where adhesion had taken place. The patient moaned a little, but there was no apparent suffering. [Jour. Com.

Phenomena of the Brain.—One of the most inconceivable things in the nature of the brain is, that the organ of sensation should itself be insensible. To cut the brain gives no pain, yet in the brain alone resides the power of feeling pain in any other part of the body. If the nerve which leads from it to the injured part be divided, it becomes instantly unconscious of suffering. It is only by communication with the brain that any kind of sensation is produced, yet the organ itself is insensible. But there is a circumstance more wonderful still. The brain itself may be removed, may be cut down to the corpus calasum, without destroying life. The animal lives and performs all its functions, which are necessary to simple vitality, but no longer has a mind; it cannot think or feel; it requires that the food should be pushed into its stomach; once there, it is digested, and the animal will even thrive and grow fat. We infer, therefore, that the part of the brain, the convolutions, is simply intended for the exercise of the intellectual faculties, whether of the low degree called instinct, or exalted kind bestowed on man, the gift of reason. [Wagan on the Mind.

To Detect Indian Meal in Wheat Flour.—This process is thus described in a French journal of medical chemistry by M. Mauviel La Grange:—

"The sample is sifted, and two grammes (30 grains) of the finest flour mixed in a test-tube with four grammes of nitric acid, and well stirred with a glass rod. After this add sixty grammes of water, and then two grammes of potash dissolved in eight grammes of water. When no Indian meal is present, as soon as the carbonic acid has escaped, only yellowish flakes separate; but when this is present, some orange yellow particles subside, which are easily detected. In this way an admixture of from four to five per cent. of Indian meal with wheaten flour may be detected.

Curious Circumstance.—One of the French National Guard, who was supposed to have died from indigestion, produced by drunkenness, was recently buried in the Department of Mayenne. He was buried with military honors, and on the firing of the last volley, a groan was heard to proceed from the coffin, which was instantly taken up and opened, when the supposed dead man rose up, and on examination it was found that the sergeant had negligently loaded his piece with ball cartridge; the ball had passed through the thigh of the man, and thus prevented his premature interment. The resuscitated man, who was soon cured of his wound, has evinced his gratitude by commencing an action against the sergeant to recover damages for the injury.

Coal vs. Gold.—In a work lately published by a Spaniard, there is a comparison between the produce of the gold and silver mines of America, and the coal mines of England, from which it appears that the gross value of the annual produce of the coal mines, which is 18,000,000 tons, amounts to 450,000,000 francs, including the wages and other charges; while the produce of the gold and silver mines, including the same charges, is only 320,000,000 francs; showing a balance in favor of the coal mines of England, over the gold and silver mines of the New World of no less sum than 227,500,000 francs."

A young girl of twenty, in man's attire, is said to have been actively engaged in sixteen conflicts, during the late war in Hungary, as aid-de-camp to one of the Magyar generals.

Woolen Factories in Michigan.—The Detroit Tribune has an article which embodies some interesting statistics respecting the production of Wool, and the manufacture of woolen fabrics in the State of Michigan. It says Michigan has gone into the growing of wool at a rapid rate, and is destined to go on increasing. Last year the surplus that was exported was over 1,200,000 lbs., and the small manufacturing establishments scattered throughout the State are estimated to have consumed 600,000 lbs. more. This season the amount exported will not fall short of 1,600,000 lbs. and at the same ratio another year it will reach 2,000,000. At a fair estimate there are a million sheep within the State. In 1840 there were but 80,083. The Tribune urges upon the people of Michigan the importance of establishing large woolen factories and of working up their own wool instead of exporting it.

Good Evidence of Gratitude.—A benevolent lady, who signs herself "M. O.," has sent £100 to the Society for Improving the Condition of the Laboring Classes, London, as a thank-offering for the preservation of herself and family from the late epidemic.

The Vicar of Bray.—Although no phrase is more common than the "Vicar of Bray," few, we believe, are acquainted with its real origin, which is this: The Vicar of Bray in Berkshire, was a Papist under the sway of Henry VIII., and a Protestant under Edward IV.; he was a Papist again under Queen Mary, and again a Protestant under the reign of Queen Elizabeth. When he was reproached for his frequent apostacy, he answered, "I can not help that, but if I change my religion, I am sure I keep true to my principle, which is to live and die Vicar of Bray."

The Queen and the Free Church.—Queen Victoria, it is well known, has spent several weeks during the last season at her Highland home, among the Grampian hills, at the villa of Balmoret, in the parish of Crathie, county of Aberdeen. In this parish the adherents of the Free Church had hitherto failed to obtain a site for a house of worship. But since the place became the property of Her Majesty, they made bold to apply to her for the grant of a piece of land for the purpose, and the Queen, in the most handsome manner, at once consented to give them the best spot in the whole parish.

A Case of Catalepsy.—The Blue Hen's Chicken is informed that a young girl in Wilmington fell into a "sort of trance" on Sunday night last. She was sitting on the door-step, and having gone into the house almost immediately either fell or lay down, and notwithstanding all the efforts of the family and a physician, they were unable to awaken her. Some time afterwards she gradually recovered, and she informed the people that she was perfectly conscious of everything that was going on, but was totally unable to speak or make any motion.

Variety.

The average cost of gas in London to private consumers is about 5s. 1d. per 1000 cubic feet, equal to 6 1-19d., or say a york shilling, per 100 cubic feet. New Yorkers are paying 40 cents for what costs the Londoners 12½ cents! But more than this, a new company has proposed to supply the city of London at 4s. per 1,000 cubic feet, equal to 4 4-5d., or say 10 cents, per 100 feet.

The Register General's quarterly returns show the number of marriages in England during the last three months to have been 35,958, deaths 135,394, births 135,290. During the same period, 46,558 persons have emigrated from the principal ports, so that the population of England has decreased at least 50,000 during the last quarter.

It is asserted in Hunt's Magazine, that but one man in New York city, for a period of years, has been a large and successful merchant, without bankruptcy, stopping payment, or other embarrassments. Of every hundred merchants in Boston, in a period of 20 or 30 years, ninety-five die poor. Of the same number in New York not two acquire wealth. In Philadelphia the proportion is smaller.

The prize of £5 offered by the editor of the Family Friend, for the solution of an enigma, has been awarded to Mrs. A. F. Donoghue, London. The solution, which is gutta percha, was attempted by 1,500 persons, 200 of whom were correct; but the most complete answer was furnished by the lady to whom the prize was awarded.

Within the past sixteen years we have had three various standards established by law for our gold coin: 1st, up to June, 1834, it was 22 carats, or 916⅔ thousandths; at that time it was reduced to 899-225 thousandths; and in January, 1837, there was a farther change to the more simple proportion of 900 thousandths, or nine-tenths.

The Courier states that one of the book-selling establishments in New York has received orders from the Empress of Russia for five copies of every new illustrated American publication, the plates of which are not copied from foreign works.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

A Card.

TO THE PATRONS OF GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE.

The close of the current Volume is deemed a proper period to announce to the patrons of this Magazine, that arrangements have been completed which cannot fail to increase its attractions during the coming year. The best writers in the country will continue to enrich our pages with their productions, and our engravers—who stand foremost in their profession—will put forth the best efforts of their art to make this peculiar department of the Magazine more beautiful than ever.

Promising unremitted exertions to merit a continuance of the favor bestowed upon the Magazine, we respectfully solicit a renewal of the subscriptions of all its old patrons, and the addition of the names of all who desire to avail themselves of the satisfaction of reading what is universally conceded to be "The Best Magazine in the Country."

Attention is called to the following list of Terms, which are unquestionably more advantageous to subscribers than those offered by any other work of the kind.

Terms.—For $3 in advance, (par money in the States from which it is remitted,) one copy of Graham and a copy of a large and magnificent print, by a distinguished Engraver, and which may be considered one of the most beautiful specimens of art ever presented by any Magazine publisher, and also a new and beautiful Engraving, suitable for framing, of a Sacred subject, "Bearing the Saviour to the Tomb," prepared expressly, and at a very heavy cost, as a Premium Gift to new subscribers to Graham's Magazine. Or, if desired, we will furnish in lieu of either of the above Prints, a complete set of our Mezzotint Portraits of the American Heroes of the Late War with Mexico. For $5, two copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints to each subscriber. For $10, five copies for one year, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person forming the club, and either of the above Prints, or a set of Portraits, to each subscriber. For $20, eleven copies for one year, and a copy of either of the Prints, or a set of Portraits to each subscriber, and a copy of the Magazine to the Postmaster or person sending the club, with a copy of each of the large Prints as an additional Premium.

☞ Any person forwarding a club of 20, or upwards, shall receive for his trouble a complete copy of W. H. Graham's "American Historical and Biographical Library."

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF MR. CARPENTER.

SHANGHAI, June 18, 1849.

To the Executive Board of S. D. B. Missionary Association:—

Our last letter to you, sent per overland, left this port per steamer to reach Hong-Kong in season for the May mail. As there is a vessel about to sail from this port to the gold regions of California, we embrace this opportunity of writing again, although we have but little to say. That little, however, we trust will give you and all who hear it a thrill of joy. I allude to another instance of conversion from heathenism. The fall of our late teacher seems to have been made instrumental of the raising from spiritual death of I know not how many. It seemed to be blessed to Bro. Wardner's teacher, in bringing him to a decision. It was not without its influence upon his cook and ours. All of us regarded it as a loud call to renewed faithfulness. It was the means of bringing us into a more intimate acquaintance with the relatives of the deceased, by which means a door has been opened for preaching the Gospel to them. One of them, the only own sister of Chung, has recently avowed herself a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. And this she has done under circumstances which encourage us to hope that she is sincere. The Lord has been better to us than we had dared to hope. A combination of circumstances has, in the providence of God, tended to this happy result. 1. The pleasant acquaintance we had contracted with her brother, of course, gave us and the doctrine we bring, a more favorable reception than we could hope for under other circumstances. 2. By visiting them in company with Mrs. C., this has obviated what otherwise would have been a formidable objection in the minds of the Chinese. 3. The individual alluded to is able to read, which, among Chinese females, is a rare accomplishment. She has learned the doctrine more from reading than from any thing that has been said to her. And being a woman of more than ordinary abilities, it has not required so long a time as is generally required for a heathen to unlearn his errors and learn the truth. 4. Last, not least, the Holy Spirit, we trust, has opened her mind and heart to understand and love the Scriptures. After all, time may show that we are deceived in this case; but at present we rejoice, thank God, and take courage. And our prayer is, that God would make this individual a missionary to the large circle of relatives in which she moves. Already she has begun this work, in making known to her aged grandmother, who is blind, the blessed Gospel. Of this and other things Mrs. C. will inform you, as her opportunities with the family are greater than mine. Brethren, we ask you to rejoice with us in these first fruits of our feeble labors in this land of heathenism. If angels rejoice over sinners who repent, why should we suppress our joy or our thanks to God? But we must pray and labor still. In this same family of which I have spoken above, idolatry is still practiced, and an opposition is felt, and in our absence expressed, to the Gospel of Christ. But they treat us kindly, and some of them, I hope, are thoughtful.

What shall I say concerning more enlarged operations? We have already written for means to publish tracts. We know not how spirited our brethren may feel in reference to the enlargement of operations here. But if they find it in their hearts to do so, and if the Lord gives them means for this purpose, we shall be truly thankful. Not only do we want tracts, but in a year from this, or at most in two years, if we are spared and prospered, we think we shall need another place for preaching, where we could gather larger congregations. Not that we would give up this, but occupy both. It has so happened, that I have seen several sites that can be bought, and the best one, all things considered, is not half a mile from us, perhaps not more than a quarter of a mile. But it is on a street that is much traveled, and, for aught I can see, a good place for a house and chapel. The Episcopalians have purchased two sites within the city, and are building; the Baptists have purchased one, and are building; the London Society has had a chapel in the city perhaps three years; the American Presbyterians are about to obtain a site, probably in the city. The Methodists have come, and probably within a year or two will have one. The London Society's missionaries are so numerous here, that they will doubtless soon have other chapels within the city. And how long must we be confined to this little narrow ya-joo-loong? It is a good place, but I hope it will soon be found to be too narrow, i. e. that our means and our acquaintance with the language will ere long make it desirable to take a more prominent stand. In case our people should wish to build a chapel here, we would suggest—1. Whether a location not far from our present location would not be preferable to one more remote. It seems to us that by thus enlarging the circle of our influence gradually, the effect would be better than to take a stand farther off. If we were the only missionaries in Shanghai, the case would be different. Our influence will be cut off, undoubtedly, to some extent, by other missionaries. But if we can concentrate our efforts to one section of the city, would we be as liable to lose our labor as if we should scatter our efforts in different sections? If our chapel, which we now occupy, were situated on a thoroughfare, instead of a very narrow, crooked lane, we should think it might answer for years; and it must as it is, if our brethren so decree. But, situated as we are, we are, so to speak, at the mercy of any denomination who may choose to locate near us, and yet on a thoroughfare. Suppose some one should come and buy, for instance, the lot of which I have spoken, and build a large chapel, and preach in it on Sundays; he would stand a fair chance to prejudice the Sabbath cause very much. But if we should secure that or some other lot near, none could have any thing like the opportunity of prejudicing the minds of this community in which we dwell against the Lord's Sabbath. And if we neglect to take advantage of these circumstances, who can tell how long it will be before we shall find ourselves in an unpleasant predicament. We have confidence in the truth, only give it fair play. And our opinion is, that for the single purpose of vindicating the Lord's Sabbath, if for no other object, it would be worth while to build a chapel on some more public street. We would suggest, secondly, that the site before spoken of is a desirable one. It is something like seventy feet on the street, and runs back about a hundred feet. This would allow of a space each side of the chapel, for air, light, and safety in case of fire. It would be sufficiently extensive for a chapel and dwelling. I do not know what it can be obtained for; when I saw it, the front was considerable wider than the rear, and they asked eight hundred dollars, but I think it could have been bought for five or six hundred dollars. Since I saw it, they have told me that the lot can be enlarged so as to be a regular parallelogram, and the price is a thousand dollars. But they almost always ask too much, and will come down if one takes time for it. I think the lot can be bought for eight hundred dollars, and perhaps less. If I were authorized, I think I would try them with five hundred, and hold them a good while. By taking time enough, one can buy any thing for what it is worth. I have heard of several sites for sale in different parts of the city, and the prices, and also the prices of some which have been bought, and think that the lot I have spoken of, at a thousand dollars, would not be dearer than others pay. Bishop Boone and Mr. Shuck have each purchased a site, for which they pay respectively $1300. I have felt it a duty to be thus particular, so that if it should be judged advisable to enlarge our operations here, the Board might distinctly see the feasibility of it, so far as the obtaining of sites is concerned. In my last, I stated that a house and chapel, together with the ground to set them on, might be obtained, I thought, for five thousand dollars. If the lot were secured, the chapel and house might be built in a very plain style, and not large, if thought best. If five thousand dollars were expended, a good lot and commodious chapel, and good-sized house, all in good style, might be obtained. If three thousand dollars were expended, a lot could be purchased, and a plain chapel and plain house built, which perhaps would answer the purpose.

Since we last wrote, there has been so much rain that our out-of-door walks have been very much interrupted. Consequently our opportunites for conversation with the people have been abridged. The regular services of the chapel have been occasionally interrupted, and the attendance some times less than usual, on acount of the rain. We frequently receive calls from the Chinese, to whom we address the truths of revelation. On the 18th ult., in company with some of our neighbors, a very respectable lady who resides at a considerable distance from here, called to see the foreigners. All of our people, excepting myself, happened to be away. I entertained the company as well as I could with the story of the cross, and the old lady paid very respectful attention. Being invited to come again when our women would be at home, she promised to do so, and the company departed. Afterwards, in my absence, she redeemed the pledge, and made our people a visit, appearing quite friendly. O that we had some suitable tracts that might thus have been sent into the interior.

On the first Sabbath in June, we had a meeting to hear the experience of those among us who hope in Christ. Bro. W.'s teacher and cook, and our cook, all stated what they thought the Lord had done for them. Questions were addressed to them individually, designed to elicit their views of the gospel scheme, and Christian duty, but primarily to give us all satisfaction as to the reality of their having passed from death unto life. From the examination, we felt inclined to hope for each one of them. The meeting was closed by a season of prayer, in which each of these three took a part.

The next day the teacher of one of the missionaries called on me. Although he had other business, he asked me why we kept a different day from the other missionaries. I explained the matter at some length, referring him to numerous passages of Scripture, which he read. He seems to be a candid man.

News has recently reached us, that the Rev. Mr. Farmer, of whom we have formerly written to you, died near Ceylon, on his way homeward. The Rev. Mr. Spalding, an American Episcopalian, who arrived here soon after our arrival, is laid by with an affection of the lungs. He has been a remarkably healthy man until within a few weeks. Mr. Yates, of the Southern Baptist Board, is likely to loose the use of his eyes.

MISSIONARY EFFORT IN CHINA.

The English Correspondent of "The Independent," furnishes "Missionary Gleanings" of an interesting character, from which we copy what relates to China.

The first fruits of what we hope and believe will be a glorious harvest, are being gathered in China. A native Christian teacher, named Go-to, has entered into rest, after a short career, in which he exhibited Christian graces in a very happy degree. Three years ago he first became a regular attendant at the missionary church at Amoy. He was then weary of idolatry, and looking for a better hope. He accepted the Gospel message, and found peace in believing, and was received into church fellowship early in March last year. He was greatly esteemed on account of his active piety; but his Christian course was short, and the termination of it somewhat sudden. The circumstances are narrated in a joint letter from the missionaries Young and Hyslop. These missionaries say:—

"Go-to departed this life on the 26th of December, 1848. On the preceding day he had been out as usual fulfilling his loved duties as distributor of tracts among his countrymen, and had called on us, stating the kind reception he had almost everywhere met with; the ready ear which had been given to his exhortations; and the eagerness evinced by many families to receive from him religious tracts. He then mentioned the joy he felt in seeing that Tan-tai continued to endure 'as a good soldier of Jesus Christ,' and the various sorts of persecution to which he had been subjected; observing, that these trials had only rendered him the more confirmed in the faith, and devoted to the service of the Lord Jesus.

"On the afternoon of that day, December 25th, Go-to was also with us in the chapel, and there he again gave his testimony before the congregation that the Gospel of Christ is unspeakably valuable and divinely excellent. It was while standing, during the closing prayer, that he was seized with a paralytic fit, which in a few hours proved fatal. As the doctor considered it unadvisable to remove him, he remained in the chapel until he expired the following morning. Though unable to speak a word after the disease attacked him, his consciousness so far returned that he was able, by signs, to express to us and to his sons, as we watched beside the couch, that his mind was in perfect peace, stayed upon the Lord.

"Though the call came to him suddenly, he appeared completely prepared to meet it. Only a few days before, while speaking to him on the subject of Christian experience, and remarking how unexpectedly the beloved missionary, Mr. Lloyd, had reached the end of his course, we asked him, how he thought he should feel were the Lord suddenly to call him out of the world? He said, 'I think I would not feel at all afraid—I should feel it to be joyful.' He had been latterly making rapid progress in the divine life; his heart seemed to glow with increasing love to Christ; and most fervently did he desire that all his countrymen might know and love him too."

The funeral arrangements are described, and were in harmony with the Christian profession of the deceased; for though they were thoroughly Chinese, everything connected with idolatrous rites and observances was excluded. A great many Chinese joined in the funeral procession, and listened to an address in Chinese, founded on 1 Cor. 15.

At Hong-Kong also, the missionary brethren are receiving encouraging evidences of the power of the truth. Three more converts have recently been added to the native church, one of them a man of cultivated intelligence, and qualified to labor with acceptance among his fellow countrymen. Two hundred miles from the colony Ha, Yik-Heem had heard that at Hong-Kong foreigners were teaching new truths there; a relative who had made a trading voyage brought back some tracts with him; one of them on the Publican's Prayer arrested the attention of Yik-Heem. In March he went to Hong-Kong, seeking for knowledge; he there found a colporteur, and the results are thus narrated by Dr. Legge:—

"Immediately after he found his way to the Bazaar chapel, and introduced himself to A-Sun, as a learner of Christianity. A-sun brought him to Tsin-Schen's daily Bible class, at which and at every other service he continued a regular attendant. Being a scholar, he readily understood the Scriptures and all our tracts. His progress in knowledge was rapid, and very delightful. He manifested none of the proud opposition which is generally shown by the learned Chinese. For a fortnight I read an hour every morning with him myself, when by six o'clock he was always waiting for his lesson; and I do not think I have ever had so much pleasure in communicating instruction. His heart seemed indeed to be opened to receive the truth in the love of it.

"After he had been here about six weeks he made application to be baptized, as he wished, he said, to go and preach the Gospel. This awakened a slight suspicion that he might be expecting to be employed as an evangelist to our mission, and his application be thus emanating from the hope of a livelihood as much as from the conviction of the truth. On being asked the meaning of the expression, however, he said that he was thinking of his wife and children, and brothers, and of all his relatives and acquaintances in his native place. His desire was to be baptized, that he might go home and tell them of the Savior. Subsequently it was represented to him on one occasion, that by becoming a Christian he would expose himself to much persecution and many difficulties. He might even find it impossible to collect a school in order to support his family. His reply to this was very fine. 'I now,' said he, 'know the true God. I learn in the Bible, that of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things. He feeds all creatures. I wish to do His will, and put my trust in Him. I do not trouble myself about the future. God will provide for me.'"

He was baptized and waited at Hong-Kong a few weeks, celebrated the Lord's Supper, and then returned to his own home, it is hoped to be an independent witness for the truth. Very pleasing and encouraging traits of character to other Chinese converts at Hong-Kong are described in the letter from which these extracts are made. The missionaries feel that they are doing a preliminary work, and are deeply concerned for the training of a native ministry; and now they are encouraged by the prospect that of the young under their influence, some will be qualified for the great work.

"We have been teaching the young, and praying that God would convert their hearts that they might, under our training, grow up to be servants of the Redeemer, and go forth to proclaim the truth. We have not labored in vain, nor prayed without being heard.

"Of six-and-thirty boys and young men in the Institution, eight are now recognized members of the Church of Christ, and there is reason to hope that their number will be largely increased. Of those eight, three go by the denomination of theological students. They are those who were with me in England. In a knowledge of English they are in advance of all the others; and I hope, in a few years, to see them preachers of the Gospel, in whom their friends, and the Church of Christ at large, can repose the fullest confidence."

"LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT."

"Yes, I do believe there is such a thing as love at first sight," said a gray-haired sire some two years since, as he complacently gazed upon a delicate and youthful daughter who had just become the bride of a somewhat noted man in the city, of rather doubtful character; "for there was no such thing as turning our Anna after she had once seen him." Yes, and after a superficial acquaintance of a few weeks, with the necessary quota of professions of ardent attachment, the reluctant consent of her doting parents was given, and the hand and heart of the unsophisticated maiden; nothing doubting that the fancy of her imagination, which she denominated "love at first sight," was sufficient to insure her happiness with a comparative stranger—"for he had fallen in love with her at first sight, therefore it would not fail."

Reader, I have never seen this couple, but a mutual friend, two years since, spoke to me of their recent union, prospects of happiness, &c., and quoted this remark of the father. Two weeks since a paragraph in the newspapers informed me that the Supreme Court had granted them a divorce.

If we could gather up the sighs, tears, and anguish of desolate hearts which this offshoot of the novelist's brain has caused, then might we hope to stay the fatal progress of a theory so baseless, and the youthful mind might see that anything short of affection based upon virtuous principles, is but an idle fancy, and will perish with the using. But, alas! the romancer's pen is so prolific, and these erroneous sentiments are so thoroughly disseminated, that we can scarcely hope that the narration of cases as strikingly sad in their results as in the present instance—results which might have been foreseen, or reasonably apprehended at the time by an unprejudiced mind—will cause our youthful readers to pause and consider before they allow this false sentiment to govern or lead them in their choice of a companion for life—yes, remember it is for life—for, should a "divorce" follow, as in this wise, yet the parties concerned will feel its effects for life.

THE PRAYING SCHOOL-TEACHER.—A moral young man was invited to teach a school, to which a legacy had been left, on condition that all the teachers employed should pray in the school. He engaged with a determination to go through the form of reading a prayer, though conscious that he had no heart to pray. In entering on this heartless service, he was convicted of sin; began to pray, as he hoped, from his heart; and at his early death, he was preparing for the ministry.

THERE SHALL BE NO NIGHT THERE.

"No night is there!"—the sun of love is beaming
Upon the happy denizens of heaven;
Its pure effulgence from God's presence streaming,
Shines ever on the hosts of the forgiven.

"No night is there!" for cloudy disputation
Is left behind upon the sinful earth;
With notes of cheerful praise and adoration,
All voices blend to hymn the Saviour's worth.

"No night is there!" for want and pain are ended;
Sin and temptation they shall know no more;
And unbelief, with all that God offended,
Departed as they left the mortal shore.

"No night is there!" for eye to eye each seeth,
There no harsh judgments, no distrust intrude;
Before love's light all misconception fleeth,
And each esteems the other as he should.

"No night is there!" for none shall know the anguish
Of separation or estrangement keen;
Under the Lord's chastisements none shall languish,
For there his glorious face unveiled is seen

Oh then, while here, in darkness and in sorrow,
We wait with trembling hope the summons home,
A ray from heaven to light our path we'll borrow,
Nor e'er beyond its hallowed influence roam.

EBENEZER ELLIOTT, THE CORN-LAW RHYMER.

From Stanton's "Reforms and Reformers in Great Britain and Ireland."

I must not omit the iron poet of Sheffield. Like the Ayrshire plowman, he sprung from the working class. Like him, his songs are the lays of labor. But, unlike him, his muse did not draw her inspiration from the breath of the open fields, perfumed with daisies and adorned with hawthorn, but from the hot atmosphere of furnaces, ringing with the clang of anvils and the hoarse grating of machinery. Burns was the bard of yeomen. Elliott is the bard of artisans. Both have touched the deepest chords of human feeling, and waked echoes that shall vibrate till human hearts cease to pulsate. Wandering a few years ago in the suburbs of Sheffield, my eye fell on a building, blackened with the blackest smoke of that most sombre town, whose front showed a sign running, I think, thus: "Elliott & Co.'s Iron and Steel Warehouse." I inquired of a young man, dressed in a frock, besmeared with iron and coal, for the head of the establishment. "My father," said he, "is just gone. You will find him at his house yonder." I repaired thither. The "Corn-Law Rhymer" stood on the threshold in his stocking feet, holding a pair of coarse shoes in his hand. His frank "walk in" assured me I was welcome. I had just left the residence of Montgomery. The transition could hardly be greater than from James Montgomery to Ebenezer Elliott. The former was polished in his manners, exquisitely neat in his personal appearance, and his bland conversation never rose above a calm level, except once, when he spoke with an indignation that years had not abated of his repeated imprisonment in York Castle, for the publication, first in verse and then in prose, of liberal and humane sentiments, which offended the Government. And now I was confronted with a burly iron-monger, rapid in speech, glowing with enthusiasm, putting and answering a dozen questions at a breath, eulogizing American republicanism and denouncing British aristocracy, throwing sarcasms at the Duke of Wellington, and anointing General Jackson with the oil of flattery, pouring out a flood of racy talk about Church Establishments, Biddle and the Bank, poetry, politics, the price of iron and the price of corn, while ever and anon he thrust his damp feet into the embers, and hung his wet shoes on the grate to dry. A much shorter interview than I enjoyed would be sufficient to prove, even if their works were forgotten, that of the two Sheffield poets, Elliott's grasp of intellect was much the stronger, his genius far the more buoyant and elastic. Yet has the milder bard done and suffered much for civil and religious liberty. But the stronger! Not corn-law repealers only, but all Britons who moisten their scanty bread with the sweat of the brow, are largely indebted to his inspiring lays for the mighty bound which the laboring mind of England has taken in our day. Some of his poems are among the rarest and purest gems that shine on the sacred mount. Others are as rugged, aye, and as strong, as the iron bars in his own warehouse. They break out in denunciations of privileged tyrants and titled extortioners, with sounds like the echoes of a Hebrew prophet. The genius that animates and the humanity that warms every line, carry them where more fastidious and frigid productions would never find their way. Elliott has been called harsh and vindictive. He may be pardoned for hating institutions which reduce every fourth man to beggary, while a great heart beats in his bosom. Against meanness and oppression his muse has rung out battle-songs, charged with indignation, defiance, sarcasm and contempt; but into the ears of the lowly and wan sons of toil, it has breathed the murmurs of sympathy, consolation, and hope. The key which unlocks his harmony he has furnished in these angry lines:—

"For thee, my country, thee, do I perform
Sternly the duty of a man born free,
Heedless, though ass, and wolf, and venom'd worm,
Shake ears and fangs, with brandished bray, at me."

A POPE OF THE OLDEN TIME.—Pope Valentine, elected in 818, was the first who made the whole Senate of Rome kiss his feet. There was a remarkable affront put upon this ceremony when Dr. Cranmer, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, attended the Pope on account of Henry the Eighth's divorce from Queen Katherine. When going to make his speech, on the sudden he was interrupted by an unmannerly spaniel belonging to the Earl of Wiltshire, one of the English ambassadors. The dog, seeing the Pope holding out his foot to be kissed, caught, between his teeth, his great toe, so that the ambassadors, disdaining to kiss where the dog had taken an assay, let the Pope draw back his foot, and so lost that special favor which was offered them.

A SCENE IN BOSTON.

A half-score or more of Irish women have lately taken their stands at the Park-street corner of the mall, where, with a few oranges and other fruit placed upon some temporary table or box, they remain from morning until night, perhaps clearing, by their small sales, from one to two shillings per day. They are mostly old women, who can do nothing else for a living, and are patronized more from charity than from the tempting appearance of their goods.

One day, not long since, one of these old women became quite ill from exposure to the sun, and probably from want of proper nourishment, and was forced to leave her stand, and seat herself against the iron railing of the Common, in the shade. A little, bright-eyed girl of thirteen summers, saw her limp to the spot, and also observed the anxious eye of the old woman directed towards her little store of oranges, nuts, and candy. "Never mind those, ma'am," she said; "I'll go and sit there till you are better, and sell for you."

The little miss, dressed with much taste and richness, with an air that indicated most distinctly the class to which she belonged, sat down upon the rough box behind the Irish woman's stand, assuming all the importance of a young salesman. She had never sold anything before in her life; but people began to stop and wonder what it meant, to see the fair and beautiful child in that singular situation.

The story was soon told by the bystanders, who had only to point to the poor woman. In a moment, every one was seized with a very extraordinary desire for an orange, a handful of nuts, or some candy, and our little beauty could hardly serve them fast enough. Many, utterly refusing any change, gave her a shilling, a dime, or a sixpence, for a penny's worth of nuts or candy. It was all accomplished very quickly, though the little girl was somewhat disconcerted, and had to be encouraged by a whisper, now and then, from one who need not be named, for she was not accustomed to a crowd.

The table was soon swept, and we saw her pass her tiny hand full of silver to the poor woman, who thus realized triple the value of her small stock, and called on half the saints in the calendar to bless the kind-hearted child.

REV. JOHN FLETCHER'S PREACHING.

On my occasional visits I was struck with several things. Preaching on Noah as a type of Christ, he was in the midst of a most animating description of the terrible day of the Lord, when he suddenly paused. Every feature of his expressive countenance was marked with painful feeling; and striking his forehead with the palm of his hand, he exclaimed, "Wretched man that I am! Beloved brethren, it often cuts me to the soul, as it does at this moment, to reflect that, while I have been endeavoring by the beauties of holiness, and even by the terrors of the Lord, to bring you to walk in the peaceable paths of righteousness, I am, with respect to many of you who reject the Gospel, only tying mill-stones about your necks to sink you deeper in perdition!" The whole church was electrified, and it was some time before he could resume the subject.

On another occasion, after the morning service, he asked if any of the congregation could give him the address of a sick man whom he was desired to visit. He was answered, "He is dead, sir." "Dead! dead!" he exclaimed; "another soul launched into eternity! What can I do for him now? Why, my friends, will you so frequently serve me in this manner? I am not informed that you are ill till I find you dying, or hear that you are dead!" Then, sitting down, he covered his head with his gown; and when the congregation had retired, he walked home buried in sorrow, as though he had lost a friend or a brother.

A STRIKING THOUGHT.—"The death of an old man's wife," says Lamartine, "is like cutting down an ancient oak that has long shaded the family mansion. Henceforth, the glare of the world, with its cares and vicissitudes, fall upon the old widower's heart, and there is nothing to break their force, or shield him from the full weight of the misfortune. It is as if his right hand was withered—as if one wing of his eagle was broken, and every movement that he made only brought him to the ground. His eyes are dim and glassy, and when the film of death falls over him, he misses those accustomed tones which might have smoothed his passage to the grave.

"IN SEASON—OUT OF SEASON."—Dr. Chalmers once spent an evening with a family in Scotland, and the themes of their conversation were of a worldly character. At the close of the evening, a visitor was struck with apoplexy, and died very suddenly. The doctor stood over him, the very picture of despair. At last he said—"Had I known that this man would have been called so suddenly from time to eternity, would I not have felt it my duty to have pointed him to the Saviour?" Perhaps it would have been deemed by some, out of season; but doubtless it would have been in season, in the sight of God.

DEATH OF MRS. GUTZLAFF.—The death of Mrs. Gutzlaff, the wife of Rev. Charles Gutzlaff, of China, is announced in the late advices from Europe. She died at Singpore, on the 3d of May last. Letters received in this country say, "that she suffered much during her sickness, but her death seems to have been very peaceful; so much so, that the writer of these letters, who was seated on her bed, and fanning her at the time, supposed for a while that she was only sleeping, while it was the sleep of death." The writer adds—"She had wished for several days to be taken from this world of pain and sin, and is now, I trust, happy in heaven."

OUR CHINA MISSION.

Do our brethren really feel the importance of the missionary enterprise? About three years ago, we committed to the care of a kind Providence a little band—two beloved brethren, and their wives—pledging to them our prayers, and our unwavering support, while they should preach the gospel in China. Our prayers have indeed gone up to God in their behalf, and our contributions have been steadily forwarded for their support; yet in both, it may be, that we have sown too sparingly. In one respect, at any rate, we feel disappointed. We had hoped that, before this, we should have been able to send out others to their aid. Yes, and they hoped so too. They continue to indulge this hope; and their recent communications breathe more than an ordinary desire to welcome fellow-laborers to the field. Must we tell them that there is no prospect of meeting their desire? We are not willing to send them such news. We are not willing to say to them any thing so disheartening. We fondly cling to the impression, that God has some one or more in reserve for this mission, whom he will bring to light by exciting in them strong desires for the work, and fitting them for it, when we in earnest prayer ask him to do so. The great Author of missions gave no reason to expect that laborers would be raised up till the church should set about praying for them. "PRAY ye the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth more laborers into the harvest." Probably we have been deficient in this respect. We have prayed for them who have gone into the field, but we have not been so earnest in praying for more. We think, not only that it is important to pray for more laborers, in obedience to the Saviour's injunction, but that it is a great mercy that God withholds them till we do pray for them. Neglecting prayer, we might, it is true, compass sea and land, with gust zeal, to find men for this work, and perhaps we should succeed. But when we had obtained them, how would we know that they were God-given? Satan is sometimes permitted to interfere in this matter. True, he would rather have no missionaries at all; but if he can not prevent it, he will exert what influence he can to induce those to thrust themselves forward, who are wholly incompetent to the work. It becomes us to be on our guard. If we ask not counsel of the Lord, we may be as much cheated as Israel was with the Gibeonites. But if we pray, and pray earnestly—if we wrestle with God in holy desires for this object, as well as exert ourselves in other ways, then, when candidates present themselves, we may reasonably conclude that God, and not satan, has given them to us. Desirable as it is to send out a reinforcement of our China mission, it would be better that the matter be delayed a dozen years, than to send out such as would be a reproach to the cause. Let us then betake ourselves to prayer. We are almost confident that there is a failure here. We know, that in the prayers offered by ministers on the Sabbath, there is not that prominence given to the subject which ought to be. We know, that in our social prayer meetings, and monthly concerts, it is too apt to be overlooked. And we fear, that the closet exercises of our people, if they could be laid open, would disclose too little attention to this important subject. We rest in the persuasion, that if our churches do their duty in the way of cultivating a missionary spirit, there will be forthcoming the men for China, and for Hayti, and for any and every other field which the Providence of God may direct us to occupy.

We are here constrained to put in a word, by way of stimulating our brethren to more liberal contributions. The necessity of giving our missionaries in China the means of operating more extensively than they have hitherto done, will be apparent from the perusal of Bro. Carpenter's letter published on our first page, as well as from other communications heretofore given. Other denominations are securing the most advantageous sites, for their houses of worship, which money can command, and, withal, are scattering their tracts with an unsparing hand. They have schools, and printing-presses, and all the appliances which are needed to give their missions the greatest possible efficiency. As far as they promulgate God's truth, we rejoice in their movements, and thank God that the heathen can, by any means, gain a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. We can not resist the impression, however, that the errors which their theology embodies, do much to neutralize the power of the gospel. Sunday-keeping, infant baptism, and a multitude of other things, being the offspring of Popery, do but contribute to give strength to the "man of sin," already too strong in heathen lands. We care not so much for a direct conflict between our missionaries and those who uphold these traditions, but we do wish to see that system of religion, which we believe to be in accordance with the Bible, making rapid progress among the heathen. We do wish to see our denomination retrieving lost opportunities. We do wish our missionaries to be so abundantly furnished with facilities, that they shall not be hindered from doing whatever their better judgment shall dictate as necessary to be done. It will not be out of place to state here, what we have said before, that we believe our missionaries to be prudent and economical in their habits. For their personal wants they draw as sparingly upon their patrons, we think, as could be expected. Those of other orders live in a style far more expensive, and still are considered as having nothing but what is necessary to their comfort. Mrs. Carpenter fills a spare corner in one of her communications with some remarks upon this head, which will be read with interest. We copy for our readers, and hope that they will be stimulated to more zeal.

"As a sort of stewardess of other people's bounty, I suppose I ought to speak of matters that come under this head. In reporting items home, I often feel distressed, lest those who read them, and know nothing of the facts, except that we are "missionaries" and buy such things, should be grieved at our apparent extravagance. For instance, a carpet must sound strangely to one who does not know that we are obliged to occupy the upper stories of the house, and that the lower stories cannot be made so tight but that the cold north-east monsoons sweep continually under our feet, with a chilling bleakness which not even the colder winds of our northern winters could exceed. We might have the lower ceiling plastered, but the expense would be considerable, and could not be available to us in case of a removal, which the carpet would. "Globe lamps"—what extravagance, in the eyes of one who never knew the necessity of constant study to acquire a foreign tongue, and that nights, as well as days, we must ply our weary sight, where candles are either too expensive (foreign) or too unendurable (native) to admit of constant use, without much actual injury, or expense, the native candles emitting a most offensive smoke. "Dishes"—cannot missionaries eat their rice from a bowl with chop-sticks like the heathen among whom they live? Perhaps so, but sometimes a missionary is so worldly minded as to wish a friend to partake of his rice with him, in which case he finds one bowl hardly sufficient for two. "Butter and beef steak!"—you call this self-denial do you? It may be that men and means are multiplying so fast at home, that it is not so important that the missionaries should take these palatable precautions to preserve their strength, supplies being so abundant that they may the more readily be spared. "Boat hire and coolies' wages!" Is it not the missionary who says from his heart,

"Through cold winds and storms, o'er mountains I'll go, Press forward to glory, and leave all below?"

True, he may not get there quite so soon, for the invigorating effects of the open air do seem to brace up his failing strength, and make him look upon the grave as farther on. But perhaps he may not be the less useful on that account, as he is constantly coming in contact with the heathen in all these excursions, and adding to his own means of usefulness. "A new broadcloth coat, and a cambric dress!"—unparallelled pride! very sad indeed, were it not that in these ports open to British trade, many articles, from not being subject to duty, are cheaper than a much coarser article would be at home, to say nothing of the danger and expense of transporting them to us.

"These remarks are not made because I anticipate a failure of confidence at home, but because I have not forgotten how such matters used to strike me before I knew for myself the truths as I have mentioned them."

TWO REMARKABLE BOOKS.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

A few words, if you please, for the benefit of the readers of the Sabbath Recorder, as to a couple of recent publications that have interested me much.

The first is NOEL ON BAPTISM, which has been looked for by thousands with peculiar interest, and has just now appeared. The present volume is upon the subjects of baptism, and the author informs us that he hopes, in another volume, to treat of the mode. No work has ever appeared on this subject, that will compare with this; and none has had a wider circulation than will this, except perhaps Pengilly. Noel is an independent witness; he writes as taught only from the mouth of God. Says he, "I determined to form my judgment entirely by the study of the Scriptures, and of such authors as advocate the baptism of infants. To that determination I have adhered. And not having read a single Baptist book or tract, I publish the following work as an independant testimony to the exclusive right of believers to Christian baptism." The work is logical but clear, critical but simple; and though learned in the best sense, is yet admirably adapted to general and popular use. The influence of this production must be of the widest and most convincing character, and no one can afford to fail of its perusal. I will just add, that the edition published by Fletcher, (141 Nassau St., New York,) is the most desirable of the three that have appeared. It contains an introduction by Dr. Dowling, which adds materially to its value, especially in America, besides a striking portrait of the author, which many will prize highly.

The other is a less popular (because purely philosophical) but not a less valuable work, in its department—PAINE on the SOUL AND INSTINCT. It was originally published by the Medical Class of the New York University, before whom the learned and celebrated Professor delivered it. It has since, and of late, been enlarged by the author, and is now issued in a desirable form, by the publisher of the work already referred to. It is a most triumphant vindication of the common belief as to the origin and character of the Soul, against materialism, or the doctrine that the soul is of a like nature with the body, and that it derives its force, as says Liebig, (the master spirit of this school of physiologists,) "from the chemical action which the elements of food and the oxygen of the air mutually exercise on each other." This error is vastly more prevalent in some other countries than here, but even in our country is both taught and believed, and that more and more extensively, though often under various modifications. The reader of this work will be well armed against it; and I would commend it as particularly worthy of the attention of ministers. It will furnish them with facts and arguments upon many points, such are not met with in any other work, and will amply repay a careful perusal.

A PASTOR.

REVIVALS.

It gives us pleasure to find in our exchanges frequent notices of revivals of religion in different parts of the country. The following have come before us during the past few days.

At Upham, Ohio, there has been a powerful work in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and upward of one hundred hopeful converts have joined the church within a short time.

At Sloansville, N. Y., a revival is noticed, in which about seventy persons have professed conversion. The letter communicating this intelligence, says that "within eight miles around, during a few months past, some three hundred souls have given evidence of conversion."

At Cassville, N. Y., as we learn from the Baptist Register, a deep religious interest has existed for some months past, and fifty-three members have been added to the Baptist Church.

The Baptist Church at Jay, N. Y., has enjoyed a pleasant revival season, in the course of which between thirty and forty persons, it is hoped, have passed from death unto life.

In Georgetown, Pa., there has been a precious work. Thirty-six have been added to the church, and a number more are seriously impressed.

In Salem, N. J., likewise, a season of refreshing is enjoyed. A number have been baptized, and there is still a number of inquirers.

A revival in Newton, Del. Co., Pa., is noticed in the Christian Chronicle, during which twenty-five were baptized. The same paper also mentions an interesting work among the students of the University at Lewisburg, Pa.

DEATH OF A BAPTIST PREACHER.—Eld. John Peck, who for the last fifteen years has been identified with the Home Missionary Operations of the Baptist Denomination, died in New York City, on the 15th inst., aged 69 years. His remains were taken to Cazenovia, N. Y., for interment. Eld. Peck was born in what is now the town of Stanford, Dutchess county, N. Y., September 11, 1781. About the year 1796, when he was fifteen years of age, his parents removed to Norwich, Chenango county, N. Y. He became pious at an early age, and at about twenty-one was licensed to preach the Gospel. He was married at about twenty-three years of age, and soon after, in 1804, removed to Cazenovia, which was from that time his home. In 1806 he was ordained pastor of the Baptist church in that town, and continued in that relation until November, 1834, when he resigned his charge, and entered upon the agency for Home Missions. During the time of his residence at Cazenovia, he was a highly useful and respected minister; many revivals had been enjoyed by the church, and 640 persons had been baptized. A new church was organized in another part of the town by dismissions from this in 1820.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE TO WOMEN.—Wendell Phillips, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, and their friends, are circulating petitions in Massachussetts praying the Legislature

"That, since the women of the State are made to pay taxes, and are held amenable to its criminal laws, they may be allowed a voice in the imposition and use of the first, and in the enactment of the second; and hence that they may be permitted to vote and to be eligible to office."

To some readers, says the N. Y. Tribune, this may perhaps seem inconsistent with the fact that these gentlemen are principled against "human governments," and consequently regard voting as a sin. They say, however, "that they are not asking women to vote, but only asking that they shall have the right to refuse to vote." "It is no virtue in one that cannot vote to abstain from it." Having secured to woman the right of suffrage, the petitioners propose to do their best to indoctrinate them in the virtue of making no use of it.

AMERICAN BETHEL SOCIETY.—The Society have employed during the season a larger number of chaplains and missionaries among sailors and boatmen than at any previous period; one on the Illinois and Chicago Canal; one at Chicago; one at Milwaukie; fifteen on the lake ports, canals, and rivers of Ohio and its vicinity; one at Buffalo; one at Oswego; twelve on the Erie Canal and its tributaries; one on the Northern Canal; one at Troy; one at Albany; one in the city of New York, among canal boatmen; three on the Delaware and Hudson Canal; two on the Delaware and Raritan Canal, and one on the Morris Canal—making in all forty-two. Fifteen have been young men from our theological seminaries.

THE 1ST BROOKFIELD CHURCH.—We learn by a letter from Eld. Wm. B. Maxson, that this Church and Society have agreed upon a plan for the erection of a meeting-house to supply the place of the one recently burnt. It will occupy the old site at Leonardsville, and will be 36 by 48 feet, with a tower, and without a gallery. The building is to be completed in August next. Meanwhile the meetings are held alternately in the Free-Will Baptist House at Unadilla Forks, and the Christian Chapel in Plainfield.

SUNDAY IN CANADA.—Rev. Joel Fish says that in Canada East the notice of all Sheriff sales must be read at the church door on the Sunday, even among Protestants. There can be no lawful sale on any day, unless the notice thereof has been read upon the Sunday. But in the French country the matter is worse yet. All auction sales of real estate must be made at the door of the Parish Church, immediately after service. The following he cut from a Montreal paper, a little while ago :—

"Farm for Sale.—Will be sold by public auction, at the door of the Parish Church, in this city, on Sunday, the 22d of September, that farm, &c. Conditions made known at the time of sale."

Such advertisements are not unfrequent.

SUNDAY IN NEW ORLEANS.—Not long ago a meeting of the citizens of New Orleans was held in one of the churches of that city, the object of which was the adoption of measures to cause a better observance of the Sunday. Judge McCaleb, of the U. S. District Court, presided. Speeches were made, and the desecration of the Sunday by military parades, the theaters, &c., was condemned in unqualified terms. It is time a movement like this should take place in that city, if the people would have the Sunday observed at all.

THE CHRISTIAN REVIEW.—This able Quarterly of the Baptist Denomination, enters upon its fifteenth volume with the new year, 1850. It is to be edited by Rev. Sewall S. Cutting, assisted by Prof. Wm. Gammell, of Brown University, and with the advice of Rev. Drs. W. R. Williams and A. C. Kendrick. Published by Colly and Ballard, 122 Nassau Street, New York, at $2 per year. We should be glad to hear of some of our churches making their ministers new-year presents of the price of subscription.

FATHER MATHEW IN WASHINGTON.—The Irish "Apostle of Temperance" spent last week at Washington, where considerable attention was shown him. A resolution offerered in the Senate, to admit him to the privileges of a seat within the bar, gave rise to a warm discussion, in which some of the Southern Members denounced the reverend father as hostile to the "peculiar institution." However, the resolution passed by a vote of 33 to 18.

BAPTIST COLLEGE IN MISSOURI.—The Provisional Committee on the College reported to the General Association of United Baptists in Missouri, at their annual meeting in August that about $60,000 had been secured for the erection and endowment of a college, and a resolution was adopted to prosecute the work of obtaining subccriptions till $100,000 were secured.

BREACH OF PROMISE—SUNDAY CONTRACTS.—A suit for damages for the breach of a marriage contract, was lately tried in Philadelphia, where the defense set up was that the contract was made on Sunday, and therefore void. On this point the Judge's charge to the jury is thus reported :—

"That the law in regard to Sunday contracts did not extend to contracts of marriage, which by many religious sects were considered as solemn sacraments, to be only sanctioned by impressive ceremonies. The contracts made on Sunday which are void are those relating to worldly business. To hold that marriages solemnized on that day were void, would be to disturb thousands of marriages which have been contracted, and to render illegitimate a very lerge number of citizens. The jury found a verdict of $3,000."

CELEBRATION AT PLYMOUTH.—The first day of January next will be the fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of the Rev. Dr. Kendall as Pastor of the first Church in Plymouth, which took place Janu 1st, 1800. A ministry extended over so ng a period in the same parish is very unusual. Few connections between pastor and people have been characterized by more uninterrupted harmony and good feeling, and though the venerable gentleman has reached the age of four-score years, his ministry may yet be far from its termination. The Parish are making arrangements for an appropriate celebration of the Semi-Centennial Anniversary, and Dr. Kendell has accepted an invitation to preach on that day. There will also be a collation in the evening at the Samoset House.

DEPARTURE OF MISSIONARIES.—Four Missionaries appointed by the Church (Episcopal) Missionary Society, sailed from Providence on Monday, of last week, in the brig Smithfield. They are destined to Africa, and design to locate at Cape Palmas and vicinity. Their names were as follows: Rev. E. W. Henning and lady, Providence; Miss Martha Williford of Geo.; Rev. E. W. Stokes, (colored,) of Providence. Mr. Henning has spent several years in the African Mission, and returns now with a fresh reinforcement to his field of labor. Mr. Stokes, originally from England, and formerly Rector of Christ Church in Providence, now goes forth to spend the remainder of his life on the sickly coast of benighted Africa. In company with the above, three Missionaries sent out under the patronage of the Southern Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, are destined to the interior of Africa. Their names were, Rev. Thomas J. Bowen of Geo., Rev. Harvey Goodale of Mass., and Robt. T. Hill (colored) of Va. These Missionaries are appointed to a field of labor which as yet has been unexplored by the agents of any Missionary Society.

ORGANIZATION OF CONGRESS.

After three weeks of balloting and debating, the House of Representatives has succeeded in electing a Speaker. It was accomplished about six o'clock on Sabbath evening last, by adopting the plurality principle. On the sixty-fourth ballot, Mr. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, the whig candidate, received 100 votes, while Mr. Cobb of Georgia, the democratic candidate, received 102 votes, and was accordingly declared Speaker, after which the House adjourned over to Monday.

On Monday, the President's Message was delivered, and after the customary votes Congress adjourned till after the Holidays.

[As the people will feel a peculiar interest in this first regular Message of the President, we set aside other matter to give the document entire this week.]

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives :

Sixty years have elapsed since the establishment of this Government, and the Congress of the United States again assembles, to legislate for an empire of freemen. The predictions of evil prophets, who formerly pretended to foretell the downfall of our institutions, are now remembered only to be derided, and the United States of America, at this moment, present to the world the most stable and permanent Government on earth.

Such is the result of the labors of those who have gone before us. Upon Congress will eminently depend the future maintenance of our system of free government, and the transmission of it, unimpaired, to posterity.

We are at peace with all the world, and seek to maintain our cherished relations of amity with the rest of mankind. During the past year, we have been blessed, by a kind Providence, with an abundance of the fruits of the earth; and, although the destroying angel, for a time, visited extensive portions of our territory with the ravages of a dreadful pestilence, yet, the Almighty has at length deigned to stay his hand, and to restore the inestimable blessing of general health to a people who have acknowledged his power, deprecated his wrath, and implored his merciful protection.

While enjoying the benefits of amicable intercouse with foreign nations, we have not been insensible to the distractions and wars which have prevailed in other quarters of the world. It is a proper theme of thanksgiving to Him who rules the destinies of nations, that we have been able to maintain, amid all these contests, an independent and neutral position toward all belligerent powers.

Our relations with Great Britain are of the most friendly character. In consequence of the recent alteration of the British navigation acts, British vessels, from British and other foreign ports, will, (under our existing laws,) after the first day of January next, be admitted to entry in our ports, with cargoes of the growth, manufacture, or production of any part of the world, on the same terms, as to duties, imposts, and charges, as vessels of the United States with their cargoes; and our vessels will be admitted to the same advantages in British ports, entering therein on the same terms as British vessels. Should no order in council disturb this legislative arrangement, the late act of the British Parliament, by which Great Britain is brought within the terms proposed by the act of of Congress of the 1st of March, 1847, it is hoped, will be productive of benefit to both countries.

A slight interruption of diplomatic intercourse, which occurred between this Government and France, I am happy to say, has been terminated, and our Minister there has been received. It is, therefore, unnecessary to refer, now, to the circumstances which led to that interruption. I need not express to you the sincere satisfaction with which we shall welcome the arrival of another Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from a sister republic, to which we have so long been, and still remain, bound by the strongest ties of amity.

Shortly after I had entered upon the discharge of the Executive duties, I was apprised that a war-steamer, belonging to the German Empire, was being fitted out in the harbor of New York, with the aid of some of our naval officers, rendered under the permission of the late Secretary of the Navy. This permission was granted during an armistice between that Empire and the Kingdom of Denmark, which had been engaged in the Schleswig Holstein war. Apprehensive that this act of intervention, on our part, might be viewed as a violation of our neutral obligations, incurred by the Treaty with Denmark, and of the provisions of the act of Congress of April 20, 1818, I directed that no further aid should be rendered by any agent or officer of the Navy; and I instructed the Secretary of State to apprise the Minister of the German Empire accredited to this Government, of my determination to execute the law of the United States, and to maintain the faith of treaties with all nations. The correspondence which ensued between the Department of State and the Minister of the German Empire, is herewith laid before you. The execution of the law and the observance of the treaty were deemed by me to be due to the honor of the country, as well as to the sacred obligations of the Constitution. I shall not fail to pursue the same course, should a similar case arise with any other nation. Having avowed the opinion, on taking the oath of office, that, in disputes with conflicting foreign Governments, it is our interest, not less than our duty, to remain strictly neutral, I shall not abandon it. You will perceive, from the correspondence submitted to you, in connection with this subject, that the course adopted in this case has been properly regarded by the belligerent powers interested in the matter.

Although a Minister of the United States to the German Empire was appointed by my predecessor, in August, 1848, and has, for a long time, been in attendance, at Frankfort-on-the-Maine; and although a Minister, appointed to represent that Empire, was received and accredited here, yet no such Government as that of the German Empire has been definitely constituted. M. Donelson, our Representative at Frankfort, remained there several months, in the expectation that a union of the German States, under one Constitution or form of Government, might, at length, be organized. It is believed, by those well acquainted with the existing relations between Prussia and the States of Germany, that no such union can be, permanently, established without her coöperation. In the event of the formation of such a union, and the organization of a central power in Germany, of which she should form a part, it would become necessary to withdraw our Minister at Berlin; but while Prussia exists as an independent Kingdom, and diplomatic relations are maintained with her, there can be no necessity for the continuance of the mission to Frankfort. I have, therefore, recalled Mr. Donelson, and directed the archives of the legation, at Frankfort, to be transferred to the American legation at Berlin.

Having been apprised that a considerable number of adventurers were engaged in fitting out a military expedition, within the United States, against a foreign country; and believing, from the best information I could obtain, that it was destined to invade the Island of Cuba, I deemed it due to the friendly relations existing between the United States and Spain; to the treaty between the two nations; to the laws of the United States, and, above all, to the American honor, to exert the lawful authority of this Government in suppressing the expedition and preventing the invasion. To this end I issued a proclamation, enjoining it upon the officers of the United States, civil and military, to use all lawful means within their power. A copy of that proclamation, is herewith submitted. The expedition has been suppressed. So long as the act of Congress of the 20th of April, 1818, which owes its existence to the law of nations, and to the policy of Washington himself, shall remain on our statute-book, I hold it to be the duty of the Executive faithfully to obey its injunctions.

While this expedition was in progress, I was informed that a foreigner who claimed our protection had been clandestinely, and, as was supposed, forcibly carried off in a vessel from New Orleans to the Island of Cuba. I immediately caused such steps to be taken as I thought necessary, in case the information I had received should prove correct, to vindicate the honor of the country, and the right of every person seeking an asylum on our soil to the protection of our laws. The person alledged to have been abducted was promptly restored, and the circumstances of the case are now about to undergo investigation before a judicial tribunal. I would respectfully suggest that, although the crime charged to have been committed in this case is held odious, as being in conflict with our opinions on the subject of national sovereignty and personal freedom, there is no prohibition of it or punishment for it provided in any act of Congress. The expediency of supplying this defect in our criminal code is therefore recommended to your consideration.

I have scrupulously avoided any interference in the wars and contentions which have recently distracted Europe.

During the late conflict between Austria and Hungary, there seemed to be a prospect that the latter might become an independent nation. However faint that prospect at the time appeared, I thought it my duty, in accordance with the general sentiment of the American people, who deeply sympathized with the Magyar patriots, to stand prepared, upon the contingency of the establishment by her of a permanent Government, to be the first to welcome independent Hungary into family of nations. For this purpose, I invested an agent, then in Europe, with power to declare our willingness promptly to recognize her independence, in the event of her ability to sustain it. The powerful intervention of Russia, in the contest, extinguished the hopes of the struggling Magyars. The United States did not, at any time, interfere in the contest; but the feelings of the nation were strongly enlisted in the cause, and by the sufferings of a brave people, who had made a gallant though unsuccessful effort to be free.

Our claims upon Portugal have been, during the past year, prosecuted with renewed vigor, and it has been my object to employ every effort of honorable diplomacy to procure their adjustment. Our late Charge d' Affaires at Lisbon, Hon. George W. Hopkins, made able and energetic, but unsuccessful, efforts to settle these upleasant matters of controversy, and to obtain indemnity for the wrongs which were the subjects of complaint. Our present Charge d' Affaires at that Court will, also, bring to the prosecution of these claims ability and zeal. The revolutionary and distracted condition of Portugal, in past times, has been represented as one of the leading causes of her delay in indemnifying our suffering citizens. But I must now say it is matter of profound regret that these claims have not yet been settled. The omission of Portugal to do justice to the American claimants has now assumed a character so grave and serious, that I shall shortly make it the subject of a special message to Congress, with a view to such ultimate action as its wisdom and patriotism may suggest.

With Russia, Austria, Prussia, Sweden, Denmark, Belgium, the Netherlands, and the Italian States, we still maintain our accustomed amicable relations.

During the recent revolutions in the Papal States, our Charge d' Affaires at Rome has been unable to present his letter of credence, which, indeed, he was directed by my predecessor to withhold until he should receive further orders. Such was the unsettled condition of things in those States, that it was not deemed expedient to give him any instructions on the subject of presenting his credential letter different from those with which he had been furnished by the late Administration, until the 25th of June last; when, in consequence of the want of accurate information of the exact state of things, at that distance from us, he was instructed to exercise his own discretion in presenting himself to the then existing Government, if, in his judgement sufficiently stable; or if not, to await further events. Since that period Rome has undergone another revolution, and he abides the establishment of a Government sufficiently permanent to justify him in opening diplomatic intercourse with it.

With the Republic of Mexico it is our true policy to cultivate the most friendly relations. Since the ratification of the Treaty of Gaudalupe Hidalgo, nothing has occurred of a serious character to disturb them. A faithful observance of the treaty, and a sincere respect for her rights, cannot fail to secure the lasting confidence and friendship of that Republic. The Message of my predecessor to the House of Representatives, of the 8th of February last, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of that body, a copy of a paper called a Protocol, signed at Queretaro on the 30th of May, 1848, by the Commissioners of the United States and the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Mexican Government, having been a subject of correspondence between the Department of State and the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of that Republic accredited to this Government, a transcript of that correspondence is herewith submitted.

The Commissioner on the part of the United States for marking the boundary between the two republics, though delayed in reaching San Diego by unforseen obstacles, arrived at that place within a short period after the time required by the treaty, and was there joined by the Commissioner on the part of Mexico. They entered upon their duties; and, at the date of the latest intelligence from that quarter, some progress had been made in the survey. The expenses incident to the organization of the commission, and to its conveyance to the point where its operations were to begin, have so much reduced the fund appropriated by Congress, that a further sum, to cover the charges which must be incurred during the present fiscal year, will be necessary. The great length of frontier along which the boundary extends, the nature of the adjacent territory, and the difficulty of obtaining supplies, except at or near the extremes of the line, render it also indispensable that a liberal provision should be made to meet the necessary charges during the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, 1851. I accordingly recommend this subject to your attention.

In the adjustment of the claims of American citizens on Mexico, provided for by the late treaty, the employment of counsel, on the part of the Government, may become important for the purpose of assisting the Commissioners in protecting the interests of the United States. I recommend this object to the early and favorable consideration of Congress.

Complaints have been made in regard to the inefficiency of the means provided by the Government of New Grenada for transporting the United States Mail accross the Isthmus of Panama, pursuant to our Postal Convention with that Republic, of the 6th of March, 1844. Our Charge d' Affaires at Bogota has been directed to make such representations to the Government of New Grenada as will, it is hoped, lead to a prompt removal of this cause of complaint.

The sanguinary civil war with which the Republic of Venezuela has for some past been ravaged, has been brought to a close. In its progress the rights of some of our citizens resident or trading there have been violated. The restoration of order will afford the Venezuelan Government an opportunity to examine and redress these grievances, and others of longer standing, which our representatives at Carracus have hitherto ineffectually urged upon the attention of that Government.

The extension of the coast of the United States on the Pacific, and the unexampled rapidity with which the inhabitants of California, especially, are increasing in numbers, have imparted new consequence to our relations with the othor countries whose territories border upon that ocean. It is probable that the intercourse between those countries and our possessions in that quarter, particularly with the Republic of Chili, will become extensive and mutually advantageous in proportion as California and Oregon shall increase in population and wealth. It is desirable, therefore, that this Government should do everything in its power to foster and to strengthen its relations with those States, and that the spirit of amity between us should be mutual and cordial.

I recommend the observance of the same course toward all other American States. The United States stand as the great American power to which, as their natural ally and friend, they will always be disposed first to look for mediation and assistance, in the event of any collision between them and any European nation. As such we may often kindly mediate in their behalf, without entangling ourselves in foreign wars or unnecessary controversies. Whenever the faith of our treaties with any of them shall require our interference, we must necessarily interpose.

A Convention has been negotiated with Brazil, providing for the satisfaction of American claims on that Government, and it will be submitted to the Senate. Since the last Session of Congress, we have received an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, from that Empire, and our relations with it are founded upon the most amicable understanding.

Your attention is earnestly invited to an amendment of our existing laws relating to the African Slave trade, with a view to the effectual suppression of that barbarous traffic. It is not to be denied that this trade is still, in part, carried on by means of vessels built in the United States, and owned or navigated by some of our citizens. The correspondence between the Department of State and the Minister and Consul of the United States at Rio de Janerio, which has from time to time been laid before Congress, represents that it is a customary device to evade the penalties of our laws by means of sea-letters. Vessels sold in Brazil, when provided with such papers by the Consul, instead of returning to the United States for a new register, proceed, at once, to the coast of Africa, for the purpose of obtaining cargoes of slaves. Much additional information, of the same character, has recently been transmitted to the Department of State. It has not been considered the policy of our laws to subject an American citizen who, in a foreign country purchases a vessel built in the United States, to the inconvenience of sending her home for a new register, before permitting her to proceed on a voyage. Any alteration of the laws, which might have a tendency to impede the free transfer of property in vessels between our citizens, or the free navigation of those vessels between different parts of the world, when employed in lawful commerce, should be well and cautiously considered; but I trust your wisdom will devise a method by which our general policy, in this respect, may be preserved, and at the same time the abuse of our flag, by means of sea-letters, in the manner indicated, may be prevenied.

Having ascertained that there is no prospect of the reunion of the five States of Central America, which formerly composed the Republic of that name, we have separately negociated with some of them Treaties of Amity and Commerce, which will be laid before the Senate.

A contract having been concluded with the State of Nicaragua, by a Company composed of American citizens for the purpose of constructing a ship canal through the territory of that State, to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, I have directed the negotiation of a Treaty with Nicaragua, pledging both Governments to protect those who shall engage in perfect the work. All other nations are invited by the State of Nicaragua to enter into the same Treaty stipulations with her; and the benefit to be derived by each from such an arrangement will be the protection of this great interoceanic communication against any power which might seek to obstruct it, or to monopolize its advantages. All States entering into such a Treaty will enjoy the right of passage through the canal on payment of the same tolls.

The work, if constructed under these guarantees, will become a bond of peace, instead of a subject of contention and strife, between the nations of the earth. Should the great maritime States of Europe consent to this arrangement, (and we have no reason to suppose that a proposition so fair and honorable will be opposed by any,) the energies of their people and ours will cooperate in promoting the success of the enterprise. I do not recommend any appropriation from the National Treasury for this purpose, nor do I believe that such an appropriation is necessary. Private enterprise, if properly protected, will complete the work, should it prove to be feasible. The parties who have procured the charter from Nicaragüe, for its construction, desire no assistance from this Government beyond its protection; and they profess that, having examined the proposed line of communication, they will be ready to commence the undertaking whenever that protection shall be extended to them. Should there appear to be reason, on examining the whole evidence, to entertain a serious doubt of the practicability of constructing such a canal, that doubt could be speedily solved by an actual exploration of the route.

Should shuch a work be constructed, under the common protection of all nations, for equal benefits to all, it would be neither just nor expedient that any great maritime State shall command the communication. The territory through which the canal may be opened ought to be freed from the claims of any foreign power. No such power should occupy a position that would enable it hereafter to exercise so controlling an influence over the commerce of the world, or to obstruct a highway which ought to be dedicated to the common uses of mankind.

The route across the Isthmus, at Tehuantepec and Panama, are also worthy of our serious consideration. They did not fail to engage the attention of my predecessor. The negotiator of the treaty of Gaudalupe Hidalgo was instructed to offer a very large sum of money for the right of transit across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. The Mexican government did not accede to the proposition for the purchase of the right of way, probably because it had already contracted with private individuals for the construction of a passage from the Guasocualco river to Tehuantepec. I shall not renew any proposition to purchase, for money, a right which ought to be equally secured to all nations, on payment of reasonable toil to the owners of the improvement, who would, doubtless, be well contented with that compensation and the guarantee, of the maritime States of the world, in separate treaties negotiated with Mexico, binding her and them to protect those who should construct the work. Such guarantees would do more to secure the completion of the communication through the territory of Mexico than any other reasonable consideration that could be offered; and as Mexico herself would be the greatest gainer by the opening of this communication between the Gulf and the Pacific Ocean, it is presumed that she would not hesitate to yield her aid, in the manner proposed, to accomplish an improvement so important to her own best interests.

We have reason to hope that the proposed Railroad across the Isthmus at Panama will be successfully contracted, under the protection of the late treaty with New Grenada, ratified and exchanged by my predecessor on the 10th day of June, 1848, which guarantees the perfect neutrality of the Isthmus, and the rights of sovereignty and property of New Grenada over that territory, "with a view that the free transit from ocean to ocean may not be interrupted or embarrassed" during the existence of the treaty. It is our policy to encourage every practicable route across the Isthmus, which connects North and South America, either by Railroad or Canal, which the energy and enterprise of our citizens may induce them to complete; and I consider it obligatory upon me to adopt that policy, especially in consequence of the absolute necessity of facilitating intercourse with our possessions on the Pacific.

The position of the Sandwich Islands, with reference to the territory of the United States on the Pacific; the success of our persevering and benevolent citizens who have repaired to that remote quarter in christianizing the natives and inducing them to adopt a system of government and laws suited to their capacity and wants; and the use made by our numerous whale-ships of the harbors of the islands as places of resort for obtaining refreshments and repairs, all combine to render their destiny peculiarly interesting to us. It is our duty to encourage the authorities of those islands in their efforts to improve and elevate the moral and political condition of the inhabitants; and we should make reasonable allowances for the difficulties inseparable from this task. We desire that the islands may maintain their independence, and that other nations should concur with us in this sentiment. We could in no event be indifferent to their passing under the dominion of any other power. The principal commercial States have in this a common interest, and it is to be hoped that no one of them will attempt to interpose obstacles to the entire independence of the islands.

The receipts into the Treasury for the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June last, were, in cash, forty-eight millions, eight hundred and thirty thousand, ninety-seven dollars and fifty cents, ($48,830,097 50,) and in Treasury notes funded, ten millions, eight hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, ($10,833,000,) making an aggregate of fifty-nine millions, six hundred and sixty-three thousand, ninety-seven dollars and fifty cents, ($50,563,097 50;) and the expenditures for the same time were, in cash, forty-six millions, seven hundred and ninety-eight thousand, six hundred and seventy-seven dollars and eighty-two cents, ($46,798, 677 82,) and in Treasury notes funded, ten millions, eight hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, ($10,833,000,) making an aggregate of fifty-seven millions, six hundred and thirty-one thousand, six hundred and seventy-seven dollars and eighty-two cents, ($57,631,667-82.)

The accounts and estimates which will be submitted to Congress in the Report of the Secretary, show that there will probably be a deficit, occasioned by the expenses of the Mexican War and Treaty, on the 1st day of July next, of five millions, eight hundred and twenty-eight thousand one hundred and twenty-one dollars and sixty-six cents, ($5,-828,121 66,) and on the 1st day of July, 1851, of ten millions, five hundred and forty-seven thousand and ninety-two dollars and seventy-three cents, ($10,547,092 73,) making in the whole a probable deficit, to be provided for, of sixteen millions, three hundred and seventy-five thousand two hundred and fourteen dollars and thirty-nine cent, ($16,375,214 39.) The extraordinary expenses of the War with Mexico, and the purchase of California and New Mexico, exceed in amount this deficit, together with the loans heretofore made for those objects. I therefore recommend that authority be given to borrow whatever sum may be necessary to cover that deficit. I recommend the observance of strict economy in the appropriation and expenditure of public money.

I recommend a revision of the existing tariff, and its adjustment on a basis which may augment the revenue. I do not doubt the right or duty of Congress to encourage domestic industry, which the great source of national as well as individual wealth and prosperity. I look to the wisdom and patriotism of Congress for the adoption of a system which may place home labor, at last, on a sure and permanent footing, and, by due encouraegment of manufactures, give a new and increased stimulous to agriculture, and promote the development of our vast resources and the extension of our commerce. Believing that to the attainment of these ends (as well as the necessary augmentation of the revenue and the prevention of frauds) a system of specific duties is best adapted, I strongly recommend to Congress the adoption of that system, fixing the duties at rates high enough to afford substantial and sufficient encouragement to our own industry, and at the same time so adjusted as to insure stability.

The question of the continuance of the Sub-Treasury system is respectfully submitted to the wisdom of Congress. If continued, important modifications of it appear to be indispensable.

For further details and views on the above and other matters connected with commerce, the finances and revenue, I refer to the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

No direct aid has been given by the General Government to the improvement of agriculture, except by the expenditure of small sums for collecting and publishing agricultural statistics, and for some chemical analyses, which have been, thus far, paid out of the Patent Fund. This aid is, in my opinion, wholly inadequate. To give to this leading branch of American industry the encouragement which it merits, I respectfully recommend the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau, to be connected with the Department of the Interior. To elevate the social condition of the agriculturalist, to increace his prosperity, and to extend his means of usefulness to his country by multiplying his sources of information, should be the study of every statesman, and a primary object with every legislator.
